2. The setting of 1686 trees, besides several hedges. These, from mere saplings have become magnificent specimens to afford a grateful shade and be the joy and pride of coming generations.

3. Well ordered streets, sidewalks, gutters, and crossings, rendering locomotion convenient and agreeable at all seasons.

4. A general tidying up of all private dwellings and premises throughout the community, rendering ours, externally, the finest village in Western Massachusetts—the subject of admiration by all visitors and sojourners.

5. The growing education of our people in the beautiful in nature, aided by art, tending to diminish rudeness, and to the promotion of morality.

6. An increased value of real estate of from 20 to 100 per cent. Trees planted by the Association in its infancy in front of some humble premises, have, on the acknowledgement of a later purchaser, added $500 or $1000 to his offer therefor. Seldom is a larger income returned from so small an outlay.

7. An example which has been copied by scores of communities that have obtained our constitution as the foundation of similar organizations in distant localities. Such applications are of frequent occurrence.—E. W. B. Canning.

What is the longest and shortest thing in the world, the swiftest and the slowest, without which nothing can be done, which devours all that is small, and gives life to all that is great?—Time.

New England Spring Song.

The springtide breaks,
And dells and lakes
Their icy mantle doff.
We, too, awake,
And gladly take
Our chest protector off.

The violets blue,
With eyes of dew,
Look to the smiling sky.
All earth is bright,
And with delight,
We lay our flannels by.

The flow'rets play
In dells so gay,
Where light peeps out and in.
We, too, break out,
And look about
For some spring medicine.

But soon, alas!
It comes to pass
That skies begin to lower.
And we, in bed,
With cold in head,
Try mustard's plastic power.

ADOBE.

"Doby" is a word seldom heard in the Eastern and Middle States, and when heard is seldom understood. In Texas, Arizona, and many other portions of the Pacific slope the term is used frequently, and is well understood by every one who has anything to do with building. "Doby" is the vernacular for "adobe," or mud bricks, which, in some portions of the extreme Southwest, are frequently used for building purposes. In Texas, New Mexico, and Arizona the frontier military posts are almost entirely built of "doby" bricks. The buildings of this material are exceedingly warm in winter, and cool in summer, caused no doubt by the great thickness of the walls, which are made from two to three and a half feet thick. "Dobies," or "adobes," are made and used as follows:

The earth is dug up at any point where it will make mud, and is watered and well mixed until it assumes the consistency of baker's dough. Straw, hay, rushes, or grass is then chopped fine and mixed thoroughly in it. It is then worked in ordinary bricks, and laid on the ground to dry; two or three days' sun dries them enough to permit of their being turned on their edges; in a few days more they are turned again. It takes from eight to ten days in the summer, and from twenty to twenty-five in the winter, to dry them thoroughly. The average size of a "doby" is four inches thick, ten inches wide and twenty inches long. Four men used to the business will make from five to six hundred a day, and one man with good help will lay in the wall from eight hundred to one thousand per day. Thin mud is used instead of mortar, and when the wall is completed it is solid, having no joints like brick work. Sometimes—not always—the walls are plastered inside and out, and when properly done it adds much to the appearance of the building. The town of Tucson, Arizona, contains a great many "doby" buildings, some of which have been erected for over forty years, and are yet in good condition. Usually these buildings are but one story high, but there are a number of dwellings in the town referred to, that are two stories high, and one built in the latest style of architecture. In Texas there are one or two buildings constructed entirely of this material that have been in existence for more than a hundred years, and they seem to be good yet.—Builder and Woodworker.

As illustrating the power of the press, the Oil City Derrick says: "A little Oil City boy, whose father gave him a printing press the other day, has already discovered the dangers and pitfalls which surround the path of the printers. He set up and printed a little gilt-edged card, with the warning phrase, 'Paint, look out.' By some means this card became fastened to his sister's hat, and hung just above her left ear, where he who ran could read. And when she went down street there was a grin extending clear from Pearl avenue to the Exchange. And that night the boy traded off his printing press for a yellow dog and a pop-gun, with a chew of gum thrown in."

"Now, do tell me all about your business," said a Framingham normal school girl to a Boston & Albany railroad director in the cars the other morning; "I want to know all about the railroads." "Well, what shall I tell you?" asked the old gentleman, with a benignant smile. "Oh, tell me anything. Tell me about your recticular influxes." The old gentleman fell back in a faint. How, pray, was he to know that she referred to "net earnings?" He had never had the advantages of a seminary education, you know.

"Drunk again, eh?" said the magistrate, contracting his brows and looking severley at the prisoner. "Yis, yer honor," candidly returned Pat. "I was after splittin' wood at yer honor's house, and the leddy asked me wud I take suthin'. 'I will,' sez I, an' I tuk two glasses, but if I had known yer honor kept such bad liquor, 'pon me sowl, I wuldn't have tuk but wan."

"Edward, what do I hear?—that you have disobeyed your grandmother, who told you just now not to jump down these steps?" "Grandma didn't tell us not to, papa; she only came to the door and said, 'I wouldn't jump down those steps, boys,' and I shouldn't think she would—an old lady like her."

WINTER IN THE NORTHWEST.

A story told by Joseph Sterrette of Big Lake, Dakota, who has just managed to break through the terrible snow blockade in that section of the country, gives only a fair statement of the troubles experienced by the settlers of the Northwest during the severe winter. Mr. Sterrette pre-empted 160 acres of farm land in Big Lake two years ago, and at once moved on it with his family and settled down to work. At the end of one year he was in shape for farming and had a comfortable cabin. Last year he harvested sixty acres of wheat, twenty-five bushels to the acre, and realized $1200. He laid in a quantity of fuel and prepared for Winter, but it proved more severe than he or his neighbors had calculated. In fact, Sterrette's better preparation for the rigors of the season turned out to be the only means which prevented himself, family and several neighbors from starving and freezing to death. In February he found it necessary to rescue the entire families of two neighboring farmers, not so well housed, from perishing by cold, by taking them into his own house. The cold was so steady and so bitter that before the season was half over the fuel which was gathered to last until Spring was all consumed. Then he and the men staying with him went out and took down the fences and outbuildings and burned them. The heavy snowfall, which at this time blockaded the railroads, was piled in such drifts about the house where Sterrette and his companions were domiciled as to absolutely cut off all communication with the outside world. The mercury fell lower than ever; the winds grew fiercer, and the surrounding snow caked and solidified. At this time the men dug their way, or rather mined it, through the blockade to the railroad near by, and dug out ties which they chopped up, took home and burned to cook their scanty food, and save their wives and children from freezing. When the ties and telegraph poles that could be reached were consumed, it was decided to dig through to the cabins of those sheltered in Sterrette's house, and break them up for fuel. This was done. The bitter cold still continuing, Sterrette's furniture was next sacrificed, even to the bedsteads, trunks and children's toys.

While the cold-imprisoned pioneers were upon this last supply of fuel a consultation was held, and it was decided to make a desperate attempt to drive through the deadly blasts on the crust for relief. John Becker agreed to go. A sleigh was prepared, and with five horses hitched to it Becker started. It was a terrible undertaking, and when the brave man started there were tears frozen upon his cheeks. Becker persisted in taking a fine shepherd dog. He gave as his reason: "I don't know what may happen; I would rather bury Carlo in my belly than have him freeze to death." Sterrette and his companions became alarmed when at the end of two days Becker did not return, and they started out for him. They had not gone far when they came across a hole in a drift where Becker had broken through. The man was found curled up in the sleigh frozen dead. His faithful dog was lying huddled up against his breast dead. The five horses were standing lifeless on their feet, all frozen stiff. The men carried Becker's body back, made a coffin of the sleigh, nailed the corpse up in it, and then reverently placed it in the corn crib until the weather should permit of its burial. Soon after this, and just as the party was on the point of despair, the weather moderated sufficiently to break the snow blockade, and Sterrette and his friends found relief. A neighboring family during this time had no other food than soup made from an ox pelt which happened to be in the house when the blockade began. Notwithstanding all this, Mr. Sterrette says the people like the country and say they will stay and in the future be prepared for severe winters. The land is good, the soil is deep black, most of the settlers foreigners, and the ownership of land is to them so novel and so precious that they will not give it up.—Dubuque, Ia., Dispatch, March 25th.

Gilhooly hired a pony the other day to take a little exercise on. He got all the exercise he wanted, and as he limped to the edge of the sidewalk to rest himself after taking so much exercise, a kind friend asked him, "What did you come down so quick for?" "What did I come down so quick for? Do you see anything up in the air for me to hold on to?"

THE negroes at the South are again exodusting.

THE Connecticut Legislature adjourned on Thursday. Our Massachusetts Solons show no signs of going home yet.

JUDGE SOULE of the Supreme Court sent his resignation to Gov. Long on Monday, and Gen. Devens has been appointed to the vacancy.

REPRESENTATIVE METCALF'S bill to regulate railroad fares has been killed in the House, and the whole subject is referred to the railroad commissioners, who are to report some feasible plan if they find such legislation advisable.

JOHN BROWN'S widow is in destitute circumstances, and has recently been at Washington seeking assistance at the White House. The widow of the man whose "soul's marching on" ought not to be left to depend upon charity for the necessities, nor even the comforts of life, in her old age.

STEPHEN N. STOCKWELL, late editor of the Boston Journal, died in Roxbury last week Friday, at the age of 57, prematurely broken down by overwork in his profession. Mr. Stockwell was a good business manager, an excellent news-gatherer, and a man of genial qualities and genuine worth.

TENNESSEE avoids repudiation by recognizing its full debt, with the unpaid interest at 6 per cent, and will issue new bonds for the whole amount, with interest at 3 per cent. This kind of readjustment does very well for a Southern State, but would be considered emphatically dishonest at the North.

THE secretary of the treasury has called in all the 6 per cent bonds, and will pay the whole amount, $195,000,000, or the holders may retain their bonds at 3½ per cent after July 1st, during the pleasure of the government. If they conclude to adopt the latter course, the bonds must be sent to the treasury department before May 10, when they will be registered, stamped and returned, with the interest to July 1.

SECRETARY KIRKWOOD, of the interior department, don't seem to take much stock in civil service reform. He has abrogated the rules established by his predecessor in relation to appointments and promotions, and in making choice of 100 new clerks has looked to the recommendations of congressmen rather than the fitness of the applicants. This is progress in the wrong direction.

JARVIS N. PHELPS, of Shutesbury, who murdered his mistress, Sarah A. Grover, last August, and then made an inffectual attempt to kill himself, pleaded guilty of murder in the second degree at Greenfield on Tuesday, and was sentenced to State prison for life. Such a deliberate, cold blooded murderer as Phelps showed himself to be, deserves hanging if anybody ever did, and he ought not to be let off so easily.

MISS HATTIE DEUELL, who began fasting in Iowa City on Washington's birthday, from a notion that it was wrong for her to take food, died on Monday, having been without nourishment for 47 days, during which time no attempt was made to force food down her throat. It looks as though her family had deliberately assisted her in an attempt to commit suicide, and would have an unpleasant responsibility resting upon them.

FURTHER advices from the island of Scio state that earthquake shocks of considerable violence still continue. It is estimated that barely twenty houses remain habitable in the whole island. Forty-five villages have been totally destroyed, and the population in many localities has absolutely disappeared. The estimates of the number of people killed take a wide range, some putting it as high as 8000, while some 40,000 people are reported to be entirely destitute and without food.

HOLYOKE manufacturers will not be very well pleased with the loss of their independent railroad line to New Haven. The city invested several years ago in a railroad to Westfield, to connect with the New Haven and Northampton road, and has reaped a substantial return from the investment in the way of reduced freights on coal, etc. But now that the New York and New Haven has secured a controlling interest in the stock of the Northampton road, the old monopoly will be likely to make itself felt again before long by an advance of rates which will make the manufacturers wince.

PRESIDENT BLISS of the Boston & Albany Railroad seems to have been a little too "previous" in giving publicity to his plans for a new line to New York. The managers of the New York & New Haven road affected indifference to the plan, but while others slept they worked, and it now transpires that they have secured a controlling interest in the New Haven & Northampton road, an important part of the the proposed new line, thus effectually blocking Mr. Bliss's project, and extinguishing all prospect of any competition to the old line for some time to come.

Some 227,000 acres of thickly settled bottom land on the Dakota side of the Missouri river have been flooded by ice gorges, and thousands of destitute people are being supplied with government food. Several lives have been lost by the flood.

Small-pox and typhus fever are prevailing to an uncomfortable extent in New York. The small-pox hospital contained 119 patients on Wednesday, and the typhus tents 57.

Rev. Mr. Mason of Connecticut will preach at the Baptist church on Sunday.

J. H. Gamwell is enlarging the capacity of his spring by an addition of 57x34 feet.

M. C. Fenton has been appointed by the selectmen to repair the highways in the 5th district.

The auction sale of the water power at Blanchardville comes off next Thursday afternoon, at 2 o'clock.

Eugene Shorley and F. D. Orcutt have been drawn as jurors for the coming session of the Supreme Court in Springfield.

Dr. C. W. Cross is off on a little vacation trip to the eastern part of the State. He will return about the middle of next week.

The Masons had planned for a sociable at their hall last evening, but concluded to postpone it a week on account of the storm.

The next meeting in the series of union prayer meetings will be held at the Baptist church in Three Rivers next Monday evening.

Surveyors were at work in the Boston & Albany yard on Thursday, taking measurements for a new map of the yard—or was it for the new union depot?

The selectmen advertise for proposals to build the road at Three Rivers recently laid out by the county commissioners from Frank Barker's to the Belchertown road.

Miss Hattie E. Wallis is in town on an extended vacation, made necessary by a throat difficulty, and will not return to her Cambridge school before next autumn.

The "Marbleheaders," who spent several weeks together at the sea shore last summer, had a pleasant social gathering with Mr. and Mrs. C. A. Brown on Tuesday evening.

At an adjourned session of the Probate Court in Springfield on Tuesday accounts were rendered on the estates of Nancy W. Barrett of Palmer and Andrew W. Porter of Monson.

Services appropriate to Easter will be held at St. Paul's church Sunday morning, and in the evening there will be an Easter concert. The Congregational Sunday school will also have an Easter concert the same evening.

A fire was discovered in Dewey's woods last Sunday afternoon, about 5 o'clock, but fortunately there was no wind, and it was easily extinguished after burning over about an acre. No particular damage was done.

Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Billings, of Waukesha, Wis., are visiting their old friends in Palmer. They report a pretty tough winter in their part of the country, and when they left home the snow was still over the tops of the fences.

We hope that our merchants will feel sufficient interest in the subject of village improvement to close their stores at an early hour next Wednesday evening so that both they and their clerks can attend the lecture at Wales Hall.

M. F. Sullivan was unceremoniously thrown from his buggy Monday afternoon at the corner of Main and Thorndike streets by the breaking of the king-bolt, but was uninjured, and stopped his horse at once, no further damage being done.

Mrs. Catharine P. Shaw, of San Jose, Cal., an old subscriber of the JOURNAL, has our thanks for a breath of summer sweetness, in the shape of a box filled with choice roses and flowers of various kinds, such as are now in full bloom in the temperate air of that climate.

We have had a pretty lengthy April shower this week, beginning with snow on Tuesday, followed by hail and rain Wednesday, rain for a while on Thursday, and another snow storm yesterday. A little sunshine and spring weather now would make an agreeable change.

John Welch, purporting to hail from Fall River, was soliciting aid around the village the other day on the strength of a bad breach, and took the money he secured to get drunk on, bringing up in the lock-up. He got off with the usual dollar fine, as did also Maurice Herring and Edward Ryan.

Read the article on the first page showing what has been accomplished in one town by a village improvement society. The same work is being done in many other places, to a greater or less extent, and may be brought about in Palmer if our citizens will unite heartily in helping foward the efforts being made in this direction.

Rev. W. S. Jagger was returned to the Methodist church at Four Corners by the Conference at Worcester this week, the other appointments in this vicinity being as follows: Bondville, A. S. Manson; Belchertown, M. P. Blackmer; Enfield, supplied; Ludlow Center, W. H. Adams; Wilbraham, T. B. Smith; Hampden and Glendale, supplied; Monson, C. A. Merrill; Wales, to be supplied; West Warren, J. S. Barrows; Warren, A. Sanderson.

The roller skating rink at Wales Hall has been closed for the present, on account of the bad condition of the floor, which has splintered up a good deal, making it pretty hard sailing for the skaters. Mr. French proposes to lay a new floor before long, and when this is done the managers may return and reopen the rink. The Palmer band was present Monday evening, discoursing sweet music for the encouragement of the skaters and the delectation of the lookers-on.

The trustees of the savings bank at their meeting on Monday voted to remove the present vault in their banking room and build a new and larger one in the room back of, but opening into, the banking room. The present arrangement of the counters does not give the necessary room for the proper accommodation of the two banks, but by moving the vault the counters can be enlarged and made thoroughly convenient. President Shaw, C. B. Fisk and C. L. Gardner were appointed a committee to make the necessary changes.

Rev. C. H. Eaton preached at St. Paul's church last Sunday morning on "Motives to Benevolence," making a practical application of his sermon by an appeal to his congregation for subscriptions to remove the debt incurred for furnaces and in changing the interior woodwork of the church from ash to black walnut. The people responded nobly, and in twenty-five minutes $1700 was subscribed, this sum being $100 more than was necessary to extinguish the debt, and leaving this much on hand to go towards building some horse sheds.

VILLAGE IMPROVEMENT.

It was stated in a recent number of the JOURNAL that steps were being taken looking to the organization of a Village Improvement Association in this place. We are happy to announce that an important move in this direction has now been made by a number of our public spirited citizens, who have united in securing Hon. B. G. Northrop, secretary of the Connecticut Board of Education, to lecture upon this subject at Wales Hall next Wednesday evening, for the benefit of our citizens. Mr. Northrop has given this subject much attention for many years, and few men are as well qualified as he, by observation, study and experience, to speak understandingly upon this topic, and tell what to do and how to do it. As the result of his labors village improvement associations have been organized in many towns in Connecticut, as well as in other parts of New England, which are doing incalculable good in quickening public spirit, cultivating social and intellectual life, and beautifying the homes, streets and surroundings of the communities where they exist. Such an association is greatly needed in this place. We have a pretty village now in many respects, but it is susceptible of great improvement by a judicious and reasonable expenditure of time and money, and this can only be accomplished by awakening and organizing the public spirit of our people for an intelligent effort in this direction. Every citizen has an interest in this subject, for anything which improves our sidewalks or beautifies our streets, or even our private grounds or houses, is a benefit to all. We trust therefore that our citizens will make it a point to manifest their interest in this matter by filling Wales Hall next Wednesday night. The lecture will be free to all.

THE ACKERT CASE.

The case of Montraville Ackert, charged with burning his house in Brimfield in August, 1877, was before the District Court Monday afternoon, and the hearing resulted in Ackert being bound over to the May term of the Superior Court in the sum of $3000, Mrs. Elvira Makely, his housekeeper, being put under $2000 bonds for appearance at the same court. Neither could procure bonds, and both went to jail. The history of this case is quite interesting, and reflects a good deal of credit upon the detective skill of Sheriff Palmer, to whom belongs the entire credit of working up the case and unearthing the evidence. There were numerous intimations at the time of the fire that Ackert was at the bottom of it, but no evidence could be found to prove it. Ackert had $3000 insurance on his house, but the companies finally compromised with him for $1100, and he only got $200 of this amount, the balance, it is supposed, being in the hands of his counsel, Lawyer A. R. Barker, whom he recently sued for the money. A year or so ago Sheriff Palmer accidentally ran across Ackert's little boy in Brimfield, and entered into conversation with him concerning the fire. During the talk Mr. Palmer drew out from the boy the fact that he did not sleep in his own chamber on the night of the fire, but in Mrs. Makely's room, stating that she slept on the lounge. This was the first real clue that he got hold of, and this was but a slight one. Other threads of evidence were subsequently brought to light, some of them valuable and others misleading.

A little more than two weeks ago it was learned that Mrs. Makely, whose whereabouts had been for some time unknown, was living at Montague. She was accordingly arrested and brought to this place, and efforts were made to get her to divulge the facts concerning the fire. She was cool and collected, however, and had a plausible story well committed, but Mr. Palmer finally cornered her so closely that she broke down completely and made a full confession. She said that for a year before the house was burned Ackert had tried to induce her to set it on fire, saying he was sick of living there and wanted to get the insurance money and go away. He promised her $100 if she would burn up the place, and at last she consented. Ackert prepared combustibles overhead in the back room so that all she would have to do would be to touch a match to them, and then went away for two or three days. That night Mrs. Makely had Ackert's little boy come down stairs and sleep in her room, while she lay on the lounge. About 2 o'clock she got up, and going to the back room started the fire. Then waking the children and taking her trunk, which was already packed, they made their escape. When Ackert returned he complimented her on the successful result of her work, telling her she had done a good job. They afterwards went to stay awhile with a Mrs. Squier in "Silver Street," who testified on Monday that Ackert told her, while there, that he hired Mrs. Makely to burn his house. She also said that at another time, when angry with Mrs. Makely, he twitted her of the fact. The evidence seemed sufficiently strong to hold both parties for trial, and they were bound over as stated. Lawyer Gardner appeared for the commonwealth; Lathrop and Strong for the defendant.

In looking up evidence for this case Sheriff Palmer found conclusive proofs that Mrs. Makely's son, C. O. Makely, who was held as a witness, stole a horse and sleigh at Amherst on the 20th of December last. He hired the horse to go to South Amherst, but went to Barre instead, no trace being found of him beyond that point. The horse was recovered last week in East Brookfield, and the sleigh was found at Paxton, while the harness, robe and blanket are reported to have been sold at Worcester. Mr. Palmer has taken Makely to Northampton jail to await trial.

BRIMFIELD.

The students of the H. F. H. S. have organized a base ball club, averaging 16 years of age, and would like to play with visiting clubs.

THREE RIVERS.

Sparks from a locomotive set fire to the grass between John Ferrell's house and the village last Saturday, and the flames ran up the hill-side into the sprout and woodland, burning over some two or three hundred acres before they were brought under control, and doing considerable damage to the sprouts and young timber.

BONDVILLE.

Luther Collis has a new road staked out west of his house, which will open about 20 building lots.

Rev. B. L. McKeany, who recently purchased the Webber place, will fix over and remodel the house, and is also to build a forty-foot barn on the place.

A fire company was organized last Saturday, with Samuel Weld as foreman and Merrick Whitney assistant foreman. The company will meet once in two weeks for practice.

WILBRAHAM.

The public schools commence next Monday.

The Woodland Dell association has chosen these officers: President, R. R. Wright; vice president, Geo. W. Ely; clerk and treasurer, John M. Merrick. The old board of directors were re-elected.

An entertainment was given at Fisk Hall on Wednesday evening for the benefit of the Wesleyan Base Ball Club, with an interesting programme, consisting of vocal and instrumental music, recitations, dialogues, etc.

THORNDIKE.

John Riley was kicked by his horse last week, badly fracturing his jaw.

The homestead of the late Eunice B. Durkee is to be sold at auction May 3d.

Patrick Shea, while returning from Palmer across lots one day last week, claims that he was assaulted by two tramps, who robbed him after cutting and bruising him badly.

Andrew Bresnan, while attempting to turn around with a team near the upper railroad crossing, last Sunday night, tipped over, badly smashing the carriage. The horse ran, but "Andy" pluckily held on to the reins and was dragged along until he stopped the animal.

The Thorndike Dramatic Club will bring out the drama "The Two Orphans" next Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, at the vestry of the Congregational church. This is the play made so famous by Kate Claxton, in her impersonation of the blind girl. It is quite an undertaking for amateurs, and the club deserve credit for their courage in attempting it, at least.

WARREN.

The Congregational Sabbath school give a concert next Sabbath evening.

Rev. A. Sanderson of Lynn is to supply the Methodist church for the coming year.

A. L. Converse of Brimfield is soon to occupy the house owned by him in Warren.

Edward Fairbanks has sold his residence on Main street to Mr. Warren of Lawrence.

Viola Dickerman gave an interesting temperance lecture in the town hall Sunday evening.

The Ladies' Home Missionary Society met Thursday evening with Mrs. Emery Shumway.

On account of the large number of scholars in the primary school, another school has been opened in the small hall under the town hall.

The location of the new school house is to be on High street, though there is some opposition to it on account of the difficulty of grading the schools, more teachers being required than when the scholars are all in one building.

MONSON.

The public schools began on Monday.

The school committee meet for organization this afternoon at the town room.

Henry Joy has closed his South Monson barber shop.

Landlord Robbins announces another ball for Friday evening, April 22d.

The Harmony society will continue rehearsals three or four weeks longer, before adjourning for the season.

The children of St. Patrick's society are rehearsing the "Flower Queen," and will present it at Central Hall early in May.

A fine clock case, made by Dr. G. W. Andrews, attracts deserved attention in the window of Phipps's drug store.

The Village Improvement Society meet for organization next Saturday evening, at the office of C. W. Holmes, Jr.

After this week Whiton, the expressman, will leave Green's hotel for Springfield at 6.30 a. m., on Tuesdays and Fridays.

The large wild cat shot by Haskell Allen of Brimfield last February has been mounted and is on exhibition at the post office.

A fine half-length portrait of the late Horatio Lyon is now nearing completion by Thomas W. Wood of New York, and will be hung in the new library building, a gift from Mrs. Lyon and her daughter.

At the annual meeting of the First parish last Monday Chas. H. McMaster was chosen clerk, Chas. R. Dudley treasurer, F. E. Morris auditor, and C. W. Holmes, Jr., S. F. Cushman and E. F. Morris prudential committee.

The milliners had bad weather for their openings Wednesday and Thursday, but this did not deter nearly all of the gentler and a few of the sterner sex from attending. At Mrs. Gardner's and Miss Miller's very fine displays were made.

For various reasons the stereopticon exhibition last Tuesday evening for the benefit of the Sunday school connected with the Congregational church had a small audience. The church sociable Wednesday evening also was not as well attended as usual, and will be repeated next week.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

Schools begin next Monday.

School house No. 5 will be moved up the mountain to the corner near John Hitchcock's.

Charles Fuller will move from Somers to this village with his family the first of the month.

The No. 8 grammar and primary school rooms have been repaired and cleaned, ready for another year.

Work has been commenced on the store occupied by E. B. Gates & Co. There will be an outside entrance to the tenement above.

Miss M. Adelle Pease has closed her private school, which continued four weeks with 38 scholars. They have a vacation of one week.

All those interested in the service of song at the chapel are invited to meet Saturday evenings at some place appointed for rehearsals.

Charles E. Stacy had a valuable horse killed this week. He had been sick during the winter and Mr. Stacy could find no relief for him.

The school committee have chosen Jesse L. Rice chairman, and Prof. Benj. Gill secretary. Mr. Rice has charge of Nos. 1, 2 and 3, Prof. Gill 4, 5 and 8 grammar, Henry Cutler 6, 7 and 8 primary.

The following are the town officers and appropriations for the present year: Town clerk and treasurer, C. E. Stacy; selectmen and overseers of the poor, M. F. Beebe, A. Jackson Blanchard and Hiram Danks; school committee for three years, Henry Cutler; assessors, Chauncey E. Peck, A. A. Phelps and Jas. K. Butler; constables, Henry Clark, C. G. Robbins, Jas. C. Cooley and Fred L. Stebbins; fence viewers, C. A. Corbin, D. M. Havens, A. A. Phelps and Harvey Kent; tax collector, Hiram Danks. Appropriations: Schools, $1875; incidentals, $70; paupers, $1200; highways and bridges, $1000; town officers and contingencies, $1426; removing school house No. 5, $300; stone posts for lot on green, $5. The fish committee reported a set of by-laws to regulate fishing in Nine Mile Pond, and the town adopted them. It provides for fishing two days in the month from July 1 to Nov. 1, each family to pay 25 cents for a permit, and cannot take out more than 10 pounds in one day, and no fish weighing less than one pound.

HAMPDEN.

Town meeting passed off quietly last week. The citizens' ticket for town officers prevailed, viz: Clerk and treasurer, Sumner Smith; selectmen, Decius Beebe, S. C. Spellman, Frank S. Smith; assessors, A. B. Newell, Oramel Davis, S. U. Stanton; school committee, A. B. Newell three years, G. F. Ballard two years to fill vacancy. The town voted to grant liquor licenses.

The store and dwelling house of Wm. H. Barnes were burned on Wednesday of last week, making almost an entire loss. Some of the goods were saved in a damaged state. He was insured for some $2200 on dwelling, store and goods, but none on household goods or wearing apparel. The store was almost connected with the buildings of Clark Hancock, which but for the great exertion of the citizens must have been burned. This is the first fire of much magnitude in many years, and it may induce the fellaguents to get in sirth.

The Congregational society held their annual meeting March 30th. The society is clear of debt and has a small amount in the treasury. The name of the society has been changed by the Legislature from "The South Parish of Wilbraham" to "The First Congregational Society of Hampden." The new society commences under very favorable auspices. The following are the officers for the coming year: Clerk, Mortimer Pease; treasurer, Marcus Beebe; parish committee, W. R. Sessions, S. C. Spellman and A. O. Thresher. Rev. Mr. Root's salary was unanimously raised, and various amounts appropriated for running expenses.

At the farmers' institute held in the Congregational church in this place last Saturday, Maj. Alvord of Easthampton spoke at considerable length on the advantages of the creamery system, showing that butter made on this plan sells better than any other, and commands higher prices, while ten per cent more butter can be made from the same amount of cream than by the old method. Dr. Wakefield approved of the system and gave some hints on the selection and care of cows. Remarks were also made by C. L. Buell of Ludlow, M. F. Beebe of Wilbraham, H. M. and W. R. Sessions; and a committee, consisting of W. R. Sessions, C. H. Burleigh, A. J. Blanchard and J. L. Rice, was appointed to see about starting a creamery in Hampden.

WARE AND VICINITY.

Milk is selling now for three cents per quart.

W. L. Brakenridge lost a valuable cow by death a few days since.

Tenements are so scarce that a number who work in the village live at Ware Center.

O. A. Deslauriers is to open a barber shop in Storrs' new block about the first of May.

Michael John McArdle has engaged Music Hall for the 21st inst for the walking match.

Wm. Medcalf has sold his new cottage on William street to James Murphy for $1600.

L. W. Robinson has bought a lot of land of L. Fairbank at the foot of Monroe street for about $450.

Fun for the boys and girls at the skating rink opened at Music Hall for a few nights on Thursday evening.

The finishing and polishing of the wood work of the library building is completed, and the frescoers are now at work.

The house on the Fitzpatrick farm in Prescott, owned by L. W. Robinson of Ware, was burned in the daytime on Friday last.

P. Cheaver has been engaged by the road commissioners to take charge of the repairing of the highways for the ensuing year.

Work has been commenced again this week on the new mill of the Otis Co., which was left unfinished when the cold weather came on last Fall.

Preaching at the Methodist church on Sunday on the subject of Easter. The meeting in the evening will also have a bearing upon the same subject.

By the decision of the Methodist Conference Rev. A. J. Hall has been returned to Ware for another year, to the great satisfaction of his many friends.

The store of Henry A. Allen is being overhauled, giving about one-third more room in the salesroom than formerly, as he has given up the oyster and ice cream business.

Sunday school concert of the East Congregational Sunday school, especially prepared for the Easter season by Mr. A. W. Bowen, will be held at the chapel on Sunday evening at 6 o'clock.

At the annual meeting of the Unitarian society the following officers were chosen: Prudential Committee, Charles A. Stevens, Stephen S. Bonney, Aram Warburton; Clerk, John W. Robinson; Treasurer, Chas. E. Stevens.

Over 100 of the friends of Rev. A. J. Hall welcomed him back to this pastorate on Wednesday evening, leaving tokens of their friendship in what were called "pound packages," but in size and weight varied from a barrel of flour down.

Patrick Keegan was at work on the basement of P. L. Keefe's new building on Monday, when a stone rolled against his right thumb, crushing it so badly as to necessitate its amputation, which was performed by Dr. W. W. Miner.

The layers of concrete walks are again in town, and have put down a piece on South street under the direction of the Village Improvement Association, who have really done more for the improvement of our village in the past two years than has been done for more than ten years before.

Two tramps attacked a French boy on the Gilbertville road Monday night. He was driving a cow from Hardwick for M. W. Peltier, who was some distance behind with his team, but who soon came up, and taking justice into his own hands punished them so severely that they will hardly wish to encounter him a second time.

The ground is broken on this section of the Mass. Central Railroad. Work has also commenced on the masonry, and arrangements are being made to push the work as rapidly as possible. When completed we hope to get to Boston as cheaply as our friends from Barre, who have about 15 miles longer ride at considerably less price than we have to pay from Ware.

The property of Mills' seminary for young ladies, near San Francisco, Cal., valued at $200,000, has been given by Dr. and Mrs. Mills, formerly of Ware, who established it, to the young women of the Pacific coast, under a self perpetuating board of trustees of all denominations, to be forever a public institution. It is to be unsectarian, but religious in character.

Constable Tobin served a writ on Mrs. Mary Conley on Tuesday. She not liking the proceedings attempted to smooth him out with a flat iron, but he did not flat out worth a cent, but took the iron away from her, slightly wounding her thumb, when she made herself hideous by completely smearing her face and hands with the blood.

Friends to the number of about 50 gave a surprise party to Mr. and Mrs. Geo. E. Fairbank last Saturday evening, it being the 15th anniversary of their marriage. Rev. A. E. P. Perkins, D. D., in a few choice remarks in behalf of the party, presented the couple with a fine set of crockery and other presents to the amount of some $50, as tokens of esteem and friendship, and as remembrancers of the pleasant occasion.

There was a pleasant family gathering at the house of John W. Robinson last Saturday, being the 80th anniversary of the birthday of his mother, Mrs. Eliza Robinson. All her children, Hon. John W., Judge George, and Deputy Sheriff Charles S., were present with their wives and five of the grandchildren, but one being absent. Mrs. Robinson is in remarkably good health and spirits for one of her age, and seemed to enjoy the occasion most intensely.

The Ware Musical Society held their last meeting of the season Monday evening. The time was spent in a social way, interspersed with singing. Mrs. Bond and Mrs. Marshall were added to the committee to select music for next season. The treasurer reported $23.77 received from members, and $72 for sale of tickets to concert. The expenses incurred for use of chapel, organ, piano, rent of hall, printing, etc., $46.36; Mr. Anderson was paid $49.14 for his instruction, and there then remained in hands of treasurer 27 cents, which it was voted to expend at once for a collation of peanuts, which was done. The meeting then adjourned until again called together by the committee, some time in September.

The unfinished house of Daniel Ward on Eddy street was burglarized on Thursday night of last week, and the goods which had just been moved in but not unpacked were thoroughly overhauled. A fine pair of opera glasses, Mrs. Ward's jewelry, and many valuable keepsakes were carried away, clothing was torn in pieces, and other goods and ornaments were damaged and destroyed, or thrown about the house in confusion. Probably more than $100 worth of goods was carried away or destroyed. Why do not our authorities offer a reward for the detection of the perpetrators of such deeds as this? If they could be caught the town could well afford to pay to be rid of such rascals; if not, it would show a willingness to do all in their power for the protection of our citizens.

The dead body of a man was found on Saturday last by E. H. Vaughan and Augustus Walsh, who were fishing in the brook on the Boyle farm, about 1½ miles south of the village. The body lay on the bank of the river, with the feet in the water. The face had been so exposed to the sun and weather as to disfigure it, but the cold weather to which the body had been subjected for a number of weeks had preserved the other parts. The body was identified on Thursday as that of Patrick Sullivan, who has children here and a daughter in Chicopee. He left here some time in February to visit his daughter, the friends here supposing he was there, while they thought he was here, so he was not missed. He was satisfactorily identified by the children, and the body has been delivered to them for burial.

MISHAPS AND MISDEEDS.

Smith Ransom, a man about 55 years of age, living at East Longmeadow, was found last Sunday morning lying on his bed with his skull broken in. The outer and two inner doors of his house had been broken in, and the kitchen floor and walls were covered with blood, indicating a severe struggle, while in one corner was an ax covered with blood and hair. Luther Bridge, recently a workman at the quarries, was seen dancing and shouting about Ransom's house Saturday afternoon, and was taken to Springfield that night suffering with delirium tremens. He has confessed that he committed the deed, though he can ascribe no cause for it. It was at first thought that Ransom could not live, but he may recover. He has for some time had the reputation of selling liquor without a license, and was a hard drinker himself.

Charles Briggs, aged 21, shot and killed Charles Stetson Monday night during a dance in a cider mill at Pelham. Stetson had recently separated from his wife, partly because of Brigg's intimacy with her. Briggs took the woman to the dance, and in a quarrel between the men Briggs put three balls into Stetson's brain. He claims that Stetson assaulted him, and he was forced to shoot. Stetson was 58 years old, and had lived happily with his wife until she made Briggs's acquaintance. Neither men had been drinking. Briggs was arrested.

A young woman at Marblehead took a fatal dose of laudanum on Fast Day because her lover, to whom she was to have been married that day, changed his mind, and told her he should not marry her at all.

Franklin Aiken, of Goffstown, N. H., 80 years of age, was burned to death with his farm buildings on Monday.

The steamer Erastus Corning, running between New Haven and New York, was found to be on fire around the smokestacks when off Norwalk early Monday morning, but the flames were extinguished by the prompt action of the crew. There was considerable alarm among the passengers for a while.

Charles Springstead, an inmate of the Passaic county (N. J.) jail, has confessed that he drowned a boy at Lackawaxon, Pa., in 1877, because he hated the lad's father. The drowning was supposed to have been accidental.

A cloud-burst in Colorado on Sunday last washed away a railroad near Redding, and a passenger train was wrecked in the abyss, two men being killed and several injured.

All the sounding boards of the Steinway pianos are glued up of a number of thin thoroughly seasoned pieces of maple, which, while having the most beneficial effect upon the tone of the instrument, is an absolute safeguard against splitting of the bridge. Sold by Stimpson, Springfield.

RESCUED FROM DEATH.—The following statement of William J. Coughlin of Somerville, Mass., is so remarkable that we beg leave to ask for it the attention of our readers. He says: "In the Fall of 1876 I was taken with a violent bleeding of the lungs followed by a severe cough. I soon began to lose my appetite and flesh. I was so weak at one time that I could not leave my bed. In the Summer of 1877 I was admitted to the City Hospital. While there the doctors said I had a hole in my left lung as big as a half dollar. I expended over a hundred dollars in doctors and medicines. I was so far gone at one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I laughed at my friends, thinking my case was incurable, but I got a bottle to satisfy them, when to my surprise and gratification I commenced to feel better. My hope, once dead, began to revive, and to-day I feel in better spirits than I have for the past three years.

"I write this hoping you will publish it, so that every one afflicted with diseased lungs will be induced to take DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS, and be convinced that CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED. I have taken two bottles, and can positively say that it has done more good than all the other medicines I have taken since my sickness. My cough has almost entirely disappeared and I shall soon be able to go to work." Sold by druggists. 4-6

The finest and purest whiskey which can be procured is the "G. O. Taylor Old Bourbon." It has maintained its reputation for years. Druggists and grocers sell it.

$10,000 AWARDED.—"I was so sick and low spirited that I thought I would give anything to get well; and if any one had ensured me the good health produced by using Simmons Liver Regulator, and charged me a thousand dollars, I would willingly have paid it if I had had it; in fact, ten thousand dollars would be worth less to me than what it has done for me. GEO. F. BARRETT, Macon, Ga."

Foster, Babbit & Chapin, "the three clothiers" of Springfield, have had a splendid business since opening. They have made large additions to their stock, especially in school and boys' suits, in which department they lead all clothing dealers in that city. Macullar, Parker & Co. dress suits are the best made in the country. Their one price cash plan and the electric light are both irresistible attractions.

$10 Outfit furnished free, with full instructions for conducting the most profitable business that any one can engage in. The business is so easy to learn, and our instructions are so simple and plain, that any one can make great profits from the very start. No one can fail who is willing to work. Women are as successful as men. Boys and girls can earn large sums. Many have made at the business over one hundred dollars in a single week. Nothing like it ever known before. All who engage are surprised at the ease and rapidity with which they are able to make money. You can engage in this business during your spare time at great profit. You do not have to invest capital in it. We take all the risk. Those who need ready money should write to us at once. All furnished free. Address TRUE & Co., Augusta, Me.

MANTELS AND GRATES.—We have a choice selection of Mantels and Grates, Stucco Center Pieces, etc., etc. We would call special attention to our Shaking, Dumping, and Dustless open Parlor Fire-place. By the peculiar construction of the backs and sides, which are of cast iron lined with soap-stone, is found a dust flue which carries off the dust while shaking the fire, preventing the escape of the dust or ashes into the room. Mason work attended to.

Fifty Years Ago.

A REMINISCENCE BY C. A. G., READ AT THE GOLDEN WEDDING OF DEACON MILTON LEWIS, OF WARE, APRIL 6TH.

"Halt! halt! old Father Time!
Don't you hear this golden chime?
Stay here, and tell us if you know
What the world was doing so long ago.
Full fifty years you have swung your scythe,
Since this good couple, then young and blithe,
Were knotted together in a band so strong,
That their Golden Wedding demands my song."

"Nay! ask not of me for an instant's pause;
I never was known as a breaker of laws.
I must onward move as surely as fate,
'Time and the tide for no man may wait,'
But memory here with the open scroll,
The long panorama may unroll,
And show to your glances, as backward cast,
The persons and scenes that have long since passed.

The first to appear as the roll glides by
Is the parson young, who the knot did tie;
With a clear blue eye and a shaven face,
A winning smile and a stately grace,
He gives kindly words to each child he meets,
And with courtesy true every friend he greets.
His fair, blooming bride, with her cheeks of rose,
And light nimble footsteps wherever she goes,
Intensely in earnest, with a positive air,
Is a partner well worthy his kingdom to share;
But wouldn't it now-a-days bring up a smile,
Should they walk, locked arms, through the great broad aisle?

Now, just at this point, my retrospect muse
Will give you a glimpse of those old-time pews,
With seats that turned up, and oh! what a clang,
As after the prayers they came down with a bang.
On all sides they were, and as some folks would say,
The great congregation looked "every which way."
Here sits uncle Richard, hair dressed in a queue,
And Abner and family in the same pew;
Not yet have the elders on him laid their hands,
To set him apart for the deacon's demands.

For farther along, next pew in the row,
Is the small wrinkled visage of good Dea. Snow.
Long time he "kept store," and sold blackstrap as well,
Which nobody then thought it wicked to sell.
But when better informed on the evils of drink,
Pastor and deacons from the test didn't shrink;
They formed a Society, maintained the pledge,
Yet it split the community just like a wedge.
Dea. Snow sold his store and lived by his farm,
No longer would he bring his neighbors to harm.
For years upon years, at the Wednesday night call,
He takes coals from his fire to build that in the hall.
In that hall, who that saw it can ever forget
Leonard Gould's little foot—is his crutch sounding yet?
For the good of the public he worked with his might,
So the foot was no matter when the head was all right.
Just over the broad aisle from Dea. Snow's pew,
Can you see it, half covered with kerchief of blue?
Behind him, Capt. B., his good cousin and friend,
A pattern of faithfulness unto the end.
O'er his conjugal pathway, the shadows, how deep;
But the vow that he's made he will loyally keep.
No Douglass more tender, no Bayard more true,
For the thirty long years it was given him to do.
Here's the post, where Esq. Bowdoin must tack up the names,
Which the people's intentions of marriage proclaims,
But once in awhile, after service he stands,
Then in clear ringing accents calls out the banns.

There were some who considered the north pews a treat,
For the view which they had of the long singers' seat.
We have Andersons now, they had Andersons then;
They have always been known here as musical men.
There was Will, with flute, and S. F's. clarionet,
Uncle Amasa's clarion the bass to complete,
Oriva's strong treble, so birdlike and clear,
While her mother sang counter for many a year.
The Snells were all singers, so far as I know;
And enough of them, too, to make out a good row,
Were just at this time in the choir to be found,
For help in the worship as Sundays came round.
And here were the children of old Dr. King,
Whose voices alone could make the house ring;
Bowdoin, Eunice and Sarah, Dea. Davis's Ann,
Loring Brigham, the tenor, long a prominent man
In the choir leadership; a few years farther on
Sweet-voiced Gardner is still the first chorister here,
But soon in his place Dr. Cary 'll appear
Bringing in a new style, operatic and grand.
Does some one remember G. Lucas's hand,
With its fingers spread wide as he passed round the tone?
There's no more fa, sol, la's; those old ways are flown.

A glimpse at the business brings an end to these lays,
For Ware Town had business in these far away days.
The Keene O!* rushes in on each alternate morn,
From the Gardner hill-top resounds the post-horn;
It stops at the tavern ten minutes or so,
To take up any passengers wishing to go,
Give drink to the horses, to help them pull through,
And mayhap the driver'll "wet his whistle," too.
S. Gould keeps the house in an orderly way;
'Tis a favorite place for the teamsters to stay,
Good beds and good fare, and good landlady's found—
They have the best gingerbread sold anywhere 'round.
Is this the May training that is passing along?
The flood-wood militia are coming out strong;
Blue coats and white pants, red tipt white cockade,
Capt. Snell is commander of this day's parade.
It is only big boys to training may come,
So papas buy a treat for the children at home.
Aaron Gould, the rich farmer, has mention in brief,
Though a bachelor long, he's town father in chief,
And when Winter comes round, bringing sleigh-rides and sport,
He will spend it away at the great "Gineral Court."

In variety stores, on either side of the way,
Here's Crowell and Stowell selling dry goods each day;
Tea, sugar and spices, besides lace for a ruff;
Crockery and slippers and fish-hooks and snuff.
I. Stearns has a shingle mill by the King brook;
D. J. Converse makes rifles† in this little nook.
At the fork of the roads stands the old blacksmith's shop,
Lee Sprague here shoes horses till ready to drop.
Down in the fields Osborn's tan-shop is seen,
But it takes Peter Wheeler to "run the machine."
Up the stream are the auger shops, busy with work,
T. Snell and his sons are not men to shirk;
The trip-hammer music booms out on the air;
Now all is deserted and silent and bare.
A. B. Adams, fine boot-maker, works at his trade,
For nobody is dreaming of things ready-made;
His work will be desirable, well-fitting and neat,
But he won't look out for the corns on the feet.
To Leonard Gould's house the apprentices come
To practice in shoe-making, finding a safe home;
They are taught in the trade, learn goodness as well;
A word on this point T. S. Norton could tell.
Jesse Bee Wetherbee; "salt of the earth"
Is none too expressive of his christian worth.
A queerer outside is not often seen, to be sure;
Though the setting be rough, the jewel is pure;
By trade he's a joiner, and when spirits take flight,
For the body's encasement he works day and night,
It is simple stained pine, but it answers as well
As the costly trimmed casket in these days they sell.
A. Anderson & Sons shall make one more view
Of the industries various the people pursue.
Wheel-wrights and masons, and sextons as well,
For dinner and curfew they ring out the bell.
And when one in silence the last journey goes,
To "God's Acre" they bring him for quiet repose.

Now, roll up the canvass—put out the light,
My review is all over—to the past bid good night.

WILL IT CURE ME?

Said a man whose woebegone countenance and broken down constitution plainly showed traces of disease—a sufferer with Nervous Dyspepsia, in whose stomach the most delicate morsel lay like lead. Refreshing sleep and quiet nerves were strangers to him, and he despaired of ever being well.

We advised him to take

which he did, and in a short time was not only relieved but cured.

Reader, if you are suffering with Dyspepsia or Liver Disease in any form, do not wait until the disease has taken a fast hold upon you, but use the Regulator when the symptoms first show themselves. It has relieved untold suffering. SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR is not an alcoholic stimulant, but a PURELY VEGETABLE REMEDY that will cure when everything else fails. It is a faultless family medicine. Does not disarrange the system. Is no violent drastic purge, but nature's own remedy. The friend of everyone, and will not disappoint you. A single trial will convince you that it is the cheapest, purest and best Family Medicine in the world.

ASK the recovered dyspeptics, bilious sufferers, victims of fever and ague, the mercurial diseased patient how they recovered their health, cheerful spirits and good appetite--they will tell you by taking Simmons Liver regulator.

ASK YOUR DRUGGIST FOR

MAKE NO DELAY,

Meaning You.

The months of March, April and May are the three arches of the bridge which binds the season of ice to that of roses. Therefore Spring is a trying period for invalids. Indications of disease should now be heeded at once. If you are vexed with indigestion, disordered Liver or Kidneys, want of appetite, constipation of the bowels or feverish skin, take Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy without an hour's delay. It is mild, quick and positive in its action. Keep it in the house when you are at home, and take it with you on journeys; you have no better friend.

It adapts itself to the common ills of every day, and should be found in every family where this journal is read. What Favorite Remedy is recommended to do it will do. Ask your druggist for it. But little money is wanted; only One Dollar a bottle.

"Favorite Remedy" is the friend of childhood and should be found in every nursery in the land. Keep it in the house for your children's sake as well as your own. For women who suffer from any of the ills peculiar to the sex, Favorite Remedy proves a real blessing. Try it, and you will be glad you saw this article. Make no mistakes. The medicine is "Favorite Remedy," and the proprietor's name and address: Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.

Patients living at a distance (except in surgical cases,) by sending a statement of their case can be treated at home.

A VERY INTERESTING STORY.—WHY BURNS' FURNITURE STORE LEADS IN SPRINGFIELD.

Some two years ago D. Burns opened a very large store in the old Republican building on Main St., opposite the Opera House. Mr. Burns introduced a new departure for that city. He stocked his four story building with a finer class of furniture than had been kept in that city before. There was a demand for such furniture, but no dealer had had the boldness, or such a sense of the exigency as to carry such a stock. What has been the result? Springfield is now considered next to New York and Boston as a place in which to buy fine quality as well as common furniture. (Mr. Burns keeps a large stock of common furniture.) The other dealers have been toned up by Mr. Burns' example, and though still behind him, are gradually improving. This season Mr. Burns has added largely to his stock of the finer grades of furniture till a walk through his ample warerooms fills one with admiration at the taste displayed in the designs and finish, as well as in the solid and honest workmanship. His large and increasing sales show that a first-class store is appreciated. The magnificent parlor suits and chamber sets he has introduced into the city from the great manufactories of Grand Rapids, Mich., are, as usual, leading the market, and in Springfield Mr. Burns leads in these grades, both as to quality and price. His parlor suits are most elegantly upholstered and contain no excelsior which cheapens the goods more than it does the price. He keeps in this line only first-class work, and guarantees satisfaction. In black walnut and rattan furniture Mr. Burns is acknowledged to lead the city. His furniture this season is of new and very pretty patterns. His best chamber sets have shaving mirrors of bevel plate glass. Mirrors and pier glasses are made to fit any part of a room. Beautiful designs for lambrequins are constantly produced. All his work and goods are offered at the lowest New York prices. The Graves bed lounge is only to be found at Burns'. This lounge has given the most entire satisfaction through the city. Mr. Burns keeps sofa beds, book-cases, mattresses, side-boards, ebony stands and tables, and the celebrated Southern Moss mattress, said to be a great cure for rheumatism. People will see by this little story that a good place at which to get their furniture and be sure of honest dealing, is at the store of D. Burns, 409 Main St., Springfield. They invite all to come and see if this is not true. 4w2

April Jesting.

I heard two robins singing in the wood
One April day,
And what they said my heart well understood
That April day;
"Oh, love is sweet through all the busy daytime;
Oh, love is true in Winter and in Maytime!"
But then, you know, the hour was folly's playtime,
'Twas April day.

And I, to keep in tune the merry birds
That April day,
Sang with them thoughtlessly some foolish words—
'Twas April day!
"My love is fair, I could not help but choose him;
My love is good, I could not bear to lose him;
My love is wise, oh! what could I refuse him
This April day.

"Yet should he hear me sing, let him beware—
'Tis April day;
And if I say, 'I love him,' have no care—
'Tis April day.
The token that he sends—oh, yes, I kiss it;
And if he sends it not I sorely miss it;
But promise, song or kiss, what is it
On April day?"

Singing and laughing through the wood I came
That April day,
Until a clear, strong voice sang back again:
"Oh, April day!
This girl of smiles and tears, this little rover,
With pleasant jesting does her heart discover.
Thy mirth is wisdom; I her happy lover;
Thou, April May."

He clasped my hand, and through the wood we went
That April day,
Singing like robins in our glad content,
That April day.
Oh, golden sunshine, and oh, silver raining!
Oh, earnest jesting, and oh, sweet complaining!
Two happy hearts stood watching daylight's waning
That April day.

BY TELEGRAM.

I was appointed telegraph operator at the town of Denvers some five years ago while I was waiting for the lawsuit to be decided which would leave me absolutely penniless or give me a clear five thousand a year from my uncle Rudolph's estate.

My only near relative was Aunt Milicent, who lived at Denvers, and she cordially invited me to make her house my home until I knew whether I was to be able to support a home of my own or not.

Hospitable as the invitation was, it troubled me to bring the burden of my support upon Aunt Milicent's slender purse, and I resolved to find some occupation that would give me food at least. Telegraphing was the one avenue open to me, for my dead father had followed the business for thirteen years, and I had been his willing clerk and assistant. Often and often, when the war tidings kept the wires clicking day and night, I had taken my post at the desk and allowed father hours of sleep. Girl as I was—for I was but seventeen when he died—he knew that he could trust me.

Then came two years of idleness, as Uncle Rudolph's supposed heiress and petted niece; and again death tore away my protector, and my inheritance was involved in a lawsuit. It was, therefore, a miracle of good luck when I arrived at Denvers to find there was a telegraph operator needed immediately, as advertised in the Denvers Gazette, and I lost no time in applying for the situation. The company was speedily satisfied as to my qualification for the post, and I spent nine hours a day in the office, being relieved at night by the former operator by day, who gladly accepted the increase of pay for night work.

So it was that one day in July, when the flies droned about my dull little office, as there had been no call for my professional energies for about a week, I was aroused into life by a summons for attention to Cincinnati, and which gravely demanded if we were all dead at Denvers, and informed me that the "feller" at the other end of the wire would perish if something exciting did not arrive his way before long.

With a mischievous delight in mystifying him, I answered as "another feller," and described the utter stagnation of affairs then reigning at Denvers. Back came a half-burlesque description of Cincinnati in July, and so we commenced our correspondence. Throughout the Summer and Fall my Cincinnati friend, who signed himself "Damon," seemed to spend all his leisure time in dashing nonsense to me across the wires, and I, under the signature of "Pythias," answered him in kind. But there grew to be a strange fascination for me in the communications of this unknown Damon, and we conversed as friends, making the wires carry serious controversy to and fro, discussing our favorite authors, our opinions upon politics, our theories upon many topics, sometimes even our religious views.

Witty and grave by turns—now sarcastic, now doleful, now merry, now philosophical—Damon was delightful in every turn and twist his mind threw across the wires; and never had my brain been roused to keener activity, my ideas spurred on more swiftly than when Damon flashed his "Pythias, are you there?" into my office.

All through the Winter this was my recreation, my mental feast. Damon's hours seemed to be from 3 o'clock to 6; for at no other time did he ever summon me or answer to my call.

But in the Spring, when May was sprinkling the blossoms far and wide, there came to me a farewell from Damon.

"I am off for Philadelphia. Good-bye."

"When do you return?" I asked.

But no answer came. The farewell was farewell indeed. In vain I called my Damon. In vain I listened for his summons. But in June the lawsuit was finally settled; and I was heiress to five thousand a year and a lovely country seat on the Hudson. I left Denvers, and Aunt Milicent accompanied me to my home. Prosperity smiled upon me. My home was beautiful beyond description in its Summer dress; friends gave me cordial welcome; Aunt Milicent took every household care off my hands, and I had but to wish to have my wish gratified.

And yet I was restless and dissatisfied. I tried to resume my studies, my consolation after my father's death, and I found books had lost their interest. I found no beauty in Dante or Gœthe, and my pen recorded no brain work of any interest. I devoted some time to music, and the sweetest melodies fell flat and dead under my spiritless touch.

Then I took myself to task, and I said to my own heart:

"You are fretting for Damon. You are longing for the click that told you he was waiting a message from you. You are in love with an ideal! How do you know that the keen wit, the thinking brain, the tender heart, are not shrined in a man of fifty or sixty, married years ago to the woman he loved? Does he not think you are a man? Shame upon your maiden modesty to fling away your heart unasked."

After this mental scourging I felt better, and I said to Aunt Milicent:

"I miss the excitement of travel. You know my dear father and I roved about a great deal, and Uncle Rudolph took me several journeys. Suppose we try Europe for a change."

Aunt Milicent put down her knitting, gasped a little, and said, meekly:

"Certainly, my dear. If you wish to go to Europe, we will go."

We did go. I looked upon Paris and wondered what Damon would say to the bustle and life there. I wandered about Italy, and thought how grandly Damon would describe its beauties; we "did" Germany and came back, Aunt Milicent and I, in the heat of Summer, and we determined to spend a few weeks at Saratoga before we returned home. At Saratoga I met Weston Graves, a nephew of an old friend of my father's, who introduced him to me, and said kind words of my dead parent, that made me give his nephew cordial greeting.

Weston Graves was not a very young man—thirty-five or six years of age, I judged. He was not a very handsome man—tall, strong and large-featured, with a face that invited confidence at once, it was so frank and true.

But when he talked you found yourself carried away by the earnestness of purpose in his words, or fascinated by the brilliancy of his thoughts. He sympathized with me as no one but my father had ever done. He knew that my love for study, my craving for knowledge, did not unsex me, though insipid girls did say I was "so masculine." He never seemed to think I was an utterly useless member of society because I could not interest myself for hours in thrusting a little ivory needle into colored wools, or punching holes in white cambric for the pleasure of sewing them up again. He did not consider it affectation when in some argument I admitted that the manufacture of pudding was to me an unknown art. On the contrary he seemed to find a pleasure in making me talk, in stimulating me by contradiction into defense of all my favorite theories. He followed my lead in many a discussion, or led me on to warm argument, and little by little Damon faded from my heart, as the strong, good face, and tender, true voice of Weston Graves filled it.

Twice in love, unasked! Space is here allowed all delicate girls to faint.

Twice in love, for if I had loved Damon, I was more in love with Weston Graves, who had never sought to win my heart. Frank, courteous and friendly, never lover-like; this was his bearing toward me.

Aunt Milicent told me that his uncle was very fond of him, and that probably he would one day take him into partnership in his own office.

Hiram Graves being one of the leading lawyers of the day, this was no contemptible prospect for his nephew.

I flattered myself with the idea that his poverty and my wealth kept him from pressing his suit, for spite of his silence, something in my own heart told me he loved me. I had once or twice caught his eyes fixed upon mine in a steady, earnest gaze, that was quickly withdrawn when I noticed it; and more than once his voice had faltered when he spoke to me, if I approached him suddenly.

One day, when we were strolling up and down the broad piazza of the hotel in the cool of the afternoon, he told me something of his own life.

"I have been almost everything," he said to me. "I fought as a captain of volunteers from the fall of Sumter to the surrender before Richmond. I wrote for the papers to keep clothes in my trunk while I studied law. I have been a telegraph operator—"

I caught my breath.

"Where?" I asked.

"In Cincinnati. I was engaged by the regular operator for nearly a year to give three hours daily. It was tiresome work at first, but I had more interest in it after a while."

"Why?"

"I struck up a friendship with an operator in Denvers, a small town not very far from Cincinnati. You, who were probably never in a telegraph office, can form no idea of how dull it is to sit hour after hour on the alert for signals when they do not come. The monotony is weary beyond description, and you dare not become absorbed in anything else, for fear you will miss your summons when it does come. I was rather fond at such periods of existence of trying to stir up some of my correspondents by questions. As a rule, these were either too lazy or too busy to do more than reply; but one Summer afternoon, when the tedium was reducing me to a perfect state of idiocy, I woke up an operator in Denvers who was neither busy nor lazy. You have no idea what fun it was. He was full of wit, and as saucy as a girl. He met me on my own ground at every turn. I tried him at every point, and no matter where I started, there he was after me. I even tried him in French and Italian, and back came my answer in the most accurate sentences of both languages. I tried the pathetic, and he sent me accounts of some of the scenes he had witnessed among the poor that were enough to draw tears. Was I sarcastic, he gave me biting criticisms of manners and things. But alas, I lost my friend! One morning my uncle sent for me in haste. His junior partner had died suddenly, and he wanted me immediately in Philadelphia. I had but five minutes to spare before a train started, and I sent a hasty good-bye to Denvers. A year later I was in Cincinnati, and again sent a message, but my correspondent had left Denvers."

I stopped in my walk and faced him.

"Damon!" I cried, "do you not recognize your Pythias?"

He stared at me in blank amazement.

"How do you know?" he cried.

"Because I am Pythias! Because when you telegraphed to Denvers, I answered you! Because—" and here a something rose in my throat and choked me, and I stopped.

Perhaps the same something shone in my eyes, or crimsoned my cheeks. I do not know. But I do know that Weston pinioned my hands in his and told me what I so longed to hear, that he loved me—that life would be happy to him if I could only share it with him.

"This morning," he said to me, "my uncle offered me a partnership in his business, and has already settled an income upon me that makes me independent. I will work hard, darling, to win fame for your sake, and your love will stimulate my ambition. Tell me, darling, may I hope to win your love?"

"Win what is yours already?" I cried, and found my hands carried to his lips.

We were wrapped in twilight mists by this time, and we stood talking in a cozy corner of the porch till Aunt Milicent came out to remind me that my dress was thin and Summer was almost over.

We were married in the Winter and pass half our time in Philadelphia, making a Summer residence of my house on the Hudson.

My husband told me of his last effort to find Pythias.

"I telegraphed to Denvers," he said, "the message: 'Pythias, I have returned; are you still faithful?' and after calling at intervals for three days for an answer, finally received a telegram: 'Mr. Damon, we have sent your telegram to every house in Denvers, and there is no one of the name of Mr. Pythias now living here.'"

I laughed heartily, but thought of my own sore heart when Damon was lost to me, and nestled close in the strong arms against the true heart I had first learned to love by telegram.

WANTED IT JUST RIGHT.

"How much will this cost in your paper?" asked a quiet looking man, as he handed the following advertisement to the night clerk at the Brooklyn Eagle counting room, yesterday:

SMITH.—Busted a trace, in this city; Friday, just after dinner, Mary Smith, wife of the undersigned, and daughter of old Jim Pratt, the leading blacksmith of Denver, Colorado. The corpse was highly respected by the hightonedest families, but Death got the drop on her, and took the up bucket with perfect confidence that she would have a fair show the other side of the divide. The plant transpires this afternoon at her boarding-house on Willow street. Come one, come all.

"Dearest Mary! thou hast left us,
For you on earth there wasn't room;
But 'tis Heaven that hath bereft us,
And snatched our darling up the flume."

"Denver papers please copy, and send bill or draw on sight.

"By her late husband, P. SMITH.

"I don't believe you want it just that way, do you?" asked the clerk, rubbing his chin dubiously.

"Why not, stranger?" asked the quiet man.

"It don't read quite right, does it?" asked the clerk.

"Was you acquainted with the deceased, stranger?" said the quiet man. "Was you aware of the lamented while she was bustling around in society down at the boarding-house?"

"I don't know that I ever met her," responded the clerk.

"So I reckoned, jedge. You wasn't up to the deceased when she was in the living business. Now, jedge, the deceased wrote that oration herself afore she died, and I want it in. Do you hook on, pardner?"

"But it isn't our style of notice," objected the clerk.

"Nor mine, either," acquiesced the quiet man. "I was for having a picture and a lot more talk, but she said she wanted it quiet and modest, so she whooped that up. Say, is it going into your valuable space without difficulty?"

"I don't know," said the clerk, dolefully.

"I know, pardner. This celebration comes off to-morrow afternoon, and that's going in in the morning, if it goes in out a cannon. I've got grief enough on my hands now, stranger, without erecting a fort on the sidewalk, but if you want war I've got the implements right in the back of these mourning clothes. What dy'e think, jedge?"

"Does it make any difference where it goes?"

"I want it in the paper, and it's going in, if it takes a spile driver. Think you twig my racket, stranger?"

"All right," replied the clerk. "I'll put it in the 'Salad,' among the other mournful remarks. Four dollars, please."

"That's business." And the quiet man paid the money. "If you ain't busy, come around to-morrow. I'm going to give the old woman a send-off, and if that gospeler don't work up a pretty good programme before he gets to the doxology, his folks will think he's been doing considerable business with a sawmill. She was a good one, jedge, and was pious from the back of her neck to the bunion on her heel; you can tell that from the notice," and the mourning widower wiped his eyes on the sly, and later in the day was fined $10 for thrashing the undertaker who put silver handles on the casket instead of gold.

CHAINED LIGHTNING LET LOOSE.

The Albany Journal says: An incident worth recording took place in the engine-room of Weed, Parsons & Co's. printing establishment. In one corner of the room stands the machine which furnishes the electric light for a dry goods store, the power from which comes from Weed, Parsons & Co's. huge engine. One feature of the machine is the armature, a wheel containing coils of insulated wire through which the electricity flows in powerful currents when the apparatus is in operation. This armature revolves with terrific velocity and constitutes a powerful magnet. On the day mentioned, a young man came in and ground a large pair of scissors at an emery wheel near the generator. Turning to go out past the machine, he carried the scissors carelessly in his hand, when they were immediately drawn into the armature and were soon revolving with it at frightful speed. The young man got out of the way as quickly as possible and was unhurt. For a few minutes the machine presented a very startling spectacle. The whirling scissors, twisted and broken, but still adhering to the revolving armature, began to cut the wires, and thus broke the electric current, which escaped in streams from the fractured ends of the wire, and in a moment or two that portion of the room was literally filled to the ceiling with whirling lightning, looking like a huge piece of Fourth of July fire-works. No one dared to approach the monster to stop the machinery for some little time, but the belt was finally thrown off, and the rather dangerous show was at an end. The incident afforded a striking illustration of the power of the agent which man is endeavoring to render subservient to his will.

Child of four, taken ill, is presented by considerate aunt with several fine oranges, one of which she commences to devour with every manifestation of delight. "And what do you say to kind auntie who brought you the beautiful oranges?" inquires grandma, anxious to call out the latent politeness in the child's character. "She may bring some more when these are gone," responds the child, her face shining with satisfaction and orange juice.

At the beginning of the eighteenth century the English language was spoken by less than eight millions of people; at the beginning of the nineteenth by only twenty millions, and now with one-fifth of the century yet before it in which to spread, it is the mother tongue of ninety millions.

The Bokeworme.

The Bokeworme sitteth in his celle,
He studyethe all alone,
And burnethe oute the oile,
'Till ye midnight hour is gone.
Then gethe he downe upon his bedde,
No mo watch will he a-keepe,
He laycthe his heade on ye pillowe,
And eke he tryes to sleepe.
Then swyfte there cometh a vision grimme,
And greetythe him sleepynge fair,
And straighte he dreameth gristie dreames,
And dreades fellowne and rayre.
His spirit yt swynketh all the daye,

THE BUTCHER BIRD.

The English sparrow—which has such an evil reputation as a breaker of birds' eggs—seems at length to have met with a destroyer. The enemy of the sparrow is the quick, bright-eyed, vigorous and rare bird known as the shrike, or Northern butcher-bird (Collurio Borealis, Vicill), from the habit of keeping his dead prey in a sort of miniature meat market.

Mr. Verplanck Colvin of Albany, N. Y., states that while writing he heard a great outcry and disturbance among the sparrows, and his attention was immediately called to a tragical scene being enacted upon the snow in the garden without. A bird, in size and appearance resembling a mocking-bird, but of more vigorous movement, had savagely seized upon a sparrow, thrown it upon the snow, and —standing upon the sparrow's back—delivered with its beak a rapid series of blows at the base of the brain of the sparrow, which ceased to struggle in a few moments. The butcher-bird—for he it was—having made sure of the death of the sparrow, seized upon it and flew rapidly away. A few days afterward the shrike came again and killed other sparrows, and, becoming emboldened, at length located his "meat market" in the garden, with an evident and laudable intention of making thorough work with the sparrows.

The butcher bird now became so bold that it was possible to follow him around and notice his habits and methods. It has been said to be the habit of this bird to use the large thorns of the thorn-bush for the purpose of impaling its collections of dead birds and insects; it was now, therefore, closely watched to see what it would do where there were no thorn bushes. It was observed to seize upon and destroy a sparrow, carrying it away into a tree. Soon it came back and captured another sparrow, killed it and carried it off to a distant portion of the garden, which is large and filled with trees. Anxious to observe more closely its methods, Mr. Colvin brought an opera glass to bear upon the bird. Some plum trees growing in the garden possessed spines almost equal to thorns, and it seemed possible that the butcher-bird might endeavor to impale the dead bird on these thorns. The thorns were too dull, however, but the bird was certainly far from dull, and quite equal to the occasion, for, choosing a tree on which the small, stiff twigs separated at a narrow angle, he would deftly punch his sparrow between the twigs, springing them apart so that the dead bird was held tightly; thus, with his neatly arranged little market of sparrows, showing himself fully entitled to the name of "butcher-bird." He is bold, also, in defence of his property; and when too closely approached by the observer with his field-glass would bend forward on his perch, defiantly, only eight or ten feet away, but if too closely approached would commence to carry away his sparrows to some more elevated tree, where he would arrange them safely in other tripod crotches among the twigs.

ATHLETIC FEEBLENESS.

Young men are frequently to be met with who seem to have an excessive pride of muscular development; the great development is confined, however, to an undue enlargement of the muscles of the upper portion of the arms, at the expense of the muscles of the chest and of the general health. The prominent physicians of cities have such patients frequently. They usually come to ask advice in regard to some unaccountable lung trouble. They point to their arms and ask how it is possible that a man who can swing a dumbbell weighing fifty pounds can have weak lungs, with spitting of blood and other unfavorable symptoms? It is the easiest thing in the world, and the most natural result of such violent exercise. This "athletic exercise" craze has come to be a national calamity. It is injuring some of the best young men in the country. Every gymnasium in the country should be abolished. Not that there are not some good features about them, but that the evil resulting from gymnastic exercise, as ordinarily practiced, does much more harm than good. The professional gymnast is always short lived; the average term of such a life being less than six years. Were the amateur gymnast to exercise due caution at all times, and not strive to excel, such exercise might be almost as valuable as horse-back riding, which is best of all. But this he seldom does, and the consequence usually is that in his efforts to perform some wonderful feat he does irreparable injury to some portion of his system.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Prof. Virchow of Berlin has lately dealt the vegetarians a blow. The advocates of a vegetable diet have generally maintained that animal food was not natural to man. This is denied on anatomical and biological grounds by Prof. Virchow, who shows, as the result of anatomical inquiries, that not only man, but such animals as the gorilla, nearly allied to him in the scale of being, are indisputably fitted to be omniverous.

A story is told of an old gentleman who always took notes of his minister's sermons, and on one occasion read them to the minister himself. "Stop, stop!" said he, at the occurrence of a certain sentence; "I didn't say that." "I know you didn't," was the reply; "I put that in myself to make sense."

A good thing, if true—A piece of zinc placed on the live coals in a stove, will, it is said, effectually clean out a stove pipe, the vapor produced carrying off the soot by chemical decomposition.

Despair and postponement are cowardice and defeat. Men were born to succeed, not to fail.

A LAWYER IN A SLEEPING CAR.

I never did, never could and never will sleep a second in a sleeping-car berth. But all of the party said it was because I thought I couldn't, and quoted many texts of Scripture and old saws to prove that a man could do anything he resolved upon. As usual, female pertinacity and volubility prevailed and we tried it. I resolved I would omit no means of alluring sleep, that I would array myself as for my bed at home, take my usual night-cap of cold water, "Lay me down to sleep," and "pray the Lord my soul to keep." I put my boots outside the curtain, crawled up to the top berth, and after many contortions of the body, bumps on the top of my head and lacerations of my limbs, contrived to fall in in due and regular order. I had been told to lie flat on my back and obediently did so. The cars rattled and jolted over the rough road, stopped every few miles with a jerk and started with a greater one, until it seemed to me that my soul and all that was within me were being agglomerated into one consistent and uniform jelly. I tried my right side a while and became satisfied that was the wrong side. Then I tried the left, and was sorry I had left the right. I then thought it was too light, and got up and shivered around 10 minutes trying to fix my overcoat as a shade to the lamps. A man who slept opposite my section alternated between fearful snoring, strangulations and wild and copious expectorations. I felt I had nearly composed myself to sleep, when it occurred to me that sound and direction indicated that my boots were being utilized by my catarrhal neighbor. I hustled down again and drew them in from the storm. Then I became certain that my money was in peril, that my pants and vest which contained my treasures must be taken from the pegs and stored away behind me in the berth. I tried for two or three hours to fix things right so that I could go to sleep and enjoy that peace and rest that are the possessions of the innocent and good, but things went on from bad to worse, and under renewed tortures to head and limbs, I dressed me, took a cigar, went to the smoking room, threw myself into a corner and smoked sullenly and silently through the dismal night.—Lawyer Stearns, in Springfield Republican.

TAKE CARE OF THE MATCHES.

In nothing about the household does the injunction to "have a place for everything," require more strict enforcement than in the care of matches. What are known as "Parlor Matches" light the most readily, and are as much more dangerous than the common matches as they are more convenient. The general stock should be kept in a tin box, which is not to be opened or taken from, except by the master or mistress of the house. For each room where matches are used there should be a metal match-safe of some kind, and the matches are to be kept there and nowhere else. It should be regarded as a serious offense for a match to be, anywhere or for never so short a time, found "lying around loose." In the kitchen and the bed-room, or wherever else the matches are in frequent use, it is better to have the match-safe fixed and always in the same place, so that it can be found, if need be, in the dark. In taking matches from the larger box to replenish the safes, let that always be done by one person, and it will pay for that person to look over the matches at the time, throwing away all broken ones, and where, as is often the case, two or more are stuck together by the explosive mixture, these should be carefully broken apart, and unless two good matches are the result, rather than put into the safe one with too little and the other with a ragged excess of the mixture, throw both away. Also throw into the fire those matches that have two or three times as much of the mixture on the ends as they should have. These, in lighting, often explode and scatter burning particles in a dangerous manner. If in lighting a match, day or night, it breaks or the explosive end comes off without lighting, do nothing else until that end is found, and put into the fire, or where it can do no harm. In fact, treat matches, every match, as if it were—as it really is—a fire-arm, capable of dangerous mischief to person and property. Teach the children to carefully observe the same caution.

"Are you fond of flowers?" she inquired. "Very much so," he replied. "What are your favorite flowers?" she further inquired. "Tulips," he answered, as his eyes dwelt admiringly upon the twin cherries that were parted in a ravishing smile, displaying "teeth like ivory dipped in milk," as Joe Bradford says. There was a pause. A warm blush suffused her velvet cheek; the lily lids dropped, half concealing the starry eyes, and she murmured: "If you were to ask me which is my favorite ship, I should say a smack!" Let us draw the curtain.—Somerville Journal.

One of the great sources of wealth in the State of Alabama, the development of which has only begun, is what is known as the Warrior coal field. This is a vast deposit of bituminous coal, 5000 square miles in extent. The tract begins about eight miles above the head of navigation on Black Water River, extends on both sides and is in position very convenient for mining purposes. The river is the coal basin, so that mining may be done on a large scale without shafting.

A spider's web affords an excellent barometer. An old sportsman of Coldwater, Mich., claims that one preserved in his house has proved almost invariably correct. When rain and wind are expected, the spider shortens the threads which suspend the web. When reefs are let out, fine weather may be certain; but if the spider remains inert, rain will probably follow within a short time.

"What would you do if a girl kissed you?" asked one urchin of another. "What would I do! I'd kiss her back. What would you do?" "I'd kiss her mouth," was the portentious reply.

The following advertisment appeared in an Edinburgh paper: "For sale, a handsome piano, the property of a young lady who is leaving Scotland in a walnut case with round legs."

OUR Legislature seems determined to enter upon the work of raising salaries, in spite of many warnings of the danger of such a course. A revision of certain salaries may be a matter of justice, but the difficulty will be to shut down the flood gates when once opened. The House has this week passed the bill to relieve property from double taxation, by a strong vote, and has rejected the bill to prevent the improper use of money at elections.

AN APPEAL is made for contributions for the sufferers by the recent floods in Dakota. A careful estimate shows that fully 7000 people have been driven from their homes, at least half of whom lose everything but the clothing they have on, houses, barns, stock and everything having been demolished and swept away. Contributions of money and clothing, or of grain for planting, may be sent to the relief committee at Yankton, Dak.

DURING the latter part of President Hayes's term, the charge was several times made that he was in the habit of using liquor at other people's tables, while refusing to place it before his guests at the White House. In a letter written recently, Mr. Hayes refutes this imputation, and states that while not a total abstainer when he became President, he was convinced that it would be wise to exclude liquors from the White House, and that in practice as well as in theory he was a persistent advocate of total abstinence for at least the last three years of his term.

The Congregational and the Universalist churches were tastefully and handsomely decorated with flowers last Sunday in commemoration of Easter, and sermons appropriate to the day were preached at both churches. At the Congregational church Rev. Mr. Fullerton preached on "The Resurrection," taking as his text 1 Cor. 15:20, while Rev. Mr. Eaton at St. Paul's church preached from 1 Cor. 15:35, taking as his theme "The Beauty of the Resurrection," which is to be found in exaltation of character. There were Easter concerts at both churches in the evening.

Building operations promise to be quite active in this place the present season. A. H. Willis has contracted with D. A. Davis of Springfield for a new house on his Thorndike street lot, to be completed next Fall, at a cost of about $7500. It will be of wood, situated a little above and back of the site occupied by the house that was burned last summer, and will be a handsome addition to that part of the village. Mr. Willis has bought of W. A. Lincoln the lot sold him last year by himself and Mr. Foster, so that his grounds will remain intact. J. H. Tuthill has bought of F. J. Wassum a lot 6x9 rods on Pleasant street, adjoining H. W. Munger's place, for $800, and will begin at once the erection of a house for himself measuring 26x32, with a 24 foot ell. J. A. Palmer is now putting up a house on Pine street, and George Kenerson will soon begin one on the same street, while H. A. Northrop has the lumber ready for a new double tenement house on Central street, and H. G. Loomis is contemplating building on his Park street lot.

AS TO LIQUOR LICENSES.

In another column the selectmen give notice that they will be at the town house next Saturday, to receive applications for licenses, and hear any parties interested in the subject, pro or con. We do not understand that they will consider the general question of granting or not granting licenses, as that was settled by vote of the town at the annual meeting, but it is for them to determine the number of licenses they will grant, and what applications, if any, shall be refused. If any of the present dealers have violated the conditions of their license, they are clearly not proper persons to be licensed again. It may be a difficult matter to procure evidence that this has been done in the case of any particular dealer, but there is evidence enough that it is done almost daily by somebody. Last Saturday night a party of men apparently going home to Three Rivers had great difficulty in managing one of their number, who was so drunk that he made North Main street hideous with his yells and oaths. Somebody had sold him liquor in spite of the fact that the licenses require that none shall be sold to a drunken person. A young man was before the court the other day who told the officer he was 17 years old, and that he alternated between two of our saloons until pretty drunk, and then went to another, where the liquor he procured made him unconscious. He afterward insisted that he was 22 years old, evidently to relieve the dealers from the charge of selling to a minor, though this is unquestionably done. Men are frequently before our court for drunkenness, and Henry Wallace was burned in his own house while drunk, only three weeks ago. Somebody is plainly guilty of a constant disregard of law in selling liquor to such people, and we hope that our selectmen will look sharply into the matter, and will restrict the licenses to be issued still more than has been yet attempted.

MR. NORTHROP'S LECTURE.

The lecture of Hon. B. G. Northrop of Connecticut at Wales Hall Wednesday evening on Village Improvement, or, as he prefers to term it, Rural Improvement, was listened to by an attentive audience which, though not as large as it ought to have been, was still fair in numbers, and comprised a liberal representation of our leading citizens. In opening his address, Mr. Northrop stated that the first improvement association of which he found any record was the Village Green Association, organized at New Haven about 100 years ago, which entered upon the work of tree planting, and the result of whose labors is to be seen in the beautiful elms which make that city known far and wide to-day as the Elm City. The next association organized in this country was the Laural Hill association of Stockbridge, which was started 28 years ago by the personal efforts of one devoted lady, and which has transformed Stockbridge into one of the handsomest villages in the country. There are now sixty of these associations in Connecticut, and Mr. Northrop has helped organize some sixty others in other States, while more towns are moving in the matter this spring than ever before. The objects of these associations are to cultivate public spirit and town pride, bring the people together in a fraternal spirit, quicken intellectual life, improve the road-sides and sidewalk, provide for street lights, improve the sanitary conditions, as well as the homes and home-life of the people, surroundings of railway stations and factories, set out trees, and in general promote the prosperity and health of the community, as well as add to its beauty and attractiveness.

Mr. Northrop spoke at some length on tree planting, recommending the elm, maple, tulip, ash, hemlock, Norway spruce, and other well-known trees. He especially advocated the merits of the tulip tree as a rapid grower with a straight stem, attaining a large size, and hardy; of the white ash, as an ornamental and a timber tree, combining lightness, elasticity and strength, a rapid grower and hardy; and of the European larch, which combines the three qualities of rapidity of growth, symmetry of form and great durability of timber, an excellent tree for reclaiming exhausted lands and sand-banks, and making a good wind-break. Mr. Northrop showed what had been accomplished in different places by improvement associations, and what might be accomplished here with little expense, in the way of improving the walks, tidying up the frontages of the homesteads, and beautifying the surroundings of the depot, by covering the Main street wall with Virginia creepers, the tank houses with ivy, and making a small park in the open tract between the hotels and the depot.

The lecture was full of good hints and suggestions, some of which we hope to see acted upon at no distant day. At its close it was voted that a committee of five be appointed to draft a constitution and prepare a list of officers for an improvement association, to report at an adjourned meeting of citizens to be held at the district court room next Monday evening, at 7.30 o clock. The chairman, Rev. Mr. Fullerton, appointed the following committee: O. P. Allen, E. Brown, C. L. Gardner, A. H. Willis, C. B. Fisk.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

A piece of property belonging to Joseph Baldwin, near the railroad bridge, will be sold next week by Tax Collector Danks for non-payment of sewer tax.

MONSON.

Charles Fowler and Joshua Tracy were chosen assessors at the adjourned town meeting, to fill vacancies, and C. W. Holmes, Jr., M. Bradway and Edward Cushman were appointed a committee to buy a lot for a new school house in the center district.

LUDLOW.

Geo. Mooers is building a large barn for C. W. Alden.

Alden Bros. have finished sawing the logs in their yard, having sawed about 150,000 feet this Winter.

Rev. C. L. Cushman, pastor of the church at Jenksville, had an attack of apoplexy on Tuesday, from which he died on Thursday.

WILBRAHAM.

The senior class of Wesleyan academy held a reception Saturday evening.

The students had a social interview at Fisk Hall last evening.

The quadrangle met with Miss Clara Markham last evening, and discussed the first lecture of Carlyle's "Hero and Hero Worship."

Miss Leila Taylor has resigned her school, No. 2, on account of ill health.

WALES.

The town voted two to one against the license question at the annual meeting.

J. C. Burley comes out with a new horse, having traded his favorite "Moses" for a more speedy one, and the boys are shy about "trying him on."

A disease among the swine is carrying off most of the pigs, several people having lost whole litters. When about four weeks old they droop and die suddenly.

WARREN.

There are several cases of diphtheria in town just at present.

A new skating rink is soon to be erected, much to the delight of the young people.

The Ladies' Temperance Union met with Mrs. Shepard Blair Wednesday afternoon.

Mrs. Kingman and daughter have returned to their home in Minneapolis, after a prolonged visit of one year.

Between 50 and 60 Warren people visited the skating rink at Worcester Tuesday evening.

There will be quite an amount of building this season. Giles Blodgett is to erect a house, Wm. Shepard builds on Main street near the parsonage, and Isaac More has a house already started.

THORNDIKE.

The young ladies of the place have a broom drill at Murdock's Hall next Wednesday evening.

Large supplies of brick for the new factory have arrived, and work upon the same is soon to commence.

The dramatic club presented "The Two Orphans" at the Congregational vestry Tuesday and Wednesday evenings with unexpected success. Considering the skill such a play requires, our amateurs deserve much credit for their performance.

Mrs. James Fuller met with a serious accident a short time since. While alighting from a carriage at the Congregational church, the horse started, and she was thrown forcibly to the ground, breaking her right collar bone. She was placed under the care of Dr. Smith of Bondville, and is recovering.

WEST WARREN.

Chicoine, the baker, is about to enlarge his quarters.

Prouty, the druggist, proposes to build a store on Water street.

Bishop O'Reilly is expected to dedicate the Catholic church May 1st.

Robert Salie's livery barn is at last settled on the lot near the depot.

Jerry Haley has sold his barn to be moved away, and will build greater.

Scarlet fever still prevails, and it has proved fatal in so many cases that it is dreaded on all sides.

The Congregational Sunday school gave a fine concert Sunday evening. The collections amounted to $23.

A coffee party held by young ladies of the Catholic society in Crossman's Hall Monday evening netted about $100.

Miss A. A. Donner, of the intermediate school, accepted the offer of the primary department in Pittsfield, and is succeeded by Miss Cleveland of Amherst.

Louis Gravell wanted to burn some brush on his meadow lot Wednesday forenoon, and before night he succeeded in burning over pretty much all the woodland between his land and Warren.

The Congregational society is officered as follows: Clerk and treasurer, C. Elwell; prudential committee, C. L. Carter, J. P. Bixby and C. P. Crossman. The deacons are Geo. Bliss, C. P. Crossman. The society has cleared up the old debt and now has money in the treasury.

THREE RIVERS.

The subject of Rev. Mr. Dudley's sermon Sunday morning will be: "Duties of Church Members."

The pews in the Union Evangelical church will be rented next Friday evening for the ensuing year.

S. D. Grant, for about seven years station agent for the N. L. N. R. R. in this village, has left that position and is succeeded by O. E. Bryan, of New London.

The Union Evangelical Sunday school chose Rev. C. D. Dudley, J. I. Milliken, R. C. Newell and Willard Kenerson delegates to the Hampden County Sunday School Institute at Chicopee the present week.

Rev. C. D. Dudley was formally installed pastor of the Union Evangelical church in this place on Tuesday. The council which was convened at 2.30 p. m. made choice of Rev. Dr. A. E. P. Perkins of Ware as moderator, and Rev. Chas. H. Ricketts of Thorndike as scribe. The following churches were represented: Congregational, Palmer; Congregational, Thorndike; Methodist, Four Corners; Baptist, Three Rivers; Advent, Palmer; East Congregational, Ware; Congregational, Wilbraham; and Free Baptist, Boston. Rev. Mr. Dudley presented a statement of his theological views, his religious experience, and reasons for entering the ministry, which were deemed satisfactory. The public services of the evening were as follows: Invocation and reading of Scripture, Rev. C. H. Ricketts, Thorndike; sermon, Rev. C. S. Perkins, Boston; prayer of installation, Rev. W. S. Jagger, Four Corners; charge to pastor, Rev. Dr. A. E. P. Perkins, Ware; right hand of fellowship, Rev. B. M. Fullerton, Palmer; charge to the people, Rev. M. S. Howard, Wilbraham; closing prayer, Rev. Dr. Perkins; benediction by the pastor, Rev. Mr. Dudley. A fine collation was served at 5 p. m.

INDIAN ORCHARD.

The Easter collection at St. Matthew's church amounted to about $300.

O. E. Tilley has bought of Dr. N. Barstow his Worcester street house and lot for $2900.

The factories are run on a new time table now, the hours being from 6.15 a. m. to 12.10, and 1 to 6.10 p. m. Work is suspended at 10.40 a. m. Saturdays.

Dr. H. A. Smith is blushing modestly in the consciousness of having had the pleasure of shooting a fine wild goose and an equally fine duck last Monday.

Postmaster C. J. Eaton intends to sell out his grocery business as soon as possible, on account of his broken health. Mr. Eaton is the veteran grocer of the Orchard, having been in the business about 25 years.

Boxing seems to be the favorite pastime just now, and judging from the number of boys who are out evenings with their hands encased in the bulky glove, the Orchard will in time be a place of pugilism.

Some of the sporting men intend to organize a sportsman's club. Two meetings have been held and a temporary organization formed. An elaborate constitution has been framed, to be adopted if a permanent organization is entered into. It gives the club the name of "The Indian Orchard Shooting Club," and as its object the protection of game, detection of any who violate the game laws, and the promotion of field sports.

The young people's lyceum closed up its business affairs last Friday night, and after a lively and evidently enjoyable entertainment adjourned without date. The lyceum was organized last December under very unfavorable circumstances, and has been announced as dead and dying by one or two papers, and sneered at by those who would not take the trouble to attend a meeting, but has lived to do its allotted work, and the active members feel that a rich benefit has been derived from its various sources.

The annual business meeting of the evangelical church was held last Tuesday night. The treasurer reported $55.86 raised by contributions during the year past, and $42.56 paid out for charities and missions, leaving $13.30 in the treasury. This does not include moneys raised by the parish or by the ladies. The old officers were reappointed, and a committee to frame amendments to the by-laws regarding discipline of members was chosen, consisting of Rev. F. M. Sprague, Dea. J. C. Eaton and A. M. Richmond.

WARE AND VICINITY.

William Cummings has recently found some old receipts given 109 years ago, a part of which read "in full of all demands from the beginning of the world to date," with signature and witnesses to make it doubly sure.

The work is getting under way in this vicinity on the Mass. Central R. R., and there are workmen at the quarry getting out stone for the masonry. It was reported that the railroad company were to buy that portion of Samuel Morse's farm lying west of the Ware River road, but such is not the fact. He places so high an estimate upon the value of his place that the company will probably measure off what land is needed for their use, and call on the commissioners to fix the price.

There was a bad smash-up on Thursday morning. A French wedding party was coming from Gilbertville, when the horses attached to a double carriage became frightened and unmanageable near the crossing above the depot and ran, striking the upper stone bridge, leaving the occupants of the carriage as well as its top and one wheel. The horses then ran to Main street, where they were stopped with difficulty. Francis Piuff had his leg badly broken, and Joseph Lord sustained severe injuries about the face.

Music Hall was well packed on Thursday evening, to witness the closing of the walking match, which was commenced at 10 a. m. and continued 12 hours, "go as you please." It took 39 laps to the mile. Hogue of South Brookfield ran 55 miles 28 laps; Burns of Ware 50 miles 4 laps; Pratt of West Brookfield 48 miles 8 laps; Shea of Ware 16 miles 9 laps; Mara of Ware 17 miles 6 laps. The prizes were $15, $7 and $4. After the close of this race there was a five mile race in which there were 5 entries. Kelley of North Brookfield made the five miles in 41¼ minutes, and took the prize of $5.

The Sunday school concert at the chapel Sunday evening was one of the most interesting that has been given for years. The principal exercise was the removal of the crown of thorns from a large cross, placing a wreath of roses of Sharon in its place, and also trimming it with bouquets of flowers brought by eight young misses with appropriate recitations from each. Also recitations from twelve young ladies, the first letters of each being placed upon the cross, forming when complete the words CHRIST IS RISEN. The whole was interspersed by singing by a quartette of members of the school, as well as by the whole school.

Not disagreeable; hardly more bitter than lager beer; and much more satisfactory and pleasant. Simmons Liver Regulator can be taken at any time, without interfering with business or pleasure. It is so gentle, safe, and such a good digester that it is often used after a hearty meal to settle the food and relieve any apprehension that the meal may disagree with you.

HOW TO SECURE HEALTH.—It seems strange that any one will suffer from derangements brought on by an impure condition of the blood, when SCOVILL'S SARSAPARILLA AND STILLINGIA, or BLOOD AND LIVER SYRUP will restore perfect health to the physical organization. It is indeed a strengthening syrup, pleasant to take, and has proven itself to be the BEST BLOOD PURIFIER ever discovered, effectually curing scrofula, syphylitic disorders, weakness of the kidneys, erysipelas, malaria; all nervous disorders and debility, bilious complaints and all diseases indicating an impure condition of the blood, liver, kidneys, stomach, skin, etc. It corrects digestion. A single bottle will prove to you its merits as a health renewer, for it ACTS LIKE A CHARM, especially when the complaint is of an exhaustive nature, having a tendency to lessen the natural vigor of the brain and nervous system.

BAKER'S PAIN PANACEA cures pain in man and beast. For use externally and internally.

DR. ROGER'S VEGETABLE WORM SYRUP instantly destroys worms and removes the secretions which cause them.

WEI DE MEYER'S CATARRH CURE is unquestionably the result of the most important discovery for the relief of uman suffering, since vaccination. It is a constitutional remedy by absorption—an absolute cure at any stage. Supplied by druggists, or delivered by D. B. DEWEY & Co., agents, 46 Dey St., N. Y., for $1.50 a package. Pamphlets, with full explanations and overwhelming proofs, mailed free. 4w2

ASH-TONIC.—A perfected purifier of the system. in ½ lb. bottles, 75 cents. For Dyspepsia, the many forms of Liver Complaint, Impure and Impoverished Blood, and Functional Derangements attendant upon Debility. For symptoms indicated by Indigestion, Loss of Appetite, Nausea, Sick Headache, Sour Stomach, Furred Tongue, Drowsiness, Blanched Lips, Sallow Complexion, Pain in the Side or Back, Eruptions, Depression of Spirits, Nervous Irritability and Hysteria, and for Building up the System, Ash-Tonic is unquestionably the most prompt and energetic remedy yet devised. 1y46

HAVE Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry always at hand. It cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Whooping Cough, Croup, Influenza, Consumption and all Throat and Lung Complaints. 50 cents and $1 a bottle. †

THE Peruvian Syrup has cured thousands who were suffering from Dyspepsia, Debility, Liver Complaint, Boils, Humors, Female Complaints, etc. Pamphlets sent free to any address. Seth W. Fowle & Sons, Boston. †

Dyspepsia in its worst forms will yield to the use of Carter's Little Nerve Pills aided by Carter's Little Liver Pills. They not only relieve present distress, but strengthen the stomach and digestive apparatus. 2w5

Itching Piles—Symptoms and Cure.

The symptoms are moisture, like perspiration, intense itching, increased by scratching, very distressing, particularly at night, as if pin worms were crawling in and about the rectum; the private parts are sometimes affected; if allowed to continue very serious results may follow. "DR. SWAYNE'S ALL HEALING OINTMENT" is a pleasant, sure cure. Also for Tetter, Itch, Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Erysipelas, Barbers' Itch, Blotches, all Scaly, Crusty, Cutaneous Eruptions. Price 50 cents; 3 boxes for $1.25. Sent by mail to any address on receipt of price in currency or three-cent postage stamps. Prepared only by Dr. Swayne & Son, 330 North Sixth St, Philadelphia, Pa., to whom letters should be addressed. Sold by all prominent druggists. 1y43

ASSESSORS' NOTICE.

The inhabitants of the town of Palmer are hereby notified to bring in to the subscribers, Assessors of said Palmer, on Monday, the 2d day of May, true lists of their polls, and of all their estates, both real and personal (not exempt from taxation), of which they are possessed on the first day of May next. The Assessors will be at the Town House to receive such lists on the day above mentioned. Personal property (aside from live stock) consists of money at interest, and other debts due the persons assessed more than they are indebted or pay interest for, all amounts secured by mortgage, all money lent not secured by mortgage, money on hand including deposits taxable, public stocks and securities, stocks in corporations without the State, &c. Please read the first section of the 121st chapter laws and resolves of 1865:

When the assessors of a city or town have given notice to the inhabitants thereof to bring in true lists of all their polls and estates not exempt from taxation, in accordance with the provisions of the twenty-second section of the eleventh chapter of the General Statutes, they shall not afterwards abate any part of the tax assessed on personal estate to any person who did not bring in such list within the time specified therefor in such notice, unless such tax exceeds, by more than fifty per centum, the amount which would have been assessed to that person on personal estate if he had seasonably brought in said list; and if said tax exceeds by more than fifty per centum the said amount, the abatement shall be only of the excess above said fifty per centum: provided, however, that this act shall not affect any person who can show a reasonable excuse for not seasonably bringing in said list.

For The Superstitious.

Sunday's child ne'er lacks in place;
Monday's child is fair in the face;
Tuesday's child is full of grace;
Wednesday's child is sour and sad;
Thursday's child is loving and glad;
Friday's child is loving and giving;
And Saturday's child shall work for a living.

Sneeze on Monday you sneeze for danger;
Sneeze on Tuesday you kiss a stranger;
Sneeze on Wednesday you sneeze for a letter;
Sneeze on Thursday for something better;
Sneeze on Friday you sneeze to your sorrow;
Sneeze on a Saturday your sweetheart to-morrow;
Sneeze on a Sunday your safety seek,
The devil will chase you the whole of the week.

Cut your nails Monday you cut them for news;
Cut them on Tuesday a pair of new shoes;
Cut them on Wednesday you cut them for health;
Cut them on Thursday 'twill add to your wealth;
Cut them on Friday you cut them for woe;
Cut them on Saturday a journey you'll go;
Cut them on Sunday you cut them for evil,
For all the week long you'll be ruled by the devil.

PHILOLOGICAL STUDIES.

"A word fitly spoken," says the proverb, "is like apples of gold in pictures of silver." There is a euphony of language that is the rhythm of speech, and it transforms ordinary words into flashing gems of thought. At present the happy medium of expression is lost sight of in two extremes which mark the age. One is known as the Higher Cult. Its votaries carry lotus lilies in their pale, thin hands, have a sad, far away look in their hollow eyes, and are intense. What is that? We do not know, neither do they, unless it is to have a craze about spelling all words beginning with C with a capital K, learning the delirium of old China, and analyzing Tyrian dyes. They articulate, respond and affirm, but never talk. The commonest thing any member of that æsthetic band ever says is, when posed before some graven image set up on a black velvet background, the worshipper of Japan tea-pots murmurs:

"This is too utterly sweet!"

The next extreme is that of the fair feminine youth of America, in this and other cities, who have originated a language of their own, or as a true exponent of their system would call it, a "s'language," which is used in their clique circles, but not in the bosom of their families, or within earshot of a parent or teacher.

"My daughter never uses slang," says some staid pater familias, who is denouncing the idea that the American young lady speaks any but the purest college-taught English, and he is sincere in his belief. But should some curious senior, with an eye to the truth, linger near this young lady and her school friends, ten to one this is an exact and not overdrawn description of what he would hear:

"Meet me on the ave' this aft' and we will go to the mat'."

"No! not this aft' on the ave'."

"Well, good aft'!"

"I had a perfectly mag' time, and don't you forget it."

"Don't give me away, Kate."

"Well I should softly exclaim."

"I should blush to murmur."

"I should remark."

"I should mutter."

"I should smile."

"Are you going to the musicale?"

"You just bet I am."

"Have you got your lesson in physical geography?"

"What do you take me for?"

"I told the Guv' I wanted a new handkerchief dress."

"Did he tumble to the racket?"

"Did he trail?"

"Did he catch on?"

"He forked over, and it's my treat."

These are the sweet girl graduates who stand up in the month of roses and read charming essays on "The Real and Ideal," "Life as it Should Be," "Reforms," and other practical subjects, and who turn from admiring teachers to whom they have listened with tears in their mock-serious eyes, to say in a low aside, "He's giving us taffy, girls," and who christen everything that does please them as "snide."

The period of slang among school-girls is infectious. They catch it just as they did the measles and whooping-cough at an earlier age, and it runs its course and leaves them about as harmlessly. Their good, proper mothers and grandmothers said all their lives, "will you take a walk?" The "Dare-to-be-a-Daniel" of this age says to her chum, "take a crawl on the ave'?"

After all, it is not a matter for prayers or legislation, but rather a cheapening of the society idiocies of a more exalted type, which Punch caricatures.

"So glad to see you, Mr. Brown."

"So glad you're glad, Mrs. Smith."

"So glad you're glad I'm glad, Mr. Brown," etc., etc.

There is more slang than sense in our universal salutation, which takes the form of an inquiry—

"How do you do?"

The literal answer to which would be:

"Do what?"

The irrelevant response to which is, usually, "nicely," or "I am very well, thank you."

The very latest effort of the graduate of the near future is this:

"Are you going far?"

"No, not far."

"How far?"

"Only to the car."

"Ta-ta."—Detroit Free Press.

Men are to be judged by their words. When two men are in a quarrel, hold your tongue; when you have nothing good to say of others, hold your tongue; when your words are to be carried by feet that are swift in running to mischief, hold your tongue.

Before marriage a girl frequently calls her intended "her treasure," but when he becomes her husband she looks upon him as her "treasurer."

WILL IT CURE ME?

Said a man whose woebegone countenance and broken down constitution plainly showed traces of disease—a sufferer with Nervous Dyspepsia, in whose stomach the most delicate morsel lay like lead. Refreshing sleep and quiet nerves were strangers to him, and he despaired of ever being well.

We advised him to take

which he did, and in a short time was not only relieved but cured.

Reader, if you are suffering with Dyspepsia or Liver Disease in any form, do not wait until the disease has taken a fast hold upon you, but use the Regulator when the symptoms first show themselves. It has relieved untold suffering. SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR is not an alcoholic stimulant, but a PURELY VEGETABLE REMEDY that will cure when everything else fails. It is a faultless family medicine. Does not disarrange the system. Is no violent drastic purge, but nature's own remedy. The friend of everyone, and will not disappoint you. A single trial will convince you that it is the cheapest, purest and best Family Medicine in the world.

ASK the recovered dyspeptics, bilious sufferers, victims of fever and ague, the mercurial diseased patient how they recovered their health, cheerful spirits and good appetite--they will tell you by taking Simmons Liver regulator.

MAKE NO DELAY,

Meaning You.

The months of March, April and May are the three arches of the bridge which binds the season of ice to that of roses. Therefore Spring is a trying period for invalids. Indications of disease should now be heeded at once. If you are vexed with indigestion, disordered Liver or Kidneys, want of appetite, constipation of the bowels or feverish skin, take Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy without an hour's delay. It is mild, quick and positive in its action. Keep it in the house when you are at home, and take it with you on journeys; you have no better friend.

It adapts itself to the common ills of every day, and should be found in every family where this journal is read. What Favorite Remedy is recommended to do it will do. Ask your druggist for it. But little money is wanted; only One Dollar a bottle.

"Favorite Remedy" is the friend of childhood and should be found in every nursery in the land. Keep it in the house for your children's sake as well as your own. For women who suffer from any of the ills peculiar to the sex, Favorite Remedy proves a real blessing. Try it, and you will be glad you saw this article. Make no mistakes. The medicine is "Favorite Remedy," and the proprietor's name and address: Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.

Patients living at a distance (except in surgical cases,) by sending a statement of their case can be treated at home.

A VERY INTERESTING STORY.—WHY BURNS' FURNITURE STORE LEADS IN SPRINGFIELD.

Some two years ago D. Burns opened a very large store in the old Republican building on Main St., opposite the Opera House. Mr. Burns introduced a new departure for that city. He stocked his four story building with a finer class of furniture than had been kept in that city before. There was a demand for such furniture, but no dealer had had the boldness, or such a sense of the exigency as to carry such a stock. What has been the result? Springfield is now considered next to New York and Boston as a place in which to buy fine quality as well as common furniture. (Mr. Burns keeps a large stock of common furniture.) The other dealers have been toned up by Mr. Burns' example, and though still behind him, are gradually improving. This season Mr. Burns has added largely to his stock of the finer grades of furniture till a walk through his ample warerooms fills one with admiration at the taste displayed in the designs and finish, as well as in the solid and honest workmanship. His large and increasing sales show that a first-class store is appreciated. The magnificent parlor suits and chamber sets he has introduced into the city from the great manufactories of Grand Rapids, Mich., are, as usual, leading the market, and in Springfield Mr. Burns leads in these grades, both as to quality and price. His parlor suits are most elegantly upholstered and contain no excelsior which cheapens the goods more than it does the price. He keeps in this line only first-class work, and guarantees satisfaction. In black walnut and rattan furniture Mr. Burns is acknowledged to lead the city. His furniture this season is of new and very pretty patterns. His best chamber sets have shaving mirrors of bevel plate glass. Mirrors and pier glasses are made to fit any part of a room. Beautiful designs for lambrequins are constantly produced. All his work and goods are offered at the lowest New York prices. The Graves bed lounge is only to be found at Burns'. This lounge has given the most entire satisfaction through the city. Mr. Burns keeps sofa beds, book-cases, mattresses, side-boards, ebony stands and tables, and the celebrated Southern Moss mattress, said to be a great cure for rheumatism. People will see by this little story that a good place at which to get their furniture and be sure of honest dealing, is at the store of D. Burns, 409 Main St., Springfield. They invite all to come and see if this is not true. 4w2

ASSESSORS' NOTICE.

The inhabitants of the town of Palmer are hereby notified to bring in to the subscribers, Assessors of said Palmer, on Monday, the 2d day of May, true lists of their polls, and of all their estates, both real and personal (not exempt from taxation), of which they are possessed on the first day of May next. The Assessors will be at the Town House to receive such lists on the day above mentioned. Personal property (aside from live stock) consists of money at interest, and other debts due the persons assessed more than they are indebted or pay interest for, all amounts secured by mortgage, all money lent not secured by mortgage, money on hand including deposits taxable, public stocks and securities, stocks in corporations without the State, &c. Please read the first section of the 121st chapter laws and resolves of 1865:

When the assessors of a city or town have given notice to the inhabitants thereof to bring in true lists of all their polls and estates not exempt from taxation, in accordance with the provisions of the twenty-second section of the eleventh chapter of the General Statutes, they shall not afterwards abate any part of the tax assessed on personal estate to any person who did not bring in such list within the time specified therefor in such notice, unless such tax exceeds, by more than fifty per centum, the amount which would have been assessed to that person on personal estate if he had seasonably brought in said list; and if said tax exceeds by more than fifty per centum the said amount, the abatement shall be only of the excess above said fifty per centum: provided, however, that this act shall not affect any person who can show a reasonable excuse for not seasonably bringing in said list.

SOME beautiful FLORAL TABLETS FOR CHILDREN,

Rest.

My feet are wearied and my hands are tired—
My soul oppressed;
And with desire have I long desired
Rest—only Rest.

'Tis hard to toil, when toil is almost vain,
In barren ways;
'Tis hard to sow, and never garner grain
In harvest days.

The burden of my days is hard to bear,
But God knows best;
And I have prayed—vain has been my prayer—
For Rest—sweet Rest.

'Tis hard to plant in Spring, and never reap
The Autumn yield;
'Tis hard to till, and when 'tis tilled to weep
O'er fruitless field.

And so I cry, a weak and human cry,
So heart oppressed;
And so I sigh, a weak and human sigh,
For Rest—for Rest.

My path has wound across the desert years,
And cares infest
My path; and through the flowing of hot tears
I pine for Rest.

'Twas always so; when still I laid
On mother's breast
My wearied little head; e'en then I prayed
As now, for Rest.

And I am restless still; 'twill soon be o'er,
For down the west
Life's sun is setting, and I see the shore
Where I shall rest.

—Father Ryan.

THE COLLEGIAN ON THE FRONTIER.

Perhaps every person who is somewhat advanced in life can remember some incident of his early years which he would like to forget, something that resulted from the freshness and inexperience of youth. I remember one which I have spent a good deal of time trying to forget. Just before the Union Pacific Railroad reached the Bitter Creek country I made my first overland trip to the Pacific coast. I staged it from the then terminus of the Union Pacific to the Central Pacific, which was pushing east. The stage broke down on Bitter Creek, and the passengers had to walk to the next station. I grew tired of walking before I reached the station, and coming late in the afternoon to where some teamsters were camped, I concluded to stop with them for the night. On asking their permission to do so, they assented so heartily that I felt at home at once. Life in the West was something new to me. I was young and buoyant and just out of college. I was fond of talking. I thought it would be delightful to sleep out with those half-savage ox-drivers, with no shelter but the vaulted, star-hemmed heavens. There were four teamsters, and as many wagons, while thirty-two oxen grazed around in the vicinity. Of the teamsters one was a giant in stature, and wore a bushy black beard; another was shorter, but powerfully built, and one-eyed; the third was tall, lank and ham-jawed; while the fourth was a tall, wiry, red-headed man. In my thoughts I pitied them, on account of the hard life they led, and spoke to them in a kind tone, and endeavored to make my conversation instructive. I plucked a flower, and pulling it to pieces, mentioned the names of the parts—pistil, stamens, calyx and so on—and remarked that it must be indigenous to the locality, and spoke of the plant being endogenous, in contradistinction to exogenous, and that they could see it was not cryptogamous. In looking at some fragments of rock, my thoughts wandered off into geology, and, among other things, I spoke of tertiary and carboniferous periods, and of the pterodactyl, ichthyosaurus, and dinotherium. The teamsters looked at me, then at each other, but made no remark. We squatted down around the frying-pan to take supper, and the big fellow slapped, or rather larruped a long piece of fried bacon over a piece of bread in his left hand, sending a drop of hot grease into my left eye; he said to the one-eyed man:

"Bill, is my copy of Shakespeare in your wagon? I missed it to-day."

"No. My Tennerson and volum' of the Italian poets is thar—no Shakespeare."

The lank-looking teamster, biting off a piece of bread about the size of a saucer, said to the big man, in a voice which came huskily through the bread:

"Jake, did you ever read that volum' of po'ms that I writ?"

"No, but hev often hearn tell on 'em."

"Yer 'Musin's of an Idle Man'?" spoke up the red-headed man, addressing the poet.

"Yes."

"Have read every line in it, a dozen times," said the teamster with red hair. As he sopped a four-inch swath, with a piece of bread, across the frying-pan, he repeated some lines.

"Them's they," nodded the poet. "The emp'ror of Aus'try writ me a letter highly complimentin' them poems."

"They're very teachin'," added the wiry man.

I took no part in these remarks. Somehow I didn't feel like joining in.

The wiry man, having somewhat satisfied his appetite, rolled up a piece of bacon-rind into a sort of single-barrel opera-glass, and began to squint through it toward the northern horizon.

"What are yer doin', Dave?" asked the stout man.

"Takin' observations on the North Star. Want to make some astronomical calkilations when I get into Sackrymenter."

"Well, yer needn't ter make that telescope. I could er took yo' observations for yer, bein' as I aint but one eye."

"Get out thar, yer darned old carboniferous pterodactyl," yelled the ham-jawed driver to an ox that was licking a piece of bacon.

"I give a good deal of my time to 'stronomy when I was in Yoorup," remarked the tall man.

"Over thar long?" asked one.

"Good while. Was Minister to Rooshy. Then I spent some time down ter Rome."

"Rome!" exclaimed the lank individual. "Was born thar. My father was a sculptor."

"Good sculptor?"

"Yes."

"Well, one would er thought it ter look at yer."

"I never was in Yoorup," remarked the one-eyed man. "When I occupied the cheer of ancient languages in Harvard College, my health failed, and the fellers that had hired me wanted me ter go ter Yoorup for an out, but I concluded ter come West ter look—hold up thar, yer infernal ole flea-bitten ilchthy'saurus," he bawled to an ox that was chewing a wagon-cover.

I felt hot and feverish, and a long way from home.

"I got ready once to go to Rome—wanted ter complete my studies thar—but give it up," said the one called Dave.

"What for?"

"They wanted me ter run for Guv'ner in Virginny."

"Yer beat 'em?"

"Thunder, yes."

"Why didn't yer stay thar?"

"Well, when my job as Guv'ner give out they 'lected me 'Piscopal bishop, an' I hurt my lungs preachin'. Come West for my lungs."

"Found 'em?"

"Well, I'm improvin'."

I did not rest well that night. As day came on, and the men began to turn over in their blankets and yawn, the tall one said:

"Hello, Bill! How yer makin' it?"

"Oh, I'm indigenous."

"An' Dave?"

"I'm endogenous."

"An' you, Lanks, you son of a sculptor?"

"Cryptogamous, sir, cryptogamous."

I walked out a few steps to a little stream to get a drink. I felt thirsty and I ached. Then I heard a voice from the blankets:

"Wonder if them durned ole dinothrums of yourn are done grazin'."

Then a reply:

"I guess they've got to the tertiary period."

I walked a little piece on the road to breathe the morning air.

I kept on.—Lock Melone.

SEDENTARY HABITS.

The alarming increase of late years in the proportion of sudden deaths is beginning to attract the attention of statisticians. It is largely due, no doubt, to more general mental activity without a proportionate increase in bodily exercise. The busy life of the age demands a constant hurry and excitement, and taxes the physical powers to the utmost to keep up in the race for money getting. One of the disadvantages of introducing facilities of transportation is the temptation to cut short time and distance by the habitual use of steam cars and horse cars even in the daily transit from the dwelling to the office. A sedentary occupation begets an almost unconquerable aversion to regular exercise, and the result of yielding to the indisposition is that the mental powers, kept at a steady tension for years, will some day suddenly relax, and leave their abuser either lifeless or a helpless paralytic. To literary and professional men is vigorous and regular exercise especially needful, and the example of its effects in a hale old age will suggest themselves to every one. The exercise needed to keep the mind in tone and the physical force unabated, up to the four score years and ten, is not a daily spin behind a fast-stepping horse, but the long swinging gate which puts the walker over a country road at the rate of four or five miles an hour, and sends the blood pulsing with invigorating life to every portion of the system. Two hours' exercise a day, so far from being a waste of time, is a positive economy, supplying the nervous force for more and better work in ten hours than the man of street cars and carriages can get out of twelve.—New London Telegram.

A NEW MEDICAL TRIUMPH.

Medical adventure, which during the last century has left few of the physical penetralia of humanity unexplored, has just conquered the last delicate obstacle to the rehabilitation of the body. Operations involving the cutting of the throat and the introduction of food by artificial means were thought to be the utmost venture that science would ever successfully make in replacing the wasted, wounded or decaying forces of nature. But a Vienna physician, Professor Billroth, has invaded the stomach of a patient, cut a cancer from the intricate tissues, and the subject is not only alive, but in better health than ever. Before making the experiment the doctor practised exhaustively on the stomachs of dogs, removing various parts, restoring the covering, and succeeded in establishing the basis of his scientific principle of resection. The human subject was a woman and the cancer enormous, leaving some doubt in the operator's mind as to the elasticity of the stomach to adjust itself after the cutting out of such a mass. But no difficulty was experienced. The woman began by drinking milk, and graduated to more substantial alimentary nourishment. The operation involved the opening of the stomach, the cutting of the masses of tissue-like covering, the removal of several pounds of cancerated accumulation, the reclosing of the aperture and the provision for artificial distension of the new coating. Physicians the world over will be delighted if not surprised by this wonderful performance, removing as it does another from the list of generally supposed fatal maladies.

A new invention is reported from Italy, consisting in the application of light-giving materials to printers' ink, whereby the print becomes luminous in the dark, so that in future it will be possible to read at night, in bed or on a journey, without the assistance of candle or lamp. A new daily paper, in which this luminous material will be used, is, it is said, about to be established in Turin.

"Adolphus, my dear," said she, "it's nearly a year since you began to call." "Yes, I believe so," nervously. "And we've talked about books and music every night." "Yes, I think so," more nervous than before. "Well, I—I—don't you think a change would be agreeable?" There was a "change" in a few weeks. The pastor made it.

Down in Arkansas they call an ordinary man, who drinks but little, "captain." A colonel is one who can "stand the racket" pretty well, and "general" is the title given to a man who must have "suthin'" once in so often, or perish; but the pickled old topers are all called "jedge."

Hackensack Republican: The editor of a country paper does more work gratuitously for the town and community than all the rest of the population put together, and as compensation therefor gets more kicks than caresses.

After all, being an editor isn't the worst thing in the world. We would rather edit a country paper with every subscriber three years behind on his subscription than be the czar of all the Russias.

There is no disgrace in being poor, we are told. And we're howling glad of it, for there are enough other disadvantages about it, without that one.—Boston Post.

The most laconic will on record is that of a man who died in 1792. It ran thus: "I have nothing. I owe a great deal. The rest I give to the poor."

"I'd just as leaf as not," said the elm to the maple. "You lilac thunder, and no one believes you," responded the maple.

Squash Pies.

I remember, I remember,
The pies I used to eat;
And the "Marrow" squashes in the barn,
So yellow, plump and neat,
They never came a bit too soon,
Nor kept too many days;
But now they feed them to the pigs,
Your correspondent says.

These folks, for buttering the crust,
Use oleomargarine;
And bake their pies in a sheet-iron stove,
Heated by kerosene;
And feed their cows on sour corn stalks,
Jammed in a musty pit;
And buy yarn stockings from Ipswich mills,
Their mothers used to knit.

The "Hubbard," and the "Marblehead,"
They call the real thing;
But "Marrows," and old "Crooknecks," too,
We poets yet will sing.
We'll plant them still in sunny spots,
As in dear times gone by;
And while they give them to the pigs,
We'll have them in our pie.

A ROBUST IMAGINATION.

Judge Carey showed the greatest interest in these weird tales and edged uy to the group.

"These are curious yarns, gentlemen, but I believe them all. I had a dog once, up in Nebraska, that I kept to herd lumber."

"Beg pardon, Judge; did you say the dog herded lumber?"

"Yes, sir; cottonwood boards. We always kept a dog there to bring in the lumber at night?"

Everybody now paid the closest attention, as they knew that the boss was at work.

"It was this way. Cottonwood boards warp like thunder in the sun. A board would begin to hump its back up about 9 o'clock in the morning and in half an hour it would turn over. By 11 it would warp the other way with heat and make another flop. Each time it turned it moved a couple of feet, always following the sun toward the west. The first summer I lived in Brownville over 10,000 feet of lumber skipped out to the hills the day before I had advertised a house raisin'. I went to the county seat to attend a lawsuit and when I got back there wasn't a stick of timber left. It had strayed away into the uplands. An ordinary board would climb a two-mile hill during a hot week, and when it struck the timber it would keep worming in and out among the trees like a garter snake. Every farmer in the state had to deep shepherd dogs to follow his lumber around the country, keep it together, and show where it was in the morning. We didn't need any flumes there for lumber. We sawed it east of the place we wanted to use it, and let it warp itself to its destination, with men and dogs to head it off at the right time; we never lost a stick. Well, here comes the jury," continued the judge. "The witnesses lied so I guess they will disagree."—Carson City Appeal.

The attempt to take the North Pole by storm having failed, it is now to be regularly approached by siege, several nations joining in the attempt to unveil its mystery and discover its secret. Russia will occupy a station at the mouth of the Lena in Eastern Siberia, and another on the new Siberian island, east of Wrangle Land; Sweden will keep watch at the North Cape in Finland; Denmark will make observations at Upernavik, Greenland; Germany will establish a post on the island of Jan Mayen, east of Greenland; Holland, with sturdy Dutch persistency, will plant herself at the mouth of the Ob and Spitzbergen; Austria will occupy Nova Zembla, and Canada Melville Island; while our own Government will send out early in the Summer two expeditions, one to Lady Franklin Bay, under the command of Lieutenant Greeley, of the Signal Service Corps, and the other to Point Barrow, on the Northern coast of Alaska. It is also proposed, as a part of the Eastern American expedition, to explore the northern coast of Greenland for the purpose of settling the question as to whether that country is an island or a continent. The Signal Service will be strongly represented on both expeditions, special attention being given to meteorological observation.

The champion bee-keeper lives, very appropriately, in Beeton, Cal., and bears the not unfamiliar name of Jones. In the year 1879, from 300 colonies of bees he obtained 75,000 pounds of honey, and in 1880 from 400 colonies he obtained 20,000 pounds, worth $2000, and the latter was a bad year for honey. During the latter year he obtained 600 new colonies from the 400, and commences 1881 with 1000 colonies of bees, valued at $7000 independent of the cost of the hives. Mr. Jones says he will clear at least $10,000 this year unless some unforeseen accident occurs.

"Pa, what is ensilage?" "Why—h'm—ensilage, my son, is—ur—ensilage is—oh, something like mucilage, my son; something like mucilage; used to stick things together, you know. There now, run away to your play, and don't disturb me now." And that boy thinks his pa is a very encyclopædia of wisdom. Happy child! Ere many years have elapsed, the boy will think he knows everything and his pa nothing! Happy childhood! —Boston Transcript.

A lady who raised a large number of hens says that, after vainly trying the recommended remedies for lice, she has hit upon giving them once or twice a week a large loaf made of Graham flour, in which a handful of sulphur has been mixed. The hens like it and are freed from lice and kept healthy through the season.

The Oil City Derrick is the first in the field with its spring poem. It runs thuswise: "There came to our cabin one morning in spring, a sweet little robin—he came there to sing, but the cat was attentive, and watched from afar, till the robin all heedless was killed like a czar."

"Shet dat do', Sam." "Why, it ain't cold, marm." "Golly, you shet dat do', you brat; ob course it ain't cold, it's me dat's cold. Tink I care wedder's de do's cold or not?"

"Dis," remarked the negro at the table, as he pulled a string from the pudding, "is the thread of dis course."

MAKING THE ENDS MEET.

A perplexed young housekeeper of our acquaintance, whose pretty brow was most unbecomingly puckered over a wrong-sided balance-sheet of the family expenses, declared that the problem of "making the ends meet" almost outweighed the advantages of having a home of her own. Upon our mildly suggesting to her that perhaps the trouble came from the fact that her good man and herself were born with tastes that would do credit to a much larger income than they enjoyed, she replied that it didn't make any difference; if they had six thousand instead of two, she was sure it would all go. And very likely it would. A good many people have yet to learn the lesson of limiting their needs, and practicing the art of selection.

"A man has need," said the wise Bacon—whose practice, by the way, fell far behind his precepts—"if he be plentiful in some kind of expense, to be as saving again in some other: As, if he be plentiful in diet, to be saving in apparel, and the like; for he that is plentiful in expenses of all kinds will hardly be preserved from decay."

This indicates a line of conduct in which many persons of limited incomes are exceedingly thoughtless. If they choose to pay expensive rent rather than to live in a more modest way, they should accept this luxury as an equivalent for many that they are thereby compelled to forego. If they decide to dress, or furnish their table, on a scale suitable for persons with double their income, they should expect to give up the Summer trip, the concert and lecture tickets, the books and pictures which otherwise they might enjoy. There are people in our cities, with æsthetic tastes that they are not able to gratify, who will not only omit to mark out any rational lines of enjoyment, but think they must take in the world at a mouthful. In a city like our own, rich in intellectual entertainments, they act as if there were never another season coming. Oratorios, operas, plays, lectures, concerts, must all be taken in, or postponed under a bitter protest that brings unhappiness. The habit of a wise selection from each, and the reflection that though in one sense life is short, it still affords time enough for all rational enjoyment for those who know how to use their opportunities, would be worth more than a legacy to such people.

Be reasonable, first of all, good friends who are perplexed with such matters. Don't quarrel with the fact that two and two make only four, and that four will go into twelve but three times. And when you have reached this point of philosophy, add to your good sense clear calculation. Don't spend money thoughtlessly. Conform your ideas to the multiplication table, keep your tastes within your means, and put your purse in subjection to the lead-pencil, if you would preserve the peace of mind necessary to happiness in any state of life.—Golden Rule.

An unexplained objection to the electric light arises from its alleged evil effects on the eyes. European observers state that the frequent variations in intensity to which the light is subject give rise to sudden and frequent changes in the pupil, and consequently, in the "accommodation" of the eye, by which is meant that alternate contraction and dilation of the pupil, by which it suits itself to the variations of light. Such a light, therefore, causes not only muscular fatigue, but also a considerable degree of blurring and indistinctness in the retinal image. The eye suffers both when the light is too dim and when it is too bright. In the former case the object must be brought close to be clearly seen, and an increased accommodative effort is called for, which in most cases results in nearsightedness. In the latter case, the simple intensity of the light produces undue contraction of the pupil, and an increase of tension within the eye.

"What's the news?" asked Jones of Fogg, who had been pouring over the newspaper for half an hour. "News!" exclaimed Fogg. "Lots of it. A dozen or two miraculous cures by Abraham's Oil, a few testimonials for Jump Bitters, Pilgarlic's Persistent Pills and Uncans'Aboriginal Cureall. Then there are thrilling accounts of seventeen different kinds of pads for as many parts of the body, together with a miscellaneous assortment of absorbents, specifics, detergents, anti-scorbutics, reliefs, renovators and renewers. Oh! yes; lots of news. Paper running over with news."

Indications multiply daily of the great power of the press. The latest example is furnished in the case of a Montreal thief, who had secured a bundle of goods and thrown it out of the rear window of a store, and was about to follow, when a paragraph in a newspaper lying on the counter caught his eye. He stopped to read it, became absorbed, an alarm was raised and he was captured with the fascinating sheet in his hand.

She laid her head on the easy chairback against his head and murmured: "How I do love to rest thus against your dear head, Augustus!" "Do you?" said he; "is it because you love me, darling?" "No; because it is so nice and soft!" Then he lay and lay, and thought and thought.

SATURDAY, APRIL 30, 1881.

JAMES T. FIELDS of Boston, well known as a publisher, author and lecturer, died suddenly at his home on Sunday, at the age of 63.

THE Senatorial dead-lock at Washington still continues, but the Republicans are trying to find a way of having an executive session without seeming to back down, and the foolishness will probably end before long.

A BRONZE STATUE of the late Admiral Farragut was unveiled at Washington on Monday with imposing ceremonies. The statue and base cost $20,000, Vinnie Ream being the sculptor. Mrs. Farragut, Gen. Sherman, Gen. Grant and others are quite delighted with it, but the art critics, who were not consulted in choosing the design, profess to be disgusted with its appearance.

FLOODS are still devastating portions of the West, and causing an immense amount of damage. At Council Bluffs the river is some eight miles wide, and no trains can reach the city from any direction. At Kansas City thousands of tons of ice have been swept away, and some six thousand persons driven from their homes. At St. Paul the river is three feet eight inches above the danger line, and hundreds of houses are flooded. Similar reports are received from numerous points along the large rivers.

PRESIDENT GARFIELD is credited with the intention of pushing the investigation into the "star route" contracts of the post office department right through to the bottom, without regard to who may be involved in the frauds. He is ably seconded by Postmaster General James in this intention, and there is apparently a nest of rottenness in these contracts which needs uncovering and purifying. It is shown that the pay of 93 routes was increased from $727,110 in July, 1878, when they were let out, to $2,075,095 January 1, 1880. One route in the Indian Territory was swelled from $6000 to $150,000; one in Dakota from $2350 to $70,000; one in Wyoming from $11,000 to $90,000; one in Colorado from $380 to $8,133, and so on.

AT THE STATE HOUSE.

The House has slowed up a little in the raising of salaries, having refused to raise the salaries of the Secretary of State and Auditor from $2500 to $3000, or to make any change in the salary of the Hampden county judge of probate; but most of the bills for an increase have gone through, and on Tuesday the members were in such a generous mood that they voted $20,000 for the representation of the State at the Yorktown celebration next October, to be spent at the discretion of the Governor. This was double what the Governor asked for, and was so manifestly extravagant that the members repented on Wednesday, reconsidered the vote, and cut the amount down to $10,000.

The Senate on Monday unanimously rejected the resolve appropriating $1100 in favor of Hampshire county, for expenses incurred in arresting the Northampton bank robbers. The senators felt that the depositors who recovered their valuables should pay for pulling their chestnuts out of the fire, if anybody.

The trustees of the Agricultural College have succeeded in securing the defeat of the bill giving the alumni a representation in their board.

The House has engrossed the bill to relieve property from double taxation, by a strong vote.

The bill to prevent buildings being used by clubs for dispensing liquors without a license has passed both branches.

The House judiciary committee has been ordered to investigate the charge that certain employes of Fall River mills have been discharged for testifying before a House committee.

The new screen bill, forbidding the use of any screen, shutter, curtain, ground glass, or other obstacle to a full view of the business conducted in any licensed liquor saloon, has passed both branches.

The Senate will begin evening sessions next week, and the members are hoping to finish up their work and go home by the close of the week.

NEWS FRAGMENTS.

The New York world's fair project is on its last legs.

The Springfield aldermen have granted 67 liquor licenses, against 80 last year.

Emile de Girardin, the celebrated Parisian journalist, died Wednesday at the age of 79.

Ar Wing, a Springfield Chinaman, was killed by the cars at West Springfield on Monday.

A rapidly-spreading disease near Painesville, O., is pronounced to be genuine Asiatic cholera.

A boy named Walker was fatally kicked on Monday by a horse while plowing at West Brookfield.

Gov. Long is chairman of a Boston committee which asks for subscriptions for John Brown's widow.

The summer hotels will not employ college students as waiters this year. They do not give satisfaction.

A. B. Root has gone to Somers, Conn., this week, where he has a four or five months' job at house-building.

The hearing before the selectmen on the granting of liquor licenses takes place to-day at the town house, at 10 a. m.

The selectmen have extended the time for receiving proposals for building the road at Three Rivers, and will open them to-day.

Eighteen children were received at the State Primary School this week from Tewksbury, and last week sixteen were put out into places.

The selectmen have purchased for $200 the scraper which has been in use on the roads for two or three weeks, with very satisfactory results.

Henry Carroll of Ware has engage the room in Commercial Block formerly occupied as the express office, and will go into the beer bottling business there.

The ladies of the Congregational society will have their annual May breakfast in the vestry of their church to-day (Saturday), continuing from 6.30 a. m. to 3 p. m.

The base ball season was inaugurated last Saturday afternoon by a game between Josie Weeks's nine and the State Primary School boys, the former coming off victors, by a score of 20 to 10.

H. M. Stacy's seven-years-old daughter fell from a second-story window in his house at Tenneyville Tuesday evening, striking on her back, but it is thought that her injuries are not very serious.

The entire stock of groceries, clothing, boots and shoes, etc., belonging to the insolvent estate of W. J. McCormick of Thorndike, is to be sold at auction next Tuesday and Wednesday, at the store recently occupied by McCormick.

Geo. D. Keith, who has been behind the counter in J. B. Shaw's store for the past four years, goes into business for himself next week at Thorndike, opening a grocery, crockery and shoe store in the building recently occupied by W. J. McCormick.

J. F. Holbrook has sold his old coal sheds, at the junction of the B. & A. and N. L. N. railroads, to Edgerton & Davis, who will move them off, and the ground will be used for dumping coal for local delivery. The price of coal has dropped fifty cents a ton within a few days.

The ladies of the Congregational society have purchased of Jeweler Barton of this place twelve dozen each of Roger Bros.' knives, forks and spoons for use in their church entertainments, getting them at a better price here than they could obtain in Springfield.

Here is a suggestion for our Improvement Association: In several of the Western States an "arbor day" is set apart every Spring by the Governor, and devoted to the planting of trees along the highways. It would be a fine thing if our villagers would unite in a similar observance of such a day.

It will be remembered that last Winter the house of Mrs. Allen in Parksville (Brimfield) was robbed. Certain parties were suspected at the time, and their proceedings immediately after the affair closely watched. There is now understood to be what is considered strong evidence against them, and some arrests will probably be made soon.

The telephone company have put up several new posts in Main street this week, to support their wires, and are stretching the wires and putting in instruments for the subscribers, who now number eighteen. The company have decided to have their central office in a room by itself, and have engaged a room in Commercial block, over Brooks's jewelry store, for this purpose.

A colored boy of 17 from Monson named Wallace, was brought before the district court for drunkenness on Monday, but was released upon the payment of his $1 fine by a friend. He told the court that he got his liquor at J. P. Murphy's saloon, and Murphy was accordingly arrested on the charge of illegally selling liquor to a minor, but the hearing was postponed to next Tuesday. On Wednesday William M. Vallette of Brimfield was committed to the Worcester insane asylum by the court.

The United Workers gave their last entertainment for the season in Wales Hall Fast Day evening. This society of young ladies, with their gentlemen coadjutors, have raised during the last two seasons nearly $700, and placed in the church tower a most desirable bell. By a gift from S. W. French the deficit of about $25 needed after the entertainment to complete the bell fund was obtained, and all bills paid. The young ladies feel great gratitude for the help that has been extended to them on the part of the public, and they themselves are certainly deserving of great credit.

A special town meeting is to be held on Tuesday, May 10th, as will be seen from the warrant in another column. This meeting is called on the petition of several citizens of Three Rivers, friends of the old project of moving the school house in that village to the lot near the depot. The town having voted against this proposition, its friends now present it in a new form, proposing to sell the old school house, exchange lots with the Otis Co., and put up a new building, large enough for the requirements of the village, on the new lot.

The Boston & Albany freight engineers are not pleased with a new order in relation to their pay, which goes into effect May 1. At present the engineers all receive $100 per month, whether working or not, but by the new rule engineers on the through trains will be paid 3½ cents a mile, while others will be paid $3.84 per trip or at the rate of $100 if they run 26 trips a month. As some of the freight men average but 23 trips, though by no fault of their own, they claim that the enforcement of this order will practically reduce their pay from 15 to 20 per cent, and they have appealed to the superintendent for redress.

That ever-popular play, Uncle Tom's Cabin, will be again on the boards at Wales Hall tonight, and we are safe in saying that the hall will be filled to repletion, for the merits of Anthony & Ellis's company are already well-known here. No other play is so "taking" as this, and no other troupe that has visited Palmer has ever approached this one in the completeness and excellence of its presentation of it. The Memphis University students, the donkey "Pruno" and the Siberian bloodhounds are valuable aids in making this a realistic rendering of the play. Says the Lowell Courier, in speaking of their entertainment in that city: "It is a grand picture of moral beauty and vivid portrayal of virtue among the lowly and oppressed. Saint or sinner cannot help to be improved by witnessing its performance and gazing on its scenes of bewildering splendor and enchantment. It is reported that 3,042 tickets were sold. We only know that standing room was at a premium long before the hour of commencing."

At the adjourned meeting of citizens held in the district court room Monday evening, the committee appointed at Mr. Northrop's lecture last week reported a constitution for a village improvemont society, to be called "The Palmer Improvement Association," which was adopted, and the following officers were chosen: President, Dr. Wm. Holbrook; vice presidents, J. B. Shaw, J. H. Woolrich; secretary, S. H. Hellyar; treasurer, E. Brown; executive committee, R. L. Goddard, S. Ellis, Rev. B. M. Fullerton, Rev. C. H. Eaton, J. W. Weeks, C. B. Fisk, Dr. W. H. Stowe, H. H. Sanders, J. S. Holden, Mrs. S. S. Taft, Mrs. H. P. Holden, Mrs. J. F. Holbrook, Mrs. E. L. Davis, Mrs. A. H. Willis, Mrs. C. L. Gardner. The objects of the association, as set forth in its constitution, are "to cultivate public spirit, quicken the social life of the people, improve our streets and public grounds, and in general to build up and beautify the whole village." The annual membership fee is one dollar for adults, and twenty-five cents for persons under fifteen years of age, which sums may be paid in work under the direction of the executive committee. There is therefore no person so poor but that he or she may become a member of the association, while its objects are such as must meet the approval of every resident of the place, and ought to enlist the hearty co-operation and pecuniary support of every citizen. A meeting of the executive committee will be held at the district court room next Monday evening, at 7.30 o'clock, and it is hoped that every member of the committee will make it a point to be present.

Rev. C. H. Eaton, pastor of St. Paul's Universalist church, has received and accepted a call to the pastorate of the Church of the Divine Paternity, at Fifth avenue and Forty-fifth street, New York, to succeed the late Rev. Dr. E. H. Chapin, and will begin his new pastorate May 15th. The call is a unanimous one, with a salary of $6000, and though it is nominally for but one year, it is understood as a permanent settlement, Dr. Chapin having been hired in this manner from year to year for thirty years. Mr. Eaton is only 28 years of age, and this call to the leading pulpit of the denomination in New York is a flattering tribute to the reputation he has already acquired. Mr. Eaton supplied the pulpit of the Universalist church in this place from the time of its organization, five years ago, while he was completing his studies at Tufts Divinity School, and was ordained and installed pastor of the church June 29th, 1877. An elegant new church edifice was completed last year, at a cost, furnished, of about $25,000, which has all been paid. During this time Mr. Eaton has preached to a steadily-increasing congregation, which now averages nearly 250, while the accessions to the church have averaged a dozen or more annually. Mr. Eaton preaches without notes, is a pleasant and impressive speaker, and has for some time been regarded as one of the most promising young men in the denomination. His departure will be a grievous loss to his people, and many outside of his church will also greatly regret the removal of one who has shown himself so worthy a citizen in every respect, while all will unite in wishing him abundant success in his new field of labor.

BELCHERTOWN.

B. Butler has put a nice lot of carriages on sale at the old Packard stand on Depot street.

M. P. Walker has commenced grading and laying walks at his new residence on Main street.

A portion of the spire of the Methodist church has been removed, as it was considered unsafe by competent judges.

The house formerly owned by Abel Ames is undergoing thorough repairs, and will be occupied as soon as completed by S. W. Longley.

WARREN.

Ambrose Bliss fell from a load of wood last week, fracturing his wrist.

The Georgia Minstrels gave an entertainment at the town hall Wednesday evening.

Several new books have been added to the library, and will soon be ready for circulation.

Representative Gilbert has been home for a few days, on account of having a slight attack of diphtheria.

Rev. Mr. Perkins preached a temperance sermon last Sabbath at the Congregational church, in exchange with Rev. Mr. Forbes.

A. L. Converse has laid the foundation for a new barn near his residence, and Fred Kimball is putting on an addition to his house.

An attempt was made to enter the store of Mr. Rockwood one night last week, but the burglars were frightened away by a pistol shot from within.

The town voted on Saturday to build an addition to the present school house in the village, instead of placing a new house on High street, and appropriated $2000 for that purpose.

INDIAN ORCHARD.

Getting married is the fashion since Lent.

Dr. E. D. Chapman has in a new $700 soda fountain.

John Rivers and a former clerk of his, Mr. Tredean, are soon to open a grocery in Three Rivers.

The Ancient Order of Hibernians have appointed a committee to arrange for a picnic June 18.

William Kent, for years a well-known contractor and builder, died at his home on Monday night.

Prof. Sullivan, who conducts a singing school in the old school house, has now about 35 pupils, who are making fine progress.

The evangelical Sunday school will reorganize next Sunday, and the annual business meeting of the society is to be held Monday night.

Nearly all the employes of the Chapman Valve Mfg. Co. have petitioned the superintendent to change the hours of work so that the 60 hours per week may be made up at an early hour Saturdays.

Morris Barnes, having procured a license to sell beer, wine, ale and lager, is soon to fix up his Indian Orchard House, and will arrange for a barber shop in connection with it. Only two first-class licenses have been granted in the Orchard, to Samuel Pease and Chas. Grise. Three others, Chapman and Morse, druggists' license, and Barnes as above, were granted.

THREE RIVERS.

Holden Bros. have staked out ground for two new houses on the street leading to the Burns place.

Dr. Ruggles proposes to have a private telephone line from Thorndike to his office in this village.

Rev. T. C. Russell's little daughter Daisy, two years old, got hold of a bottle of vitriol last Sunday and spilled some of it on her clothing, burning one leg, from the hip down, so seriously that it is feared she may not recover.

J. H. Thayer has bought out Eli Smith's interest in the store of J. H. Thayer & Co., and Mr. Thayer will continue the business alone.

Mrs. C. C. Cobb, mother of Rev. Frank W. Cobb, late pastor of the Union church, is spending a few days with friends in this village.

John Rivers' new store is up, and will soon be filled with goods.

Capt. P. P. Potter is to build a new block on the Palmer road, near the Union chapel.

The union church will have a baptismal service next Sabbath morning at their usual hour of meeting, provided the weather is pleasant. The ordinance will be administered in the river south of the church. At 3 p. m. the regular communion service will be observed in the church, when they hope to receive twenty new members to their communion, sixteen on profession of faith and four by letter. If it should be unpleasant weather both services will be postponed one week, and preaching will occur as usual in the morning.

MONSON.

H. A. Rindge is building a commodious barn, 40 by 75 feet.

Gage Bros. offer special attractions in the boot and shoe line.

The Harmony Society have two more rehearsals before closing for the season.

John M. Phipps has charge of the music at the Congregational church the present year.

St. Patrick's choir will present the "Flower Queen" at Central Hall next Monday evening.

The Monson House has a new coat of paint, which decidedly improves its outward appearance.

A photograph saloon occupies a large share of Main street just south of Gage Bros'. store.

Several of the Sportsmen's club visited the New York dog show the present week, and speak of it as "large."

Callendar's Georgia Minstrels had a good house at Central Hall Thursday evening, and gave a good entertainment.

Landlord Robbins had his usual success with his ball last week Friday evening, and all enjoyed themselves hugely.

The selectmen have organized with R. S. Munn for chairman. The school committee chose Rev. C. A. Merrill chairman, and John M. Phipps clerk.

A "whaling great trotter" is expected from the west in a few days, also a pair of Maine flyers. Good chance for them to raise the dust on Main street these days.

The Village Improvement Society is officered as follows: President, S. F. Cushman; vice president, C. W. Holmes, Jr.; secretary, W. K. Flynt; treasurer, F. E. Morris; auditor, E. F. Morris; directors, Geo. L. Fuller, A. A. Gage, B. A. Day, A. D. Norcross, C. H. McMaster, Mrs H. Lyon, Mrs. N. M. Field, Mrs. Chas. Fowler, Mrs. A. L. Calkins, Miss Lizzie J. Topliffe.

BRIMFIELD.

Editor Journal: —Brimfield again seems to be involved in another warfare. This time the post office is the casus belli. The facts elicited are as follows: Some time ago Mrs. Lizzie Wyles Converse purchased from James T. Brown the property where he has until recently carried on the grocery and general merchandise business, her object being to place John F. Converse in said building and business. The post office is in the same building, of which Henry F. Brown is postmaster. At time of sale it was understood as part of the transaction that when Converse came to occupy the premises, Henry F. Brown would resign the position of postmaster in his favor, and use every possible means to have him retained in said office. A short time since James T. Brown moved out and Converse took possession—then Postmaster Brown began to consider the feasibility of a resignation. The citizens of the town becoming cognizant of the above facts—and inasmuch as Converse was "not wanted," not only because he was a Butler Democrat and no man for the position, but also on account of inexperience, inefficiency and general reasons—they expressed much indignation, and denounced the scheme, if carried out, as a fraud, and in direct violation of their rights and interests. Immediately a petition was put in circulation with the name of Charles A. Homer for the office of postmaster, in opposition to J. F. Converse, and as Mr. Homer is a gentleman whose moral character is above reproach, and a straightforward, honest man, the petition was pretty generally signed Meanwhile Postmaster Brown saw which way the wind was blowing, "dead against" his patron, and concluded to reconsider his resignation, which he is now doing. The friends of Mr. Homer do not propose to remain silent and thereby seem to assent to any attempt to deprive them of their privileges as citizens, but shall continue to urge his claims for the office of postmaster. * *

BONDVILLE.

The pews in the Methodist church were sold last Monday night.

The Duncan house is to be moved a few rods south of its present site.

Shea & Moriarty intend to move into their new store on North Main street next week.

Merrick Whitney is constructing a new road on his grounds west of the depot, which will open a number of building lots.

Wm. Duncan has contracted with Belchertown parties to build his house and barn on his lot south of the village for about $2000.

The contractors who are to build the bridge for the Mass. Central Railroad across Swift river, just north of this village, expect to commence work in one or two weeks.

Nathan Bond of Tylerville had his barn, a quantity of hay, harness, tools, etc., burned early last Sunday night. Cause of the fire unknown.

A lady in this village 74 years of age, evidently believes that a person is never too old to learn, as she is just acquiring the art of crocheting.

George Canterbury and John Hayes have recently purchased building lots west of the depot, of Merrick Whitney, and are putting in foundations for new houses.

It is understood that the Boston Duck Co. have decided to build their new factory on the Palmer side of the river; therefore no more castle building for our Belchertown neighbors.

Thomas Flaherty, employed in one of the weaving rooms of the Boston Duck Co. the past ten years, has left his position, and was presented with a gold chain, locket and charm by the weavers in his department.

D. L. Clark, a valued correspondent of the JOURNAL, who has kept the Duck Co's. boarding house for the past six years, will remove to Meriden, Conn., in two or three weeks, having engaged to take charge of a large boarding house, store and market at that place for the Meriden Woolen Co.

The recent sale of the parsonage leaves the Methodist minister without house or home, there not being an unoccupied tenement in the village. The Methodist society are accordingly making an effort to raise money to build a parsonage. Twelve hundred dollars have been already subscribed, including the land.

WARE AND VICINITY.

G. K. Cutler has an apricot tree in blossom, which has been mistaken for an apple tree. Not quite time for apple blossoms yet.

The pay roll of the Otis company was the largest, at the last settlement, the 20th inst., that they have ever had, being in round numbers $33,700.

Runaways seem to be the fashion now-a-days. On Saturday afternoon F. C. Blood's express team, which he had left for a moment on North street, ran to Main street, where it came in collision with G. W. Cobb's 2-horse bread team from Palmer. One of the horses was thrown down and had a leg broken, so that it had to be killed the same evening. Fred Blood has expressed a willingness to do the square thing as to damages, which we understand were placed at $150, which is thought by some to be rather high considering the circumstances. On Wednesday morning R. C. Snow's two-horse meal team ran down Bank street, fetching up against the corner of the Hampshire House, overturning an old horse and buggy which stood in their way, but strange as it may seem not a dollar of damage was done.

Milwaukee, Wis., had snow drifts 14 feet high last week.

An old scow which had been impressed into use as a ferry boat at Elgin, Ill., the bridge across Fox river having been carried away, capsized and sank Thursday, and about a dozen of the thirty persons on board were drowned.

The health officers of Chicago declare the lake water unfit for drinking unless it has been boiled, the recent floods having carried the foul and decaying matter from the river far into the lake, fouling and polluting the source of supply.

They take those beautiful life-size solar photographs at Moffitt's studio, Springfield.

Steinway and Sons warrant each piano for five years. Sold by Stimpson, the one-price dealer of Springfield.

The best hard wood mantels we have seen are those made at Joyce's factory, corner Taylor and Dwight streets, Springfield.

Silks are offered as well as dress goods at such prices, in another column, by Smith & Murray of Springfield, that many ladies will wish to go there.

Ladies who appreciate elegance and purity are using Parker's Hair Balsam. It is the best article sold for restoring gray hair to its original color and beauty. 5w6

Dyspepsia in its worst forms will yield to the use of Carter's Little Nerve Pills aided by Carter's Little Liver Pills. They not only relieve present distress, but strengthen the stomach and digestive apparatus. 2w5

Many ladies would like to know where they can get combings or old switches made over in a thorough manner. To such we would say that we have seen very excellent work that came from C. D. Ferre's 372 Main street, Springfield.

C. N. Stimpson, 396 Main street, Springfield, has now on exhibition a new patent Parlor Grand Steinway Piano, which he invites the public to call and examine. It is truly a wonderful instrument, and is eliciting the admiration of the first musicians of that city.

I have no hesitation in certifying to the absolute purity of "G. O. Taylor Old Bourbon" Whiskey (obtained for analysis at random from leading druggists), as bottled by Messrs. Chester H. Graves & Sons, Boston.

H. L. BOWKER, State Assayer, Mass.

Foster, Babbitt & Chapin, "the three clothiers" of Springfield, are giving special attention to the fitting of their goods, and beside the regular sizes they have each size in long for the slim man, and stout for the large. This being a new house the styles may be relied upon as the latest, while their prices on boys' and children's suits are specially low.

INVALUABLE FOR RAILROAD MEN.—"I suffered for more than a year with indigestion, and during the last six months I was very bilious, occasionally having a dumb chill, followed by fevers, which prostrated me. I took Simmons Liver Regulator, and for several months I have been as stout and hearty as any man could desire to be. I am thoroughly satisfied that it is all it is recommended to be for indigestion and bilious complaints, for mine was certainly a stubborn case. I have heard many of my friends speak of it, and all agree that it possesses all the virtues you claim for it. A. H. TOWER, Cond tor M. and W. R. R."

It is generally admitted that the best carpet store in Springfield is that of Tinkham & Co. They have just received new styles of Moquette first ever shown in full stock in that city. Bigelow Brussels, best styles. Lowell and Hartford Brussels in patterns exclusively for their trade. Roxbury tapestries and Lowell extra superfines of the very best patterns. Among these are styles never before offered. Hartford extra superfines and an immense stock of low-priced carpets. They have rugs, mats, center pieces, sofa rugs, china mattings, oil cloths, linoleum. Their prices are so low that they cannot be undersold. They put down carpets and warrant their work.

Itching Piles—Symptoms and Cure.

The symptoms are moisture, like perspiration, intense itching, increased by scratching, very distressing, particularly at night, as if pin worms were crawling in and about the rectum; the private parts are sometimes affected; if allowed to continue very serious results may follow. "DR. SWAYNE'S ALL HEALING OINTMENT" is a pleasant, sure cure. Also for Tetter, Itch, Salt Rheum, Scald Head, Erysipelas, Barbers' Itch, Blotches, all Scaly, Crusty, Cutaneous Eruptions. Price 50 cents; 3 boxes for $1.25. Sent by mail to any address on receipt of price in currency or three-cent postage stamps. Prepared only by Dr. Swayne & Son, 330 North Sixth St., Philadelphia, Pa., to whom letters should be addressed. Sold by all prominent druggists. 1y43

HAVE Wistar's Balsam of Wild Cherry always at hand. It cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis, Whooping Cough, Croup, Influenza, Consumption and all Throat and Lung Complaints. 50 cents and $1 a bottle. †

THE Peruvian Syrup has cured thousands who were suffering from Dyspepsia, Debility, Liver Complaint, Boils, Humors, Female Complaints, etc. Pamphlets sent free to any address. Seth W. Fowle & Sons, Boston. †

CATARRH is a poisonous infection of the mucous membrane, just as small pox is a virus of the blood. Catarrhal virus can be only reached and exterminated by antidotal, inoculative elements, that are absorbed by the purulent mucous. DR. WEI DE MEYER'S CATARRH CURE is unquestionably the most important medical discovery since vaccination. It never fails. Supplied by druggists, or delivered by D. B. Dewey, 46 Dey street, N. Y., at $1.50 a package. Pamplets, with full explanations, mailed free. 1m6

CENTAUR LINIMENT.—Invaluable to families and owners of horses. For sale everywhere.

CASTORIA.—For sour stomach, constipation, and fretfulness of children. Pleasant, safe and cheap. 900 drops; 35 doses, 35 cents.

ASH-TONIC.—A perfected purifier of the system. in ½ lb. bottles, 75 cents. For Dyspepsia, the many forms of Liver Complaint, Impure and Impoverished Blood, and Functional Derangements attendant upon Debility. For symptoms indicated by Indigestion, Loss of Appetite, Nausea, Sick Headache, Sour Stomach, Furred Tongue, Drowsiness, Blanched Lips, Sallow Complexion, Pain in the Side or Back, Eruptions, Depression of Spirits, Nervous Irritability and Hysteria, and for Building up the System, Ash-Tonic is unquestionably the most prompt and energetic remedy yet devised. 1y46

RESCUED FROM DEATH.—The following statement of William J. Coughlin of Somerville, Mass., is so remarkable that we beg leave to ask for it the attention of our readers. He says: "In the Fall of 1876 I was taken with a violent bleeding of the lungs followed by a severe cough. I soon began to lose my appetite and flesh. I was so weak at one time that I could not leave my bed. In the Summer of 1877 I was admitted to the City Hospital. While there the doctors said I had a hole in my left lung as big as a half dollar. I expended over a hundred dollars in doctors and medicines. I was so far gone at one time a report went around that I was dead. I gave up hope, but a friend told me of DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS. I laughed at my friends, thinking my case was incurable, but I got a bottle to satisfy them, when to my surprise and gratification I commenced to feel better. My hope, once dead, began to revive, and to-day I feel in better spirits than I have for the past three years.

"I write this hoping you will publish it, so that every one afflicted with diseased lungs will be induced to take DR. WM. HALL'S BALSAM FOR THE LUNGS, and be convinced that CONSUMPTION CAN BE CURED. I have taken two bottles, and can positively say that it has done more good than all the other medicines I have taken since my sickness. My cough has almost entirely disappeared and I shall soon be able to go to work." Sold by druggists. 4—6

TOWN WARRANT.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.
HAMPDEN SS.—To H. A. Northrop, Constable of the town of Palmer, Greeting:

In the name of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, you are hereby directed to notify and warn all inhabitants of the town of Palmer qualified to vote in elections and town affairs to meet at the Town House in said Palmer, on Tuesday, the 10th day of May, prox., at two o'clock p. m., to act on the following articles, viz:

Article 1.—To choose a moderator to preside at said meeting.

Art. 2.—To see if the town will vote to build a school house at Three Rivers on the vacant lot at the east end of the common, substantially like plans now in the hands of the school committee, and provide money for the same.

Art. 3.—To see if the town will dispose of the present school house and exchange lots with the Otis Co., and authorize the treasurer to convey the same.

Art. 4.—To see if the town will discontinue about fifteen rods of road between the common and the railroad.

Art. 5.—To choose committees and give them instructions.

And you are hereby directed to serve this warrant by posting up attested copies thereof at the different public places designated by vote of the town, seven days at least before the holding of said meeting, and cause this warrant to be printed in the Palmer Journal, at least two issues before the holding of said meeting. Hereof fail not, and make due return of this warrant, with your doings thereon, to the Town Clerk, on or before the time of said meeting.

Given under our hands this 28th day of April, A. D. 1881.

The Hammock.

In the purple-tinted twilight
  Dreamily she swung, my love, my queen,
In the west some streak of high light
  Lighted up the scene.

Oh, the hammock held her closely
  In its stupid, senseless cord embrace,
And I wished I might jocosely
  Take the hammock's place.

One small foot—the meshes show it—
  Slender, graceful, arched, I saw it well;
She, poor darling, didn't know it,
  And I didn't tell.

And a fountain unassuming
  Rippled near at hand its life away;
Flowers were blooming and perfuming
  In its gentle spray.

So I swung her in the twilight,
  While we watched the coming of the stars,
In the dusk no light but my light,
  Rather my cigar's.

All is past now. In the attic
  Hangs the hammock, damaged a good deal
By a hole, large and erratic,
  Made by her French heel.

Dead is each flower which once so lightly
  Held toward the spray its little cup,
And the fountain, once so sprightly,
  Now is frozen up.

And the girl, the lovely vision,
  Whom to think of yet my poor heart melts,
Early came to the decision
  To wed some one else.

TIGHT LACING.

Any woman is too tightly dressed who cannot raise her arms straight up above her head and clasp her hands; who cannot stoop to tie up her shoe, or pick up a pin, without heightened color. Yet probably not a dozen of our acquaintances can do this. Stupid as is the mistake of the tight shoe, it is wisdom compared with tight lacing, which, less painful, is more unrelentingly indulged, and like a painless poison saps the beauty, the grace, the life, from its unfortunate victim.

We would like to convince every woman in the land that a small waist is unbeautiful. Look at the Greek statues. We have no more perfect standard for beauty. Imagine what they would be had they worn a tight corset. Why, we should turn away our eyes, shocked at the painful angular lines that would replace the graceful majesty of those flowing curves.

And this is not all that may be said against tight lacing as a destroyer of beauty. It ruins the digestion and the circulation, and consequently the complexion. Now we all know that a beautiful complexion is one of the greatest feminine charms. An ugly woman is made beautiful by it, and a handsome woman is often hid beneath an ugly complexion.—Harper's.

Umbrella flirtation: To place your umbrella in a rack indicates that it is about to change owners. An umbrella carried over the woman, the man getting nothing but the drippings of the rain, signifies courtship. When the man has the umbrella and the woman the drippings it indicates marriage. To carry it at right angles under your arm signifies that an eye is to be lost by the man who follows you. To put a cotton umbrella by the side of a nice silk one signifies "exchange is no robbery." To lend an umbrella indicates "I am a fool." To carry an open umbrella just high enough to tear out men's eyes and knock off men's hats signifies "I am a woman."

What is that which has three feet, but no legs, is all body, but no limbs, has no toes on its feet, no head, moves a great deal, and never uses its feet for that purpose, has one foot at each end, and the other in the center of its body? This is a queer creature in some respects, and is very popular among the ladies, and some men. It never walks out, but goes with one foot where its head might be, dragging the other foot behind. These feet have nails, but no toes, no heels, and no bones in the foot.—A yard measure.

"Oh, dear," sighed Miss Fitzroy, as she yawned wearily, "there isn't anything to occupy one's mind now. I've made toilet cushions and tidies, and embroidered slippers and painted majolica jars until I'm weary of life. I believe I'll go down into the kitchen and watch Jane make bread. I suppose I ought to know how many pints of yeast it takes to a loaf." And she penetrated the business part of the house only to find out that bread was "raised" out of the baker's cart.

"Queen's hair," "stifled sighs," "indiscreet murmurs," "vain desires," "heavy eyes" and "needless regrets" are the singular names of the new colors in Paris this Spring. By another year we may expect milliners and dressmakers to add to their absurd terminology such other titles as "emperor's whisker," "subdued yawns," "ill-advised complaints," "unsatisfied cravings," "frost-bitten noses" and "unavailable cryings over spilled milk."

Do not spend your time in talking scandal; you sink your own moral natures by so doing, and you are, perhaps, doing great injustice to those about whom you talk. You probably don't understand the circumstances. Were they understood, you would be more lenient.

Professor (to student who writes not for the masses, but for the educated few): "You should write so that the most ignorant of your audience can understand all you can say." Student (puzzled): "What part of my production is not clear to you, sir?"

Seek not to please the world, but your own conscience. The man who has a feeling within him that he has done his duty upon every occasion is far happier than he who hangs upon the smiles of the great, or the still more fickle favors of the multitude.

Blessed are the poor in furniture, for they will get moved cheap.

Hundreds of men, women and children rescued from beds of pain, sickness and almost death and made strong and hearty by Parker's Ginger Tonic are the best evidences in the world of its sterling worth. You can find these in every community. —Post. See advertisement. 5w6

WILL IT CURE ME?

Said a man whose woebegone countenance and broken-down constitution plainly showed traces of disease—a sufferer with Nervous Dyspepsia, in whose stomach the most delicate morsel lay like lead. Refreshing sleep and quiet nerves were strangers to him, and he despaired of ever being well.

We advised him to take

Simmons Liver Regulator,

which he did, and in a short time was not only relieved but cured.

Reader, if you are suffering with Dyspepsia or Liver Disease in any form, do not wait until the disease has taken a fast hold upon you, but use the Regulator when the symptoms first show themselves. It has relieved untold suffering. SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR is not an alcoholic stimulant, but a PURELY VEGETABLE REMEDY that will cure when everything else fails. It is a faultless family medicine. Does not disarrange the system. Is no violent drastic purge, but nature's own remedy. The friend of everyone, and will not disappoint you. A single trial will convince you that it is the cheapest, purest and best Family Medicine in the world.

ASK the recovered dyspeptics, bilious sufferers, victims of fever and ague, the mercurial diseased patient how they recovered their health, cheerful spirits and good appetite--they will tell you by taking Simmons Liver regulator.

DOCUMENT:

Messrs. SEABURY & JOHNSON, Manufacturing Chemists, 21 Platt St., New York:

Gentlemen.—For the past few years we have sold various brands of Porous Plasters.—Physicians and the public prefer BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER to all others. We consider them one of the very few reliable household remedies worthy of confidence. They are superior to all other Porous Plasters or Liniments for external use.

BENSON'S CAPCINE PLASTER is a genuine Pharmaceutical product, of the highest order of merit, and so recognized by physicians and druggists.

When other remedies fail, get a Benson's Capcine Plaster.

MAKE NO DELAY,

Meaning You.

The months of March, April and May are the three arches of the bridge which binds the season of ice to that of roses. Therefore Spring is a trying period for invalids. Indications of disease should now be heeded at once. If you are vexed with indigestion, disordered Liver or Kidneys, want of appetite, constipation of the bowels or feverish skin, take Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy without an hour's delay. It is mild, quick and positive in its action. Keep it in the house when you are at home, and take it with you on journeys; you have no better friend.

It adapts itself to the common ills of every day, and should be found in every family where this journal is read. What Favorite Remedy is recommended to do it will do. Ask your druggist for it. But little money is wanted; only One Dollar a bottle.

"Favorite Remedy" is the friend of childhood and should be found in every nursery in the land. Keep it in the house for your children's sake as well as your own. For women who suffer from any of the ills peculiar to the sex, Favorite Remedy proves a real blessing. Try it, and you will be glad you saw this article. Make no mistakes. The medicine is "Favorite Remedy," and the proprietor's name and address: Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y.

Patients living at a distance (except in surgical cases,) by sending a statement of their case can be treated at home.

BOWKER'S

HILL AND DRILL

PHOSPHATE.

SEND FOR PAMPHLET.

This is a bone superphosphate, and may be used on any crop, in the hill or drill or broadcast, either with or without manure, and will produce a much earlier and larger crop. In the report of the Massachusetts Inspector of Fertilizers, its valuation is from $3 to $10 per ton higher than other Phosphates which sell at the same price. The past year over 3000 tons were sold against 100 tons three years ago, showing that it is liked by the farmers. If there is no local agent near you send to us.

Also for sale STOCKBRIDGE MANURES.

TOWN WARRANT.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS. HAMPDEN SS.—To H. A. Northrop, Constable of the town of Palmer, Greeting:

In the name of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, you are hereby directed to notify and warn all inhabitants of the town of Palmer qualified to vote in elections and town affairs to meet at the Town House in said Palmer, on Tuesday, the 10th day of May, prox., at two o'clock p. m., to act on the following articles, viz:

Article 1.—To choose a moderator to preside at said meeting.

Art. 2.—To see if the town will vote to build a school house at Three Rivers on the vacant lot at the east end of the common, substantially like plans now in the hands of the school committee, and provide money for the same.

Art. 3.—To see if the town will dispose of the present school house and exchange lots with the Otis Co., and authorize the treasurer to convey the same.

Art. 4.—To see if the town will discontinue about fifteen rods of road between the common and the railroad.

Art. 5.—To choose committees and give them instructions.

And you are hereby directed to serve this warrant by posting up attested copies thereof at the different public places designated by vote of the town, seven days at least before the holding of said meeting, and cause this warrant to be printed in the Palmer Journal, at least two issues before the holding of said meeting. Hereof fail not, and make due return of this warrant, with your doings thereon, to the Town Clerk, on or before the time of said meeting.

Given under our hands this 28th day of April, A. D. 1881.

SOME beautiful FLORAL TABLETS FOR CHILDREN, At WHITE'S MARBLE AND GRANITE WORKS, Thorndike St., Palmer, Mass.

Riding Down.

O did you see him riding down,
And riding down, while all the town
Came out to see, came out to see,
And all the bells were mad with glee?

O did you hear those bells ring out,
The bells ring out, the people shout,
And did you hear that cheer on cheer
That over all the bells rang clear?

And did you see the waving flags,
The fluttering flags, the tattered flags,
Red, white and blue, shot through and through,
Baptized with battle's deadly dew?

And did you hear the drums beat gay,
The drums beat gay, the bugles sweet,
The cymbal's clash, the cannon's crash,
That rent the sky with sound and flash?

And did you see me waiting there,
Just waiting there and watching there,
One little lass among the mass
That pressed to see the hero pass?

And did you see him smiling down,
And smiling down as riding down,
With slowest pace, with stately grace,
He caught the vision of a face—

My face, uplifted red and white,
Turned red and white, with sheer delight
To meet the eyes, the smiling eyes,
Outflashing in their swift surprise?

O did you see how swift it came,
How swift it came with sudden flame,
That smile to me, to only me—
That little lass who blushed to see?

And at the windows all along,
O all along, a lovely throng
Of faces fair, beyond compare,
Beamed out upon him, riding there!

Each face was like a radiant gem,
A sparkling gem, and yet for them
No swift smile came with sudden flame,
No arrowy glance took certain aim.

He turned away from all their grace,
From all that grace of perfect face,
He turned to me, to only me,
The little lass who blushed to see.

HOW SHE MARRIED FOR MONEY.

Addie Arlington looked at herself in the mirror, and then turned away with a little smile of satisfaction, that rippled over into a joyous laugh as she caught her cousin Ellie's eyes.

"You are thinking that I am as vain as a peacock, aren't you, Ellie? Well, I do look well, don't I? And I'm awfully glad of it, because, cousin mine, it will be all the easier to come off victorious in the campaign I have laid out for myself during my three months' visit to you."

She spoke with a charming frankness that made Miss Nelliston smile back in the lovely, girlish face.

"And what may your plans be, Addie? Of course it is a settled question that you shall take New York by storm. You know of course, also, that your pretty face will secure that happiness to you. But farther than that, what, little mischief maker?"

She looked fondly, proudly, at Addie, whose dusky eyes were glowing like stars.

"Oh, only my arrangements for the chief end of woman—marriage! I tell you, Ellie, I am going to make hay while the sun shines—in other words while I am in New York I am going to secure some rich—oh, some awfully rich fellow, who can just cover me with diamonds and dresses, and give me all the money I want—enough to buy everything I can think of!"

Miss Nelliston laughed at the girl's enthusiasm.

"You rapacious little cormorant! You certainly have erected a very ambitious standard, but I cannot see who or where the desirable party is. I am quite sure you deserve just what you want, dear, but the question is, can you get it?"

Addie shrugged her pretty shoulders.

"Ellie, I shall get it! I know just my own worth. Now don't put me down as a vain, silly creature, because I frankly admit myself as good looking and quite desirable for a wife generally. I am fairly good-natured, am I not, Ellie? and I ought to have a good husband, oughtn't I?"

She leaned her soft, fair cheek caressingly on Miss Nelliston's face.

"Indeed you ought, my darling. And if I could I would conjure one to order for you. Addie, you are beautiful enough to win the highest and best in the land."

And she was very beautiful—and all the more so that she was not in the least vain of her charms.

Standing there beside the dressing mirror, in her evening dress of delicate pink, with her fair, white arms bared just below the dimpled elbow, the dainty hands cased in creamy kids, the joyous, happy face, whose features were so exquisite, whose complexion was so richly warm and satiny in its pale brunette beauty, whose eyes were so deeply dark and lustrous and eager, Addie Arlington was certainly sweet enough and winning enough to warrant Miss Nelliston's loving assertion.

"If only there was anybody rich enough, in or about New York, unmarried, to satisfy you, child."

Addie laughed.

"I'll tell you a secret, Ellie. I'm going to take my fort by storm; and when you see me the betrothed bride of an English milord, Ellie—"

Miss Nelliston gave a gasp of positive horror at the girl's audacity.

"Addie Arlington, you don't mean you actually have designs on the illustrious guest that the Van Rensellaers are expecting—the English nobleman all New York is on the qui vive about?"

The girl's silvery laugh accompanied a very defiant positive shake of her silken skirts, as if that graceful little gesture added incontrovertible emphasis.

"Exactly, cousin Ellie. You needn't look so horrified, I'm sure the prospect of having a Lady Grosvenor in the family ought to delight you."

But Miss Nelliston was too much taken aback to appreciate the prospective honor.

"Addie, how wild you talk! The idea! Why, you have never seen him; you don't know whether he is young or old, a gentleman or—a—not a gentleman. Suppose he is old, and fat, and ugly, and short breathed like papa's British friend, Sir William Wiggleton?"

"The charming estate everybody knows Lord Grosvenor owns, and his rent-roll of a hundred thousand dollars a year, and his wonderful mine in Wales, and his treasures of costly elegance in his town house in Park Lane, and his country houses in Sussex and Cornwall, will cure all those defects, Ellie. Come, we'll be late at Jennie Jernyngham's, and you know Jennie always expects me to be first of any one."

"And so does Jennie's brother. I am ready, Addie."

The music was playing a lovely fantasie, in low, softly delicious chords, and dozens of couples were promenading the suites of rooms, Addie Arlington and Fred Jernyngham among them, and the young gentleman evidently not delightfully interested in the tenor of the young lady's animated conversation.

"Why, he's the handsomest man I ever saw in my life! Of course, I'll except you, Fred!" and the pearly teeth twinkled in a smile for a second. "But I want to hear his name. I want to know all about him, Fred; is he rich?"

It is impossible for the matter-of-fact young Jernyngham to understand whether or not Addie was in earnest.

"His name is—Melton, and I know nothing about him, except that he is a member of an engineer corps at present in the city. I don't see what there is about him so remarkably handsome."

He glared at the unconscious target of his and Addie's eyes with a scowl that delighted her.

"You're not to be supposed to see any masculine attraction beyond your own, Freddie. But if he's only an engineer—hark! that's our waltz."

And off they glided, a faint blush on Addie's cheeks, as Mr. Melton's handsome blue eyes caught hers and held them a moment, despite herself.

That was the way it began; and a month later, when New York society was stirred to its soul by the deferred advent of Lord Cuthbert Grosvenor, Miss Nelliston wondered why it was that Addie's enthusiasm had so completely died out.

"You're a mystery to me, Addie," she said, as they drove home from the crush at Mrs. Van Rensellaer's on the occasion of Lord Grosvenor's complimentary reception.

And for the first time Addie's reply was a little sharp.

"I don't see where the mystery is, I am sure. Whatever there is about a little, fat, bald-headed old man to admire I can't see."

"But he's a lord, all the same, Addie."

"No, it's not all the same at all, Ellie! How insufferably hot the rooms were to-night. I have the most wretched headache."

The next afternoon a magnificent coach and pair, with the armorial bearings of the house of Silverland—Lord Grosvenor's illustrious family—with coachman and footman, in his lordship's livery of silver and maroon, drew up at Miss Nelliston's door, and a fat, puffy old gentleman descended, to pay his compliments to the prettiest girl of the night before—the only girl who had at all interested him—Addie Arlington.

After that—well, Ellie hardly knew Addie, so variable and capricious she grew; now in the wildest spirits, again dejected and petulant; until one day there came, by one of the liveried servants, a written proposal of marriage, on a satiny sheet of paper, beafing a crest and a monogram in silver and maroon, and signed in a little crabbed spidery hand "Grosvenor"—a letter that offered her, in a very gentlemanly, unenthusiastic way, all the grand, good things that it had been her sole aim in life to possess and enjoy.

While by mail, not ten minutes later, had come another letter that had made the girl's heart thrill and all her pulses stir, as she read the passionate prayer for herself to be given to the man who loved her—Philip Melton, with his handsome face and his salary as an engineer.

For several hours Ellie wondered what Addie was doing so long alone in her room; and then, by-and-by, she came softly down stairs, a sweet flush on her face, a tender pride in her eyes, a thrill of perfect content in her voice.

"Ellie, dear, I want to tell you. I have refused Lord Grosvenor's offer of marriage, and—accepted Philip."

And without a question, Ellie put her arms about the slight form and kissed her.

"You have done right," she said, simply, gravely.

"If you will permit me, might I ask why you decline my offer?" Lord Grosvenor said, an hour later, when, her gentle refusal having reached him by messenger, he post-hasted to the house.

And Addie's lips trembled with actual happiness as she answered, with a sweetness that was charming:

"Because, sir, I—I loved Mr. Melton best. You won't be angry?"

"Mr. Melton! A fellow on a salary!"

"Pardon me, my lord—a gentleman, rich in nobility, in goodness, and in love for me."

"Oh, that's it! But about the money? Miss Arlington, there is not a wish in the world that shall remain a moment ungratified, that money can procure, if you will honor me."

"I shall only want what Philip can give me, sir."

His kindly eyes twinkled good naturedly.

"Then, Miss Arlington, am I to consider your answer absolute? You positively decline to become Lady Grosvenor, to live at Silverland Park, to be a leader of London society?"

"I am sure I have decided. I thank you for the great honor you have paid me—I shall be proud of it all my life—but I cannot because I love Philip Melton more than all the world and what is in it."

"Addie, my true little darling! Addie, little love!"

And Philip Melton stepped out from behind the curtains of the bay window, and took her in his arms, his handsome face smiling and proud, as he turned to Lord Grosvenor.

"I told you so, sir! She loves me, and is true and sweet in her loyalty to the man she loves. Addie, perhaps you will not mind so very much that, after all, you will be Lady Grosvenor some day. For Lord Grosvenor here is my father, and I am Philip Melton Silverland, next in succession. Addie, you will not be angry with us for our little ruse? We had heard you were so desperately determined to marry for money, and the moment I saw you I knew there was a heart that would conquer ambition—a heart I wanted to conquer on my own merits."

Addie listened, bewildered, and Lord Grosvenor laughed.

"Bless your bright eyes, child! You nearly tempted me to be treacherous to Silverland there. But you'll not refuse me for a father-in-law, I hope?"

And in her almost royal home, Addie is as happy as the Summer days are long and shining.

Where There's a Will There's a Way.

Though troubles perplex you,
Dishearten and vex you,
Retarding your progress in sombre array;
To shrink with terror,
Is surely an error,
For where there's a will there's a way.

The task may be teasing,
The duty unpleasing,
But he who confronts it will soon win the day;
Half the battle is over
When once we discover
That where there's a will there's a way.

Misfortunes uncounted
Are often surmounted,
If only we quit not the field in dismay;
Then once more endeavor,
Remembering ever
That where there's a will there's a way.

RIGHT WATERING OF PLANTS.

"If you were very thirsty," said old Mr. Ewing, "and I was to pour a glass of water on the top of your head, would you be very grateful to me?"

"No," said Tom, who was watering his geranium, "I'd be mad!"

"Well," said the old man, "you are not treating the plants much better. It has mouths, and it likes to drink when it is thirsty, but you don't pour the water into its mouths."

"I don't know where they are," said Tom, looking curiously at the bush.

"Its leaves are full of eager little pores, and they are choked with dust," Mr. Ewing said. "Just put the nose again on the watering pot and wash the leaves."

Tom picked up the nose, put it on the spout of the pot, and gave the bush a thorough wetting.

"It does look better," he said. "Has it any other mouths?"

"Plenty of them," said the old man; "one at the end of each rootlet. When you pour a stream of water around the stem of the plant, I think it must feel as you would if I put the water on your head."

"Yes," said Tom, "see that fuchsia. I didn't water the leaves nor the ends of the roots, I am sure."

"And don't you see you are doing the same thing by that rhododendron?" said the irritable old man. "When you do anything, boy, do it in the right way."

And he took the watering pot himself, and every mouth in each plant got a good drink that time.—Farmers' Home Journal.

USE OF FLOWERS.

It's a trite and homely saying, "you can't eat your cake and keep it, too," and we are obliged to square our actions without it pretty closely; but there is one peculiar satisfaction of flowers, for in a certain sense they are an exception to the practical operation of the rules of addition and substraction, as embodied in the expression of them in the old and popular axiom above quoted. During the growing and blooming seasons of many of the best bedding plants and annuals the flowers can be cut freely and used and the oftener they are removed the greater the amount of bloom. When plants are allowed to perfect seeds they soon cease to produce more flowers, as the whole strength of the plant is necessary to mature the seeds. Therefore, if you want flowers cut them and use them; place them on your tables, give them to your friends, and remember those that are sick, and perhaps, too, you may use them to help some one who is disheartened, or even to lift up a degraded one who needs above all else your sympathy. It would be sad indeed, if objects so beautiful as flowers should be the occasion of growing selfishness. Give them with a liberal hand, and He who sends the sunshine and the rain will bless you with increasing blossoms. A gift of flowers can seldom be inappropriate, either to young or old, and purity and goodness are painted on every petal.

A NEW CHILL CURE.

The local of the Terre Haute Journal has discovered a new cure for ague. Here it is:

To those afflicted with ague we say emphatically, crawl down stairs head foremost. Laugh at the idea if you please, but do your crawling first; you can then afford to laugh. Just as the chill is coming on, start at the top of a long flight of stairs, and crawl down on your hands and feet, head foremost. You never did harder work in your life, and when you arrive at the bottom, instead of shaking, you will find yourself puffing, red in the face, and perspiring freely, from the strong exertions made in the effort to support yourself.

It will effect a cure, beyond a doubt; but whether from this cause or from that, we will never tell you, nor need you care to know. Try it. It won't cost you near as much as quinine or patent medicines, and if it fails it will only do what they do every day. If it cures, as it surely will, lay the facts before your local scientists, and let them discover the cause. At all events, ye shaking sufferers, lay this maxim to your hearts: "Crawling down stairs head foremost will certainly prevent a chill."

An Italian mechanician has invented a stenographic machine which we learn has already been successfully used in the Italian Chamber of Deputies. The principle of the machine is similar to that of the type-writer, with which instrument most of our readers are probably familiar. A keyboard is provided with twenty keys corresponding to as many signs, by the use of which it is stated any combinations of sound in any language can be readily registered. A key when struck marks its sign on a slip of paper which, following an automatic motion, is slowly moved forward to receive the next impression. It is maintained by the inventor that by this system the reporter will be able, by careful attention, to take down a speech even in a language wholly strange to him, but in this case the notes would have to be written out by some one understanding the language used.

A poor Irishman applied for relief, and upon some doubts being expressed as to whether he was a proper subject for relief, he enforced his suit with much earnestness. "Och, yer honor," said he, "I'd be starved long since but for my cat." "But for what?" asked the magistrate. "My cat," replied the Irishman. "Your cat—how so?" "Shure, yer honor, I sould her eleven times for a shilling a time, and she was always home before I could get there myself."

People who have the dyspepsia so that they cannot eat the most delicate fruits, can eat fried salt pork in Arizona with impunity, three times a day, besides taking some for luncheon.

AN UNWELCOME GUEST.

The Milwaukee Sun tells this story: A party of Sioux Indians were guests of a leading Milwaukee hotel, and the ladies had a great deal of amusement in visiting with them and studying their customs. That is, they all did except one lady. The ladies called upon the Indians and the savages returned the calls almost before the ladies got to their rooms. One lady called on a chief, and went to her room and retired, and pretty soon there was a knock at her door, and she found that it was the chief. She told him to come in the morning. The lady unlocks her door in the morning so the porter can come in and build a fire before she gets up. She heard a knock in the morning, and, supposing it was the porter, said: "Come in." The door opened and in walked Mr. Indian. She took one look at him and pulled the bed clothes over her head. He sat down on the side of the bed and said: "How?" Well, she was so scared that she didn't know "How" from Adam. She said to him in the best Sioux that she could command: "Please, good Mr. Indian, go away until I get up," but he didn't seem to be in a hurry. He picked up pieces of her wearing apparel from the floor, different articles that he didn't seem to know anything about where they were worn, and made comments on them in the Sioux tongue. The stockings seemed to paralyze his untutored mind the most. He held them up by the toes and said "Ugh!" Finally she happened to think of the bell, and the porter came and invited the Indian to go down stairs.

ANTICIPATE THE MOTHS.

Strange as it may seem, we meet with intelligent persons who do not understand the changes in insect life. All should know that we have first the egg, then the larva—some kind of a caterpillar, maggot, or grub, something of the "worm" kind; this then goes into the pupa, or chrysalis state, remains quiet a while, then comes out as the perfect insect—either butterfly, moth, beetle, fly, or whatever its kind. In the clothes-moth it is the larva, the caterpillar, that does the mischief; its perfect form is known as the "Moth Miller," and in due time will be seen flitting about the house. Now the trouble arises from allowing the parent moth to deposit her eggs upon or in the fabric, which afterwards furnishes the food for the young "worm." Prevention is thus to be the most important remedy. Hence various things that are distasteful to the mother moth, and not injurious to the furs, woolens, etc., are in frequent use to keep the moths away. Of such are camphor gum, cedar shavings, pepper, tobacco, etc., sprinkled on the fabrics. But the best and surest method is to put the goods away in a place—a box, barrel, or even paper bag; where the moths cannot enter; and pack the goods in it before there is any chance for the eggs to be laid.—American Agriculturist.

"My name is Acton," said a man who visited the Gazette office recently. "Acton. Is there anything funny in that name?" "No," answered the weary brow-beater of all opposing factions. "Do you see anything funny in my appearance?" "No, sir. Do you want to subscribe?" "I am going to give you a joke, and then you will be willing to send me the paper free. In strict accordance with the philosophy of life, all animals are more dependent upon the mother, and, of course, have more affection for her than for the father. Ain't that a fact?" "Yes, daily one year?" "Did I say all animals? I mistake. There is one animal that is equally dependent upon the father. Do you want to know what animal that is?" "See the advertising man, will you?" "That animal is the cub bear. Shall I tell you why?" "No, sir." "But I will. In the summer the cub bear sucks his ma, and in the winter he sucks his paw. Send the paper to Gum Spring, Wilcut County. Good day."—Arkansas Gazette.

The American Meteorological Society proposes to divide the sixty degrees of space between Newfoundland and Oregon into four parts, and establish a separate standard time for each. As the sixty degrees equal four hours, the difference in time between each division and the adjoining one would be exactly an hour. The continent would be laid out in four parallel strips, running north and south, each fifteen degrees wide, in each of which the standard time would be based on its own meridian. The idea is to obviate the present inconvenience of having about seventy standard times used by railroads scattered through the country. Railroad experts, however, say that such a system would prove a great inconvenience on the trunk lines, since trains could not be run, as now, continuously by time taken at one end or the other of the line.

The water deluges man with rain, oppresses him with hail, and drowns him with inundations; the air rushes in storms, prepares the tempest, or lights up the volcano; but the earth, gentle and indulgent, ever subservient to the wants of man, spreads his walks with flowers and his table with plenty; returns with interest every good committed to his care, and though she produces the poison, she still supplies the antidote; though constantly teased more to furnish the luxuries of man than necessities, yet even to the last, she continues her kind indulgence, and when life is over, she piously covers his remains in her bosom.—Pliny.

Conversation turned on a late marriage between December and May, some of the gentlemen poohpoohing the match. But the lady stoutly championed the frost-bitten Benedict. "Why," said she, every man ought to keep himself married as long as he lives. Now, here's my husband. What would he be good for without a wife? If I should die to-night he would get another wife to-morrow, I hope. Wouldn't you, Josiah?" Josiah breathed heavily, and seemed to sum up the connubial torments of a lifetime in his calm response, "No, my dear, I think I should take a rest!"

The Journal.

SATURDAY, MAY 7, 1881.

HOLYOKE has granted more liquor licenses than Springfield, and more in proportion to the population than any place in Western Massachusetts, it is said. Ninety-eight licenses for a city of 22,000 inhabitants don't sound very well, and Holyoke's title of the Paper City is likely to be supplanted by that of the Rum City if liquor licenses are to be scattered broadcast after this fashion.

NEW EVIDENCE has been brought to light in the case of Stearns K. Abbott, sentenced to be hanged for the murder of Mrs. Crue, and it now looks as though he would escape the gallows altogether. Jennie Carr, the chief witness in the case, is found to have given birth to a child last September, and it is claimed that Crue, the husband of the murdered woman, is its father. It is also claimed that Crue and his wife often quarreled, and an effort will be made to prove that Crue was the murderer.

THE United States Senate finally resumed executive sessions Wednesday, and has confirmed a number of nominations, besides ratifying the Chinese and other treaties. This course was decided upon at a caucus of the Republicans, who sent a committee to President Garfield, headed by Senator Dawes, to see if he would not placate Senator Conkling by withdrawing the nomination of Judge Robertson as collector at New York, with the understanding that all other nominations should be promptly confirmed. The President promptly refused to entertain any such proposition, and on Thursday he withdrew all the New York nominations that had been made at Conkling's desire or presumed wish. This is a plain declaration of war upon the New York senator's idea that the offices in his State are his personal property, to be disposed of only as he may dictate. A rumpus in the party may not be pleasant to contemplate, but it may as well be settled at once whether Garfield or Conkling is President. The other senator shows a humiliating disposition to bend the knee to Lord Roscoe, but the sympathies of the people are decidedly with the President in this matter.

AT THE STATE HOUSE.

An extra session seems probable, as the joint committee on the revision of the statutes have voted, 19 to 12, to recommend one to consider their report, to begin November 9.

The bill to relieve property from double taxation has now passed both branches.

The Senate has comfortably disposed of the woman suffrage question for this session, by referring to the next Legislature the resolve providing for a constitutional amendment giving women the right to vote and hold office.

The House has had a tussle with oleomargarine this week, and has finally passed a bill to prevent deception in sales of butter and cheese.

The Senate has passed a bill providing that no murderer shall be hanged when the jury unanimously recommend imprisonment for life.

The resolve awarding the Shanlys $45,499 has been defeated in the House.

Mahlon D. Spaulding has been elected executive councilor, vice William O. Taylor, deceased.

The bill requiring applications for liquor licenses to be advertised, and forbidding the grant when the owner or occupant of adjoining property objects, has passed both branches.

The House has passed a bill establishing boards of visiting physicians to insane hospitals.

The Odd Fellows celebrated the 62d anniversary of Odd Fellowship in this country with an entertainment at their hall Tuesday evening consisting of readings by a young lady from Springfield and singing by the Odd Fellows' quintet club from the same city, all followed by an excellent supper in Union Hall, which was enjoyed by some 200 persons.

Half a dozen of our young business men have purchased bicycles the past week, and are practicing assiduously in acquiring the mastery of them. An occasional "header" brings them abruptly to the dust, and Cashier French sprained his right wrist quite severely in this way Tuesday evening, which will interfere with his work for a while. Fortunately he has an accident insurance policy, which will console him to the extent of $25 a week.

B. B. Adams, agent of the Boston & Albany Railroad at this station for the past twenty years, has resigned his position, to take effect at the close of this month. Mr. Adams has worked for the road 39 years, beginning at East Brookfield, and continuing there until he took his present position, and the work and responsibility have increased so much within the past few years, without any corresponding increase in help, that he feels the need of taking a rest.

The work of putting up the telephone wires and instruments in this place has been completed, and all are now in working order, with 38 telephones in this district—21 in this village and 17 in Monson. The State Primary School will have an instrument before long, and others will doubtless be put in in the village, as people become acquainted with its advantages. Mrs. Emma Weeman will have charge of the central office, in Commercial Block, with E. W. Plumley as assistant.

The sandy waste adjoining the Boston & Albany depot in this place might be made a delight to the eye, instead of the eye-sore it now is, if the railroad managers would adopt the plan which the Pennsylvania Railroad is putting in force. That company has contracted for 50,000 plants of various kinds to be delivered at the stations between Jersey City and Philadelphia. The purpose is to have flower beds at every station along the route, making refreshing oases where heretofore there has too often been only a dreary desert. Perhaps our improvement association can persuade the railroad officials to institute some improvement of this kind here.

Maurice Herring of Monson was before the district court for drunkenness on Tuesday, for the second time within a few weeks. He paid his dollar fine, but will not get off so easily next time. The case of J. P. Murphy, charged with selling liquor to a minor, was continued to the 11th. Betsey McAuliffe of Monson raised quite a breeze on Main street Wednesday evening by her noisy demonstrations, and was finally locked up, after vain efforts had been made to induce her to go home. She was arraigned on Thursday, and paid $10.95 for disturbing the peace. She claimed that she got drunk on cider given her by somebody in Monson. Michael Griffin was up the same day for disturbing the peace last July at Three Rivers, since which time he had not been seen, and paid a fine of $10, and costs of $17.56.

The first monthly meeting of the executive committee of the improvement association was held at the district court room on Monday evening, and S. W. French was elected a member of the committee in place of J. S. Holden, who was chosen vice president, to succeed J. H. Woolrich, resigned. A vote was passed requesting the ladies of the committee to canvass the village for memberships of the association, and the following subcommittees were appointed: Improvement of depot grounds, Dr. W. H. Stowe, H. H. Sanders, Mrs. A. H. Willis; sidewalks, J. S. Holden, J. W. Weeks, Mrs. J. F. Holbrook; trees, C. B. Fisk, R. L. Goddard, Mrs. H. P. Holden; cemetery, S. W. French, J. B. Shaw, Mrs. C. L. Gardner; street signs, S. Ellis, E. Brown, Mrs. S. S. Taft; protection of trees along the highways, Dr. W. H. Stowe, S. H. Hellyar, Mrs. C. L. Gardner.

At the town meeting called for next Monday, the voters are again to consider the school house problem at Three Rivers, which has already been up in one form or another for their consideration several times before. There is doubtless a necessity for more school room in that village, but we understand that the advocates of the proposed change declare that if they cannot have it as they want it, they will not have anything. For ourselves, we cannot see any advantage in abandoning the present lot for the proposed one. The present school house is located in a pleasant yard, with an abundance of shade trees, good water and a good fence. All these are lacking in the other lot named, and we are not aware of any compensating advantages, while the necessary expense in grading and filling would be considerable. It seems to many that the better plan would be to retain the present school building, and erect an additional one in some other part of the village, which shall meet the demand for more room.

At the regular monthly session of the probate court in Springfield on Tuesday, Samuel N. Gleason was appointed administrator on the estate of Mercy Whittam of Brimfield, and Laura M. and Robert W. Cushman were appointed administrators on the estate of C. L. Cushman of Ludlow. Wills approved of Dorcas F. Spellman of Hampden, C. C. Spellman, executor; Charles Noble of Wilbraham, Ralph W. Allen and Nathaniel Fellows executors. An account was rendered on the estate of Henry B. Brewer of Wilbraham, and an inventory filed on estate of Lucinda D. Moody of the same town, personal $386, real $1500. Leave was granted to sell real estate of the late Roxy Perkins of Wales, and Charles H. Barrows and William G. White were appointed commissioners to settle claims on the estate of James Smith of Wales. The will of Dorcas Spellman gives $500 to the Congregational church at Hampden, and $200 each to the Bible society and the American Board. The will of Charles Noble leaves the Memorial Methodist church at Wilbraham, the preachers' aid society of the New England conference, and the trustees of that conference $500 each on the death of his widow.

The selectmen give a liberal construction to the vote of the town on the license question, and seem to have made no effort to restrict the number of licenses granted. At their meeting last Saturday remonstrants were present from Bondville and Thorndike to protest against the licensing of any saloons in those places, but nobody put in an appearance from this village to even suggest any restrictions, and the following licenses were granted: First class (to be drank on the premises)—C. P. Stone and J. W. Weeks, Palmer; second class (beer)—M. Fox; fourth class (not to be drank on the premises)—O. P. Allen and G. L. Hitchcock & Co.; fifth class (bottling beer)—Carroll Bros., Palmer; first and fourth class—John Feeney, Joseph Thompson, Wm. Thompson, Otis Griffin, M. Cunningham, Thomas Griffin, Palmer; John Twiss, J. P. Dunn, Three Rivers; Thomas Kelliher, Thorndike; Jerry Shea, Bondville. No license was granted to J. P. Murphy of this place, as case is pending against him for unlawfully selling liquor to a minor. It is to be regretted that the selectmen should have increased the number of licenses granted over that of last year, when several applicants were refused. There should have been a still larger reduction this year.

BELCHERTOWN.

The 10th Mass. Regiment will hold a reunion at this place June 21st. Gov. Long and his staff are to be present.

Mrs. Charlotte Dickinson, with her niece, Miss Hattie Dwight, left this place for New York Thursday, and will sail for Europe today, where they will remain until August.

LUDLOW.

The wife of Russell Allen left home last Saturday morning, taking one child, and half an hour afterward O. Walker left the house, where he had boarded, with a load of goods, going the same way that Mrs. Allen had gone. The husband soon started in pursuit, and returned with his wife Tuesday night.

WARREN.

BRIMFIELD.

We have received from Miss Leona K. King a hen's egg which she took from the nest last Sunday, and which measures 8½ by 6¼ inches in circumference.

Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Parker celebrated the tenth anniversary of their marriage on Tuesday, a number of their friends being on hand to help them enjoy the evening, and leaving with them, as pleasant reminders of the occasion, a purse of $25 and other gifts to the amount of $18.

THREE RIVERS.

The Y. M. C. A. have a fine new organ for their rooms, the gift of their friends in the village.

Geo. C. Sanford and his sister, Mrs. M. E. Dunkell, have gone to South Haven, Ct., to keep a hotel during the Summer.

The ladies of the Baptist society have another of their maple syrup sociables at the church next week Friday evening.

The baptismal sermon of the Union church, which was to have taken place last Sunday, was indefinitely postponed, on account of the ill health of the pastor.

WILBRAHAM.

The students had a holiday on Tuesday for May walks.

There will be a fellowship meeting at the Congregational church next Wednesday afternoon and evening.

The contestants for the Harlan prize for declamations are Misses B. F. Dyer, E. A. Gay, A. A. Huling, A. N. Keeney, B. A. Phelps, A. Schivillie, Messrs. C. C. Abbee, W. K. Boutoa, D. E. Phelps, W. R. Mattison, E. C. Richardson and F. E. Wood.

Miss Susie A. George of South Shaftesbury, Vt., a member of the class of '80, Wesleyan Academy, was married at the the Memorial church on Tuesday morning to Augustus P. Sutherland of New York city. On Monday evening Miss George was called into the second parlor of the boarding house, where several of her classmates were assembled, and presented with a silver cake basket by Miss Etta Godfrey in behalf of the class.

WALES.

Wm. L. Needham has broken ground for a new house on Main street, near his residence.

Hubbard Bros. have occupied their new house recently purchased of A. Harvey, who has moved to Monson.

Geo. Lucy's little 2½-years-old son fell into the raceway and went through under the road at the Wales mill last Friday, and was drowned.

Maple sugar on snow afforded a goodly number of young and old people a very pleasant time at the Baptist vestry last Wednesday evening.

Wm. L. Sizer sends us an egg measuring 8 by 5¾ inches in circumference, which was laid by a pullet 11 months old, and asks us to "beat that if you can." We don't know as we can beat it, but we can eat it, and quantities of others just like it, only give us a chance.

The officers of the Wales Savings Bank for the present year are: President, Elijah Shaw; Vice Presidents, N. S. Hubbard, Warren Shaw, F. L. Burley; Directors, E. D. Shaw, Geo. O. Henry, Geo. S. Rogers, Geo. L. Webber, E. C. Sherman, L. Agard, J. E. Hubbard, W. L. Webber, A. E. Hubbard, J. M. Carpenter, Wm. Peele, J. A. Johnson; Secy. and Treas., H. A. McFarland.

THORNDIKE.

A sociable was held at the church vestry Wednesday evening, probably the last of the season.

Mrs. James Fuller, who was thrown violently from her carriage a few weeks since, is rapidly recovering.

For several evenings Auctioneer Pierce has been selling out the stock of W. J. McCormick, lately forced into bankruptcy.

The brick work upon the new mill has progressed rapidly the present week. The building thus far looks more like a city block than a cotton factory.

The time of public worship at the Congregational church has been changed from 1 p. m. to 10.45 a. m. This arrangement will continue until Oct. 1st.

Tuesday afternoon Sheriff Palmer sold the Durkey estate to Capt. Clark for $1780. According to the will the proceeds of the sale go to the missionary enterprise.

David Flemming of this village had his leg broken by a fall at Blanchardville Tuesday. He was brought home in the evening, and has been in a critical condition.

The Congregational Sunday school was reorganized last Sabbath. The school is in a good condition, and has a membership at present of 104. Three were united to the church at the communion service in the afternoon.

A party of small boys a few days since broke into the village school house and committed petty acts of lawlessness, for which we trust the committee in charge will see that justice is meted out to the young miscreants.

Our new surveyor has been making decided improvements on the road and sidewalk on Pleasant street, which was sadly out of repair. Edward Wilson has been improving his place on the same street, making it one of the most attractive places in the village.

HAMPDEN.

Farmers are turning out their young stock to pasture. Hay has fallen in price.

Highway surveyors are repairing the roads in town, which are not in as bad condition this Spring as sometimes.

The public schools commenced Monday, with the exception of the high school in district No. 1, where the committee were disappointed in a teacher.

W. H. Barnes, who recently had his house, store and goods burned, has settled with the insurance companies, and rented the store of John P. Cady, where he has a new stock of goods.

Rev. Mr. Dutton of East Longmeadow will supply Rev. E. P. Root's desk next Sabbath. Rev. Mr. Root preaches at the Olivet church in Springfield, when communion service will be observed. There will also be admissions to the church, both by letter and profession of faith.

The selectmen have set off a portion of the new cemetery to the Catholic society for a burying-ground, and Chairman Beebe has deeded the same to Bishop O'Reilly, all in accordance with the wishes of the Catholic society, and carrying out the vote of the town at their late annual meeting.

The town has received from the State the standard for sealing weights and measures. It is from the warehouse of E. Howard & Co., Boston, and is nicely cased. The selectmen have appointed John Q. Adams sealer of weights and measures, and he will at no distant time call on merchants and others to seal measures and balances.

A pleasant ceremony occurred in the Catholic church Tuesday, when Father McCarthy united in marriage Daniel Troy and Kate Ryan. It was a nice May morning, the groom and bride were nicely arrayed, the house filled with friends and well wishers, and the occasion was a success in every particular. May the newly-married couple always have sunshine.

MONSON.

The Village Improvement Society have a meeting this (Saturday) evening.

The Harmony Society have their last rehearsal for the season next Tuesday evening.

G. W. Burdick has something to say in another column about ice, which will interest our citizens.

Helon Fales, formerly of Monson, was in town Wednesday, looking hale and hearty. He is now connected with the Redpath Lyceum Bureau.

Ground is broken for the new straw goods factory of Gage & Reynolds, and as soon as the lumber arrives the work will be rapidly pushed forward.

The young people of St. Patrick's society gave a pleasing presentation of "The Flower Queen" Monday evening at Central Hall, under the direction of Miss Carberry, their popular organist.

Building, the present season, is likly to be very brisk. Besides the library building and the new straw shop, a large number of houses will be erected. Four are already contracted for on State street, three on Reynolds avenue, two on Green street, and others in various locations. Painters, too, are in active demand, all of which speaks well for the prosperity of our village.

The following item' which we clip from the Cleveland (O.) Leader of last Sunday, speaks for itself, and will be of interest to many of our readers in this vicinity: A thorough determination and positive will power in the human organization will accomplish what would seem to be an utter impossibility, and this fact has just been practically demonstrated by a shrewd Yankee captain in this city. It seems that ever since Captain G. H. Newton has gone into the whaling business, he has occupied all of his leisure time in a series of experiments tending to the preservation of the monster whale. Several pieces of blubber and flesh have been taken from various parts of the body and subjected to a chemical process, and it is now fully proven by these experiments that the monster whale can be preserved throughout the hot weather without any fear whatever of decomposition. The captain has made this subject a careful study without the knowledge of his partners in the whale enterprise, and they, fearing the loss of the now famous exhibit, thought to make a good stroke in selling out to the plucky captain when he made them a proposition last week. Immediately after the captain became the sole possessor of his royal highness, he wished to retain the valued services of Fred J. Engelhardt, and made that gentleman a generous offer to remain in his old place as chief manager of the Inland Whaling Association. As soon as all arrangements had been consummated, the captain disclosed the secret, and commissioned Mr. Engelhardt to contract for the building of a perfect palace car for the whale, the order for the car being given to the Cleveland Bridge and Car Works. Another order was given to the Cleveland Non-explosive Lamp Works for several nickel plated lamps, such as are used on the finest parlor and sleeping coaches: which, while brilliantly illuminating, will prove highly ornamental. The Worswick Ornamental Iron Company were also given an order to make a most elaborate frame over the car which will support an elegant canopy, which will have a spread of 100x40 feet. When complete, this outfit will be the richest and most attractive of any ever seen on the road; the cost of which is estimated at from $6,000 to $8,000. This, added to the purchase money, the cost of experiments and preserving process, is abundant proof that the plucky captain is entirely confident that he will succeed in keeping this great sea monster for an indefinite length of time, and his efforts will certainly be rewarded, for no one in the country will regret the time and money spent in viewing this wonderful marine monster. Sturgeons and other fatty fish have been preserved by the process now proposed by Mr. Newton for more than two years, and they look to-day as natural as life, while no odor is apparent any more than the natural fishy smell. To-day the process of embalming will commence and his whaleship will be ready to start on his journey to Toledo to-morrow morning.

WARE AND VICINITY.

Vigeant is to build a two-tenement house for Mrs. Grey, in the rear of the one owned by her on Water street.

Two of the three drug stores in town have obtained licenses to sell liquor for medicinal and mechanical purposes.

Elbridge Hathaway has taken the contract to grade the lot recently purchased by John Kennedy on the corner of North and Prospect streets, and put a $3000 house thereon, the work to be completed some time before Fall.

Just 75 miles to Boston, according to the recent survey, over the Mass. Central R. R. By the B. & A. line it is about 95 miles. Work is to be commenced very soon in this immediate vicinity on the Central line, and will be completed to this place some time next Winter.

The chapel was well filled Monday evening at the installation of the officers of the lodge of Good Templars. Delegates were present from Springfield, Palmer and Greenwich. After the installation exercises were over a fine collation was served, and all report an extra good time.

The annual forty hours' devotion has been held this week at St. Williams' Catholic church. Father Moran has been assisted by Fathers Welsh of Easthampton, Stone of Chicopee, Sullivan of Palmer, Welsh of North Brookfield, and Sheehan of the French Catholic church of Ware.

R. C. Snow is building an addition to his grist mill, 16x32 feet, three stories high. A part of it is to be used for a store room for grain, and will hold when completed some 5000 bushels, and will be one of the most convenient mills in which to do work, to be found in this part of the country.

P. H. Sagendorph's horse was hitched in front of his residence on Church street Thursday morning, when the bridle was broken by a sudden jerk so that he saw the wagon behind, and becoming frightened wheeled around, leaving the body and back wheels, and ran down Church street, through High street, knocking over an iron post at the head of Bank street, and striking Blood's express wagon, springing the axle.

The second attempt was made on Monday evening to wreck the last train from Palmer by placing obstructions upon the track not far from Gibbs' crossing. It is a mystery by whom it was done, or what the motive could be. A plank was placed across the rails in such a manner that the truck wheels of the engine passed over it before it could be brought to a stand still, but it fortunately kept the track and but little damage was done. It hardly seems possible that any sane person would attempt such a thing in broad daylight, as has been done in both cases.

Another runaway on Tuesday afternoon, when the driver, Thomas McCarty, had an almost miraculous escape. As he was driving down Otis Avenue some part of the harness gave way, letting the wagon on to the heels of the horse, which ran furiously down Church street, and attempted to pass between a team heavily loaded with plank and the posts which surround the park, where there was only room for the horse to go, and he cleared himself from the wagon. McCarty, who kept fast hold of the reins, turned a double somersault over the load of plank and was hurled violently to the ground, but, plucky to the last, would not let go, but regained his feet and stopped the horse within two or three rods from where the wagon was left. He was severely shaken up, but it is hoped no serious results will follow.

A boy came to his death at New York in a singular manner the other day. A young man was standing in the street with an open penknife in his hand, which a friend attempted to take from him, and as he swung his arm back to prevent it, the blade pen etrated the chest of the lad, who was running on an errand, producing a fatal wound.

The English Earl of Shrewsbury eloped with a married woman last week, but they were pursued and overtaken at Strasburg by the lady's friends, who gave the earl a sound thrashing and took the woman back home.

Miss Maria, daughter of the late Prof. Diman of Brown University, was kliled at Providence last week Friday, by being thrown from her horse, which became unmanageable and ran violently against a tree.

A Philadelphia miracle worker claims to have cured Col. Thomas A. Scott of paralysis by laying on hands, and Col. Scott says it is true; but his physicians say that no cure has been effected by anybody.

A young woman at Youngstown, Ohio, was undoubtedly buried alive recently, as it was afterwards found that she had turned over in her coffin, and torn her shroud in a violent struggle.

Cracks and openings have appeared in the ground in Louisiana, Kentucky, and two or three other places west of the Alleghanies, accompanied generally by vapor or smoke.

Two brothers named Brennan got into a quarrel at Lanesboro last Saturday, when one of them stabbed the other with a pitchfork, inflicting probably fatal injuries.

Worcester people are concerned about their water supply, which barely meets the demands now, and promises to give out during the summer months.

Work is about to begin on a second bridge across the East River at New York, for railroad use. It will cost $5,000,000, and will be completed in three years.

Such a display of tapestry carpets as has never been shown in Springfield, has been opened at Metcalf & Luther's this week. They have purchased a great number of rolls at a special New York sale, and will therefore offer rare bargains to carpet buyers.

Morse is happy over the very marked decline this season in the demand for cheap work. Customers want good reliable shoes, for which they are willing to pay fair prices, and have somehow found out that the "Central Shoe Store," Springfield, is the place to buy them.

It is not strange that the "G. O. Taylor Old Bourbon" Whiskey has grown in popularity since its high character has been maintained from the beginning. Druggists and grocers sell it. See that the signatures of the proprietors, Chester H. Graves & Sons, is over each cork.

Cash, one price and fair dealing do sell goods. So Foster, Babbitt & Chapin have found out at Springfield. This week they offer 100 pairs all-wool Dean Cass pants at $2.00; 100 pairs genuine Sawyer check pants at $4, cost $4.67 to manufacture; 50 cheviot suits for $8, wholesale price $9.

Forbes & Wallace, Springfield, offer 25 pieces fancy stripe silks, in all new desirable shades, at 55 cts. a yard, never before offered less $1. They offer 50 pieces plain cordiline silks at 25 cts., never sold before under 50 cts. Beautiful plain silks at 50 cts., in navy blue, marine blue, sky blue, pink (fine for evening wear), wine, maroon, garnet, brown, plum, bottle green, drab. They send samples to any address.

Hardly to be credited, but it is nevertheless true, that a sick horse or a bad-conditioned cow can be brought up in a few days by the use of Simmons Liver Regulator. The powders should be mixed with the food, and they will eat it readily; and it is surprising to see what improvement immediately takes place. It opens the bowels, strengthening them, and does all and even more than the best Condition Powders. A small quantity in the food for chickens will cure cholera, and keep the poultry healthy.

ABOUT ICE.—To the consumers of Monson I will say that about the 20th of September last I was all sold out, and as it was very warm some of my customers (I hear) found some fault because I had sold it to out of town parties in the early part of the season. As the ice at the top of the house was very poor, and melting at the rate of ten hundred, or more, per day, I sold about five tons of broken ice for five dollars per ton, which would not have supplied my customers more than one day longer that they did have it, as twenty hundred of ice at the house in the early part of the season never weighs out to consumers over ten hundred; every one that is posted knows that. When I made the above trade I could have sold it all, about 400 tons, at the same rate at the house, which would have amounted to two thousand dollars, cash; but to retain my customers I peddled it at an expense of $376, and received (or expect to) $952.15. There have been a number of times since I have been in the ice business, and when I had no opposition, that I could have made from four to six hundred dollars by selling to outside parties. Yours truly,
G. W. BURDICK.

Our Preacher.

The preacher knew, I've not the slightest doubt,
When calling on my young and pretty wife,
That I was not at home, but had gone out.
But I returned, and never in my life
Beheld a sight that caused me more surprise.
I thought they each disliked the other, quite;
And really I could scarce believe my eyes.
The preacher had an arm about her tight,
Her head upon the preacher's shoulder lay,
One arm around the preacher's neck was wound,
And while they stood there in that loving way,
Their lips met! yes, they kissed; I heard the sound—
Why did I not rush in—the preacher kill?
Was I not wild with rage? Oh, not at all,
They threatened to repeat it. Hope they will;
Our preacher is a woman—that is all.

ROBBING AN EDITOR.

Soon after the completion of the plank road between Detroit and Lansing, a period of twenty-seven or twenty-eight years ago, the editor of a newspaper located about half way between started for Detroit, one evening, on the wagon of a teamster. After traveling about an hour the vehicle was stopped by a highway robber. The teamster shelled out about twelve dollars, but when the editor showed up, the "pot" only reached fifty cents.

"You've hidden the money in your boots!" shouted the robber, and he made the editor pull them off. No more cash being found, the robber demanded that coat and vest should come off for a close search; but at the end of the search he angrily demanded:

"What sort of a man are you, to set out on a journey with only fifty cents in your pocket?"

"I am getting my ride for nothing, and I was going to pay my expenses in Detroit by advertising the hotel at which I stop."

"How much advertising will you give me to let you off?"

"A straight column a week for four weeks."

"Well, I'll take it, and the teamster is the witness to our bargain. I'll send in the copy in time for the next issue."

The robber presently moved off into the woods, and as the vehicle once more rolled over the plank road, the editor rubbed his hands together and chuckled:

"Egad! but isn't this a lift for me! I found a chance to pass off a bogus half-dollar, got a splendid item of news for my local, and worked up a column ad. to help tide me over the dull season! I tell you the Herald will be on a paying basis in less than a year!"

Mrs. Homespun threw down the paper and pulled off her spectacles with a vicious jerk. "It's perfectly scand'lous!" she exclaimed. "For my part, I can't see how any respectable woman could ever wear such a thing as that! When I was a gal we used to wear low necks and short sleeves, but mercy!" and here she cast a withering glance at the paper in her lap before flinging it upon the floor. "Why, what's the matter, aunt?" asked Cicely, picking up the paper. "Matter! matter enough, I should say!" cried the excited old lady; "just look at that fashion plate there, if you are not ashamed to look at it. It is perfectly scand'lous, I say." "Why, aunt!" said Cicely, her eyes brimming with fun, "that is only a liver pad picture!" "I don't care what kind of a new-fangled name they give to it," persisted her aunt; "it's scand'lous and disgraceful, and no woman that's got a spark of modesty about her would ever be seen in one of them."—Boston Transcript.

CONDENSATION OF A CONTINUED STORY.—The wild storm still raged furiously. Ever and anon the vivid lightning, in fantastic shapes, illumined the darksome and angry heavens. At last our young hero, making a sudden strategic movement, surrounded the band of fifteen howling red demons, and with no other weapon than a seven-shooter, cavalry sword, a dime novel, a Remington rifle, a deck of cards, a bowie-knife and a pair of brass knuckles, he mowed down his pursuers like grain before the scythe of the reaper; then seizing the fair Ethelinda around the waist with one arm, and plunging a bayonet into a lusty Indian who showed signs of returning consciousness, he vaulted into the saddle of the swiftest horse in the territory, and cried in a delirium of triumphant joy—"To be continued in our next."

Two country spinsters were stopping at a friend's house in Boston after their return from a scientific lecture. They occupied the same apartment, and shortly after midnight one of them started up, and awaking the other, exclaimed in great trepidation: "Betsey, I believe there is a man under the bed!" Betsey merely raised her finger in an admonitory way, and replied: "Don't make a noise then, Jane, you might scare him away."

THE HOUSE OF THE FUTURE.—The Boston Transcript insists that "in the house of the future the bedroom will be dedicated to sleep, and the bed, with perhaps a chair or two, will be the only furniture. There will be no hangings, no papered walls, no carpets, no nothing to catch and hold the dust, and the bed will stand in the middle of the room, where the air can circulate freely around it. The result will surely he health."

Guibollaid in a sudden access of fervor remarked: "How wonderful the ways of Providence! Everything is foreseen; each month has its proper growth: Potatoes, oats, beans, asparagus, pease, always something new. When one thing goes another comes. As soon as the season for fruits has passed, the season of preserves and jelly arrives!"

A Galveston darky rushed into a doctor's office and breathlessly exclaimed: "Come on, doctor, right off. Dar is somebody in my house who is in an awful fix—laid up in bed agronin' and agronin'." "Who is it?" "It's me. You see, boss, I didn't hab nobody to send, so I come myself."—Galveston News.

Hundreds of men, women and children rescued from beds of pain, sickness and almost death and made strong and hearty by Parker's Ginger Tonic are the best evidences in the world of its sterling worth. You can find these in every community. —Post. See advertisement. 5w6

WILL IT CURE ME?

Said a man whose woebegone countenance and broken down constitution plainly showed traces of disease—a sufferer with Nervous Dyspepsia, in whose stomach the most delicate morsel lay like lead. Refreshing sleep and quiet nerves were strangers to him, and he despaired of ever being well.

We advised him to take

Simmons Liver Regulator,

which he did, and in a short time was not only relieved but cured.

Reader, if you are suffering with Dyspepsia or Liver Disease in any form, do not wait until the disease has taken a fast hold upon you, but use the Regulator when the symptoms first show themselves. It has relieved untold suffering. SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR is not an alcoholic stimulant, but a PURELY VEGETABLE REMEDY that will cure when everything else fails. It is a faultless family medicine. Does not disarrange the system. Is no violent drastic purge, but nature's own remedy. The friend of everyone, and will not disappoint you. A single trial will convince you that it is the cheapest, purest and best Family Medicine in the world.

ASK the recovered dyspeptics, bilious sufferers, victims of fever and ague, the mercurial diseased patient how they recovered their health, cheerful spirits and good appetite--they will tell you by taking Simmons Liver regulator.

BACK ACHE

POSITIVELY CURED BY

BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS.

Reasons Why they are Preferred to All Other Porous Plasters or External Remedies:

FIRST.

Because they possess all the merit of the strengthening porous plaster, and contain in addition thereto the newly discovered powerful and active vegetable combination which acts with increased rubefacient, stimulating, sedative and counter irritant effects.

SECOND.

Because they are a genuine pharmaceutical preparation, and so recognized by the profession.

THIRD.

Because they are the only plasters that relieve pain ot once.

FOURTH.

Because they will positively cure diseases which other remedies will not even relieve.

FIFTH

Because over 5000 physicians and druggists have voluntarily testified that they are superior to all other plasters or medicines for external use.

SIXTH.

Because the manufacturers haue received the only medals ever given for porous plasters.

HILL AND DRILL

PHOSPHATE.

SEND FOR PAMPHLET.

This is a bone superphosphate, and may be used on any crop, in the hill or drill or broadcast, either with or without manure, and will produce a much earlier and larger crop. In the report of the Massachusetts Inspector of Fertilizers, its valuation is from $3 to $10 per ton higher than other Phosphates which sell at the same price. The past year over 3000 tons were sold against 100 tons three years ago, showing that it is liked by the farmers. If there is no local agent near you send to us.

A Lesson Half Learned.

In early times, the story says,
When birds could talk and lecture,
A magpie called her feathered friends,
To teach them architecture.
"To build a nest, my courteous friends—"
They all began to chatter—
"No use to teach us that, good Mag,
'Tis such an easy matter."
"To build a nest," Professor Mag
Resumed her speech demurely,
"First choose a well-forked bough wherein
The nest may sit securely."
"Of course," said Jenny Wren. "Now cross
Two sticks for a foundation."
"Oh, all know that," quoth Mr. Rook,
"Without this long oration."
"Now bend some slender twigs to form
The round side of the dwelling."
"A fool knows that," exclaimed the thrush,
"Without a magpie's telling."
"Next take some wool and line the nest,
"And bind it well together."
"Why, that's as clear," exclaimed the owl,
"As stars in frosty weather!"

While they thus talked, Professor Mag
Her nest had half completed;
And growing quite indignant now,
To see how she was treated,
"Ladies and gentlemen," she said,
"I see you're all so clever,
My lessons are superfluous—
I leave you there forever."
Away she flew, and left the birds
Their folly to discover,
Who now can build but half a nest,
And cannot roof it over.
The magpie sits beneath her roof,
Nor rain nor hail can pelt her;
The others, brooding o'er their young,
Themselves enjoy no shelter.

No better fate do men deserve,
When self-conceit can lead them
Friendly instructions to despise,
And think they do not need them.

JACK ROBY'S REFORMATION.

Jack Roby was the only boy Edith Reynolds dreaded to meet when she commenced her school in Wells Valley, District No. 8. She was a stranger in the place, but every one always learned about Jack Roby on coming into the neighborhood. And there was a special reason for informing the school ma'am, as it had been his habit for some time to whip out all the teachers, as he said, "to develop his muscular strength."

In short, Jack was a hard boy; he was captain of the club which always disturbed the protracted meetings, broke window lights out of school houses, cut harnesses under meeting house sheds, stretched wires across sidewalks, etc. On the farm he swore because his father was a Presbyterian deacon, and did not believe in such a perversion of speech. In the sitting-room he worried the cat because it made his mother nervous. In the kitchen only was Jack docile, and Bridget was the only one in the world who seemed determined to see no bad in him. And doubtless the reason was this: Jack stood with a lot of loafers on the wharf at New York when Bridget landed on our shores, and some one of the crowd, still worse than Jack, had made sport of her, and Jack's better nature coming up he went up to her and said: "My mother wants a girl, and she lives ten miles out from the city, and if you want a place I'll take you safe there, and she's the best woman in all the world, but she's got one o' the worst boys in America."

Strange to say, the poor creature took him at his word, and for four years had found a happy and comfortable home. So it was no wonder she stood by Jack.

But to return to Edith. On her way to school the very first morning she met the minister, whose custom it was to drive over from the city and preach on Sunday in the little country church which stood across from the school house, and on Monday pay a visit to the earnest, honest farmers of Wells Valley. Of course he gave her an account of Jack Roby, and ended by regretting deeply that a boy should be thus early "given over."

"Pshaw!" ejaculated Edith as she passed on. "It makes me indignant to see a man fix the limits of God's mercy, and say God has given him over, and therefore I must."

When Edith went around to take the names she began with the most intelligent looking one in the crowd; and to her surprise his name was "Jack Roby."

Day after day went by, and Edith tried by every art to win that boy, but seemed to fail. She was especially anxious, as his mother had said to her, "Our Jack is wild, and I fear the time is not far distant when he will goad his father into taking desperate measures with him; and you are a teacher, and may be you can help us!"

Edith had promised to do all in her power to win him to a better life; but he always repulsed her. True, she succeeded better than any other teacher ever had, but not at all to her satisfaction.

At last school was over, and Edith went home with a sad heart, for she pitied the poor, pale woman whose life was wasting fast in her constant dread of the future; and she pitied the stern man too, Deacon Roby, for, however he might have failed in training Jack, she knew he was doing his duty as he saw it.

After Edith had returned to the quiet of her home she thought more than ever of her unruly pupil. And in parting with Bridget she had said, "You believe in Jack, and you'll stand by him if he ever wants a friend, won't you?"

"Och, sure an' that I will, if he breaks all the hearts in America."

Edith had said to her, "If Jack ever gets in trouble, you tell him if he wants a friend, to come to me."

"Och, sure an' I will, and there'll always be a bit o' silver in me long pocket to take him there, sure."

And thus they had parted.

One year after Edith had left Wells Valley she received a heart-broken letter from Jack's mother, telling her that Jack had left home in disgrace, and that it was breaking her heart, and asking her to pray for them all. The same mail brought the following letter from Bridget:

"Jack's gone, Miss Edith; he sold the horses, ole gray, an' ole bay, to some gypsies, and used the money, the poor darlint, an' the misther turned him off, an' I sent him to yees. An' I know ye'll pity poor Jack. He'll come sure indade; kape yer light burnin' nights.

THIS FROM BRIDGET MALONE."

Edith had never forgotten to pray for Jack, and now she wrestled long and earnestly with her Heavenly Father in his behalf. Twilight deepened into night; the stars came out, and still she prayed. Finally, arising from her knees, she sat down at the window, and there under the starlight she saw some one leaning upon the gate. Scarcely knowing what she did, she called, "Is it you, Jack?"

"Oh, Miss Reynolds!" was his only answer.

"I knew you would come Jack," she said; "I've just been praying God to send you here."

"Then somebody cares for me. How good it sounds! But, Miss Reynolds, I'm awfully wicked, and awfully sick. May be you've heard that I'm a poor cast-off, and that I deserve it."

"Yes, Jack."

"And still you will take me in?"

"Yes, Jack."

"Then I'll keep my vow, if I live, for I vowed to the Lord that I'd lead a new life if Miss Reynolds would help me."

Edith soothed the tired boy, prepared him some tea and toast, and he went to bed.

In the morning it was evident that he needed medical aid. A physician was called, who pronounced it a case of typhoid fever. Edith dispatched a telegram to his parents, which soon brought his mother to his bedside, but Jack grew delirious before her arrival, and did not know her for many days.

It was pitiful to hear him moan and beg for his mother to come, and when she would say, "Here I am, Jack; your mother is here," he would say, "Oh, she'll never come! she don't love me, or she wouldn't have let father send me off." Then after a few minutes of quiet he would say, "Bridget loves me, but it's only because she's so simple."

Long and patiently did Mrs. Roby and Edith watch by the side of the sufferer, and each day a letter was dispatched to the anxious father.

Finally, after many days, Jack became himself again, the fever left him, and during those long days of convalescent weakness, when his mother sat ever at his bedside holding his hand, and Edith was dodging in and out with her cheering words, and Mrs. Reynolds with her delicate dishes, there commenced in Jack's heart that "new life" which developed hour by hour, day by day, and year by year, until Jack Roby stood up in his noble manhood a living evidence of what grace can do in a sinful heart.

One day, after Jack had been quiet for a long time, he called for writing materials, and, on being told that he was too weak to write, he dictated the following letter, which his mother joyfully penned:

"My Dear Father: Can you forgive your poor, repentant boy? Sometimes I think God has; and won't you, dear father? God helping me, I'll do right hereafter.

YOUR ERRING JACK."

Of course this letter brought Mr. Roby by the next train after receiving it. And when he informed Bridget that he was going to Jack she said:

"Och! faith! and it's meself that saved the poor darlint. 'Twas meself that slipped out o' the back door, an' tuk him clothes, an' give him me last dollar to pay his way to Edith Reynolds, an'—"

"Well, well!" said Mr. Roby, "you've been a friend to Jack, and you shall have your reward."

"And yees just bring the poor darlint back wid y-e-e-s, an' it's all Bridget Malone asks."

Mr. Roby's visit was unexpected to all. Jack saw him first as he opened the gate—and he dreaded the meeting; but when his father fell on his neck and kissed him, then he knew that the "prodigal son" was restored.

A STORY ABOUT ZACH CHANDLER.

At one time while the High Joints were in session here, a rupture on some point in diplomacy was very likely to take place, and the whole thing prove a flat failure. Mr. Fish was in a wonderful state of excitement about the matter, because it was his personal ox that was to be gored by any mishap. The English representatives had received orders not to yield the point in dispute, and, if they could not obtain the concession, to come home. This ominous word came direct from her Royal Highness, the Queen, and the British diplomats lost no time in communicating this fact to the Secretary of State. In his sore dilemma he invited the President and cabinet to discuss the problem over a dinner plate at his house that evening, and all were on hand. It was, of course, the general opinion that our government must insist on the point, but how to do so in a diplomatic way was the question. At last Mr. Fish suggested that Zach. Chandler, then in the Senate, be called in as consulting physician; and there being an evening session, the stalwart Michigander was soon driven to the conclave in Mr. Fish's carriage.

"Well, what's the matter now?" demanded old Zachariah.

Mr. Fish proceeded to unfold the dilemma in his polished phraseology, making the whole question clear to Mr. Chandler's mind.

"Now, Senator, what would you suggest? What shall we do?"

The Senator brought down his cane on the floor and said: "Do about it? Why, tell the old lady to go to the devil! You can put it in better diplomatic language; but that's the idea."—Washington Capital.

Less study and more exercise should be the rule for our girls. Upon good health and upon the ability to perform her functions easily and naturally depends, in a very large degree, the comfort and happiness of women in later years. Our girls rush through the years of their adolescense utterly regardless of the great need of intervals of rest. And if the careful mother or the watchful physician insist upon periodical repose, they submit to it most ungraciously and with an impatient criticism upon their sex which is pitiful. They try to live as if there were no swing of tide in their organism. They wish to live down and put under reckless foot the necessities of their sex, but it is the old fight with wind mills, with this difference: Don Quixote recovered from his hurts; but they, in too many cases, never do.—A Boston Physician.

On a recent voyage of the Cunard steamship Bothnia, from New York to Liverpool, there was a Boston schoolmaster among the passengers. He was greatly interested in watching the compass and the course of the ship, and having figured out that the captain's course was wrong, he felt compelled to tell him so. Said the schoolmaster: "Captain, if you continue in the course you are now sailing, you will bring up at Gibraltar." The captain replied that he had friends at Gibraltar who would be glad to see him. When the ship arrived off Queenstown, and the schoolmaster was assured of that agreeable fact, he asked the captain how it was that he could have been so mistaken in his reckoning. "Not being a schoolmaster, I can't say," answered the captain.

The deaf man who had a scolding wife remarked, "Man wants but little hear below."

Together.

If we could go together, dear,
Hand in hand,
As we have braved all dangers here,
Sea or land,
Wouldn't it be the best of cheer,
To wake up there as we left here,
And find ourselves together, dear?

We've often had our trials, dear,
On the road,
And sometimes known a little fear
With our load.
But when we could not conquer, dear,
And troublesome times made all things drear,
We've always drawn the closer, dear.

And aren't you very happy, dear,
That we two,
Who've sailed along from year to year,
Not a few,
Have never had one storm appear,
One squall or cloud to cause a fear,
Or shipwreck love or faith, my dear?

I wish the Lord would tell us, dear—
Make us know,
That whether we are there or here,
Stay or go,
He'll never, never part us, dear;
Or, if He must, He'll make it clear,
It will not be for long, my dear.

But we can trust Him, can't we, dear,
As our friend?
There's no room for doubt or fear,
Of the end.
And won't it be the best of cheer,
To wake up there as we left here,
And find ourselves together, dear?

THE CRITIQUE.

A man, a desk, a room. The man was in the room, and his feet were on the desk.

Nothing was wasted.

The man was an editor.

Somebody rapped at the door.

"Come in," said the editor.

It was a boy.

He laid a book on the editor's table, and went out again.

The editor looked at it a while, and then took it into another room, where there was another man with his feet on the desk. He was writing busily, but ceased his work as the editor came in.

He was a literary person.

"Give this a good notice," said the editor.

"All right," said the literary person. Then the editor went out.

The clock in one corner of the room kept up an incessant ticking. The literary person disliked the clock, but the man who wrote the financial articles owned the clock, and would not allow it to be removed. He said its ticking reminded him of the way bankers did business.

After a while the literary person finished his review of a book on the ethics of protoplasm, and stopped writing. Presently he looked at the book which the editor had left. He had never seen anything like it before, but he did not weaken. Again his pen traveled rapidly over the paper. This is what he wrote:

"We have received from the publishers a dainty little work, entitled "Records of Trotting and Pacing in the United States and Canadas for 1880," and can warmly recommend it to our readers. While the plot is one replete with sensational incidents and situations, it is yet of a character that can offend none, teaching, as it does, the lesson that true progress is attained only by earnest effort. The almost idyllic story of Maud S. and St. Julien, who seem to be the principal characters in the story, is told in a simple yet finished manner, and one lays down the book with a restful feeling at the heart that should always be produced by a properly constructed novel."

The next day the editor saw this in his paper. He read it carefully, and said:

"—— —— —— —— —— ——!"

PROVIDING FOR DAUGHTERS.

The way of happiness and comfort for any middle-aged woman would be much easier if a different method was pursued by parents toward their daughters while they are still young. Half the terrors of a single life to a woman lie in the fact that she will never have a home of her own, but must remain a dependent on fathers and brothers; the one too many in the household; the beneficiary on sufferance in the family, though she actually works twice as much as the actual members. A father naturally sets his son on his own feet at coming of age; but as naturally he keeps his daughter dependent on himself. It is a pleasure, perhaps, to him, to give her her gowns and pin-money at thirty as when she was three. He does not reflect that she has the longing, equally natural to every man and woman, to take her own place in the world; to be a rooted plant, not a parasite. The difficulty is easily solved. If the father is wealthy, let him settle absolutely upon his daughter, when she is of a marrying age, the amount he would have given her as dower, instead of doling out the interest as constant gifts; if he is a poor man, let him give her some trade or occupation by which she can earn her own money. This course would obviate the mercenary necessity of marriage which rises night and day before the penniless, dependent woman.—N. Y. Tribune.

OUR LIVES.

Life is very critical. Any word may be our last. Any farewell, even amid glee and merriment, may be forever. If this truth were but burned into our consciousness, and if it ruled as a deep conviction and real power in our lives, would it not give a new meaning to our relationships? Would it not make us far more tender than we sometimes are? Would it not oftentimes put a rein upon our rash and impetuous speech? Would we carry in our hearts the miserable suspicions and jealousies that now so often embitter the fountains of our lives? Would we be so impatient of the faults of others? Would we allow the trivial misunderstanding to build up a wall between us and those who ought to stand very close to us? Would we keep alive petty quarrels year after year which a manly word any day would compose? Would we pass old friends and neighbors on the street without recognition, because of some real or fancied slight, some wounding of pride, or ancient grudge? Or would we be so chary of kind words, our commendation, our sympathy, our comfort, when weary hearts all about us are breaking for just such expressions of interest or appreciation as we have in our power to give?

He is a fault-finding man. Nothing ever pleases him. While he was lying sick with a heavy cold the other evening, his wife brought him in a beautiful new porous plaster, and he said: "The man who shot that thing must have been firing at quail."

Why is the earth like a blackboard?—Because men multiply upon the face of it.

HOUSE CLEANING HINTS.

Helen Campbell, in her recent book on housekeeping, gives some very excellent and helpful hints in regard to house cleaning, which our lady readers, who are about passing through that ordeal, will be very glad to see. She says: If coal or wood are to be laid in for the Winter supply let it be done before house cleaning begins, as otherwise much dust will be spread through the house. It is not necessary to take up heavy carpets every year or oftener than once in two or three years unless they are in constant use. The tacks, however, should be taken out every year and the carpet folded back a yard or two and the floor washed in strong suds in which borax has been dissolved at the rate of a tablespoonful to a pail of water, and after dusting black pepper on the edges tack the carpet down again. By this means moths are kept away, and as corners and folds are their favorite hiding places they are searched out and destroyed. Ingrain and other carpets after being taken up can be brightened in color by sprinkling a pound or two of salt over their surface and sweeping carefully. It is useful to occasionally wipe off the carpet with borax water, using a wet flannel and taking care not to wet the carpet but only to dampen it. Mirrors should also be wiped with borax water, the cloth being wet enough to dampen it. In scouring paint sapolio is better than sand, and in all cases a little borax should be placed in the water. Mirrors can be cleaned with whiting, afterward being rubbed with a woolen cloth, or they can be polished and dried with old newspapers. Oil paintings should simply be wiped with a damp cloth, and if picture cord is soiled that should be wiped off to secure against moths. Soap should never be used on varnished work of any sort. An excellent way of keeping winter clothing during the summer is to place it in bags made of several thicknesses of newspapers, printers' ink being one of the most successful protections against moths. Gum camphor is also good. A pound of gum camphor sewed in little bags will last a long time. Before putting away woolen clothing, flannels, etc., they should be carefully washed and shaken in order to get rid of any moth eggs.

Mr. Edwin Cowles, editor of the Cleveland (O.) Leader, suffers from a unique kind of deafness, which he thus describes: "My deafness is somewhat of the nature of color blindness. There are certain sounds I never hear. I have never heard the sound of the bird since I came into this world, and until I grew up to manhood I had always supposed the music of the bird was a poetical fiction. You may fill this room with canary birds, and they may all sing at once, and I would never hear a note, but I would hear the flutterings of their wings. I never hear the hissing sound in the human voice, consequently, not knowing of the existence of that sound, I grew up to manhood without ever making it in my speech. A portion of the consonants I never hear, yet I can hear all the vowels. I never could distinguish the difference between the hard sound of the letter 'c' and the soft sound; consequently, I frequently mix these sounds in a sad manner. It is the same with the soft and hard sound of the letter 'g.' It was only by accident, after my marriage, that I discovered the existence of the hissing sound in the human voice."

Giveadam Jones here secured the floor and observed that the time had come for the Lime Kiln Club to take another leading step. He would therefore offer the following resolution: Resolved, Dat from and arter dis date dis club will officially number de hours of time de same as hours of de day, from 1 o'clock to 24 o'clock. Trustee Pullback said that if there were 24 hours in a day it was all right to say 23 o'clock. Nullification Q. Jones said there was no more use in having two 12's o'clocks than there was in having two girls named Sarah. General Wholesale White said it might sound a little strange to tell a man that you would meet him at 15 o'clock to talk business, but he was in favor of the change and would hereafter have dinner at 13 o'clock. Many other members spoke in favor of the resolution, and when the question was called it was adopted by a unanimous vote. From this date the meetings of the club will open at 20 o'clock, and the new arrangement will be recognized in all official correspondence.

One of our citizens, who feared the pit on his arm wasn't all that it should be in these small-pox times, attempted last Sunday to vaccinate himself. Procuring a quantity of virus and a pen-knife, he proceeded to puncture his arm and stuff in the antidote; in fact, he thought he would get in enough of it this time to last through the year. Before night he began to get reports from the seat of vaccination, and by the next morning he had an arm as big as a college oarsman's and a commingling of pains and cramps and cruciations that awoke in him all the emotions of his nature that he had ever heard of, including some that were entirely new to him. He thought that arm had the gout, the toothache, sciatic rheumatism, neuralgia, cerebro-spinal-meningitis and hepatica flaviolus, all combined, and vows that hereafter he will die of small-pox a dozen times before having anything more to do with vaccination.—Brockton Gazette.

The young man who, under the pressure of the least real or fancied adversity, takes to drink, is a grown-up baby; but he is nursing the wrong bottle. The young man who is ashamed of his mother because she doesn't "put on style," and of his father because he doesn't use elegant language, is a baby that had no business to have ever grown up. An overdose of soothing syrup would have been a blessing to him. The eighteen-years-old girl who is sentimental, and sighs for his early coming at the gate —well, she is a grown-up baby that likes to sit in a lap as well as she ever did.—New Haven Register.

A sharp youth fresh from school having gone to visit a good-natured uncle, the latter placed on the table fifteen fine oranges and fifteen apples and desired his young friend to take half; he, not liking the apples, was about to take the fifteen oranges; but, this monopoly being objected to, the old gentleman told him to range all the fruit in a circle and take away every ninth. The clever fellow ranged them in such a way that, by taking every ninth, all the apples were left on the table, and the oranges transferred to his pocket.

He was a fine looking man, and he proudly strutted down the sidewalk with the air of proprietorship in every movement. "Beg pardon," said a stranger as he stepped up to him, hat in hand, in utmost humility. "Do I have your permission to remain in town over night?"

The Journal.

SATURDAY, MAY 14, 1881.

THIS constant dumping of the State's money into the Hoosac tunnel is an outrage upon the tax payers. If a year of Gen. Butler in the State House would rid the State of this insatiable hole, his election would not be an unqualified misfortune.

HON. J. D. B. COGGSWELL, formerly president of the State Senate, has been removed from the receivership of the Sandwich Savings Bank because of deficiencies in his accounts amounting to $2600. He was given time in which to refund, but failed to do so.

BOSTON is talking of a world's fair in 1885, now that the New York fair has fallen through, using as a nucleus the buildings now being erected for exhibition purposes. This would make quite a saving in expense, and the friends of the project are confident that it would pay for itself.

THE New York Legislature has passed a bill punishing vitriol throwers with imprisonment for not more than ten years. This is a move in the right direction, but the penalty is not severe enough. The wretch who will deliberately disfigure a person for life with vitriol should have the privilege of spending the remainder of his days behind the prison bars.

AT the Chicago convention last year it was voted that the Republican national committee prescribe and publish within a year the rules to govern the election of delegates to the next national convention in 1884. The year has nearly expired, and Chairman Jewell of the committee has issued a circular requesting Republicans throughout the country to offer suggestions as to the best method to be adopted.

SECRETARY WINDOM has extended the limit of time for receiving the six per cent bonds for continuance at 3½ per cent, to the 20th inst. Over $143,000,000 of the bonds have already been continued, and the refunding scheme has proved so successful that the secretary has now issued a call for the 5 per cents, which can be extended in the same way at 3½ per cent, except $75,000,000 of them, which the secretary will pay for in cash.

THE trades unions at Newark, N. J., propose to "boycott" the Advertiser and the Journal of that city, because their proprietors would not accede to the demands of their compositors for increased pay, and have put non-union men in their places. Two or three trade unions thereupon pledged their members not to take these papers, and to discontinue advertising patronage. This kind of thing may work well in Ireland, but it won't survive long in the free air of America.

THE weekly Republican of Springfield begins in this week's issue a new department, devoted especially to agricultural matters. The enterprising publishers have engaged a number of prominent agriculturists as contributors, and in the four or five columns to be devoted to the subject it is safe to say that farmers will find renewed reason for patronizing this popular paper. The list of contributors, with other interesting facts, will be found in its prospectus in another column.

STANLEY MATTHEWS was on Thursday confirmed as associate justice of the United States Supreme Court, by a vote of 22 to 21. The judiciary committee reported almost unanimously against the confirmation, but the influences brought to bear in his favor were stronger than their unfavorable report, and he barely squeezed in. All the New England Senators are reported to have voted against him, and his confirmation seems very unfortunate. He has ample ability, but it is feared that he is lacking in the mental balance which is an important essential in that position. An effort was made to reconsider the vote yesterday.

OUR Legislature couldn't resist the temptation to enjoy an extra session next November. It is such a nice time to go down to Boston for a few weeks, you know, after the crops are all in. And then, too, there is such a pressing demand for it. The last Legislature appointed able commissioners to revise the statutes, providing that the revision should be accepted or rejected by the present Legislature without amendment. That didn't trouble our Solons, though. They appointed a large committee to revise the revisers, and next Fall will go down in all their majesty to re-revise the revised revisers and their re-revision. It is a fine thing, you see. But the fun will come in when the people get a chance to revise the legislators themselves.

A young woman in Springfield wanted to avoid a young man whom she suspected of a desire to escort her home from a recent social at the State Street Baptist church, so she went slyly up the back stairs, intending to escape from the audience room to the street, but by a misstep was sent splashing into the open baptistery.

John Evans, of Leakville, N. C., has for many years been in the habit of swallowing a handful of gravel after each meal, under the impression that it was necessary for his digestion. He is in robust health, but had to call in a physician once to extract the gravel from his body.

The Sound steamer Providence was at the mercy of a squad of 130 drunken sailors, on its passage to New York a few nights ago, and the passengers dared not leave their state-rooms, while the boat hands had all they could do to look after the safety of the boat.

Arrangements which have been in progress for some time are now completed, and Clark W. Bryan of Great Barrington, formerly of Springfield, will soon start a large publishing and printing establishment at Holyoke.

AT THE STATE HOUSE.

The Legislature expected to finish up its business yesterday, and go home for the hot weather, with the pleasant prospect of meeting again in November to consider the revision of the statutes. In the meantime the committee on the revision, enlarged by the addition of the members of the judiciary committees, is authorized to continue its work during the Summer, holding sessions in the Senate chamber, with the aid of a corps of clerks, messengers, etc.

The Hoosac Tunnel continues to swallow the people's money. A resolve that the tunnel road ought to be double-tracked in three years has been passed, and $325,000 appropriated to begin the work.

The State tax this year is to be $1,500,000, or $500,000 more than Gov. Long put as the outside limit in his message. This is made necessary by the $325,000 appropriation for the tunnel, $52,000 for changes in state house, $100,000 or so for an extra session, etc.

The committee on election laws has done a good thing in reporting a bill, which has passed both branches, to aid in preserving order at elections or town or ward meetings. It provides that no person shall smoke or have in his possession any lighted cigar, cigarette or pipe in any town hall or ward room at any such meeting, under penalty of confinement during the meeting, and a fine not exceeding $20. The bill also prohibits any person having liquor in any such place of meeting.

The Senate has defeated the bill establishing boards of visiting physicians to the lunatic hospitals.

Gov. Long has vetoed the resolve instructing the harbor commissioners to report to the next Legislature a plan for improving the flats at South Boston, on account of the attached provision that no expenses should be incurred under it for traveling out of the State. This the Governor considered an invidious reflection upon the action of one of the commissioners in going to Europe last year to inspect docks, with a view to improving the State's property.

The bill to relieve property from double taxation may fail of a passage, as the House will not concur in some Senate amendments. The bill is now in the hands of a committee of conference.

Thirty-four dog licenses have been taken out so far this year, against 52 at the corresponding period last year. Quite a number of people are making themselves liable to prosecution by delaying to procure their licenses.

The young people of the Congregational society are making preparations for a dramatic entertainment, in the vestry of their church, next Wednesday evening, when they will produce the drama, "The Turn of the Tide: or Wrecked in Port."

The Doctor's Club met on Thursday with Dr. Ballard of Hampden, Dr. Stowe of this place reading an essay on "Gastric Remittent Fever." The next meeting will be held with Dr. Fuller of Monson, with Dr. Smith of Indian Orchard as essayist.

The familiar rattle of the ice cart is heard once more, and is a welcome sound with the thermometer up in the nineties. The price of ice in the village this season will be 30 cents a hundred. Last year, when it was so scarce, it was sold for 40 and 50 cents.

Superintendent Tufts treated the State Primary School children to a May day party Wednesday afternoon, all assembling in a grove, where music, refreshments, a May pole and other attractions combined to make an afternoon of enjoyment and pleasant remembrances for all.

A. L. Murdock, the drummer who purchased a ticket at Springfield for Pittsfield which the conductor refused to take because it had been punched, and was locked up at Pittsfield because he would not pay his fare over again, has been awarded $4000 damages. He sued the road for $20,000.

Sanford Partridge, a brakeman on Conductor Warner's train, lost his hold in climbing a freight car in the yard at this place Wednesday afternoon, and fell to the ground, striking a telegraph pole and injuring his spine quite seriously, it is feared. He was taken to his home at Montville, Ct., on the evening boat train.

Some people are made sick by riding on the cars. It is said that a sheet of writing paper, worn next to the person, over the chest, is a sure preventive of the trouble in nine cases out of ten. This is supposed to be the reason why many young people carry not merely one, but often many sheets, closely written over, next to their hearts.

According to the surveys of the New London Northern Railroad, their track at Palmer is 333 feet above tide water; at Monson, 380 feet; Three Rivers, 312; Belchertown, 476; Amherst, 258 feet. The highest point on the main line is State Line, 632 feet, though South Londonderry, Vt., on the narrow gauge extension, is 1054 feet above tide water.

Frank Ruggles's horse stepped on a rolling stone near the cemetery Wednesday evening and stumbled, pulling the lines from Mr. Ruggles's hands. He jumped out to recover them, but was thrown down, and the horse came on down Thorndike street, one of the ladies in the buggy letting herself out at the rear end. The other one kept her seat, and the horse was soon stopped, no particular damage being done.

Wm. Haskell Allen of this town is quite a Nimrod. During the past Winter he has caught one wild cat, one otter, 5 'coons, 12 minks, 18 foxes, 90 skunks and 102 muskrats—quite a collection of fur animals, considering the cold weather and deep snow—besides chopping fifty cords of wood. In the last five years Mr. Allen has caught 1500 fur animals, consisting of 4 otters, 28 'coons, 43 foxes, 49 minks, 490 muskrats and 886 skunks.

A little fellow in an adjoining town went to his mother the other day in a sad state of doubt and perplexity, and told her that he had been praying to the Lord for several days, but the Lord would not answer him. The mother endeavored to comfort and cheer his sorrowing heart and encourage his faith, and finally asked what he had been praying for. Promptly came the answer, "Advertising cards;" and it is needless to add that his prayers did not remain unanswered much longer.

Summer weather has broken in upon us in full force this week, and the thermometer has ranged from 80 to 95 in the shade with a persistency which has completely wilted humanity, but has proved a wonderful tonic for Dame Nature. The trees have put forth their foliage at an astonishing rate, pear and apple trees are blossoming, and Spring may now be considered to have fully assumed the management of affairs. It is a busy season for farmers and gardeners, who in turning over the soil find that the earth is quite dry in many places, and are longing for rain. A thunder storm Thursday night cooled the air and wet up the surface of the ground somewhat, but much more rain is needed.

This village seems likely to have the unusual experience of losing all of its church pastors this summer. Rev. C. H. Eaton has just closed his pastorate at the Universalist church. Rev. B. M. Fullerton of the Congregational church has not yet taken any formal action upon his call to Waltham, but will in all probability accept it, terminating his successful pastorate of nearly 13½ years sometime during the summer; while Rev. T. C. Russell, pastor of the Baptist churches in this place and Three Rivers, has given notice that he will close his labors here July 1st. The churches will be fortunate if they succeed in procuring three pastors of as much ability and faithfulness as the present incumbents.

Mrs. J. W. Brigham was very severely injured at the straw shop of Marchant & Brigham last Saturday afternoon. Mr. Brigham had stepped inside for a moment, leaving her sitting in the carriage, when the steam whistle blew, frightening the horse, which turned sharply and upset the carriage, throwing Mrs. Brigham to the ground with considerable force, breaking her nose and jaw, the latter in two places, while her face, body and limbs were badly bruised. Mrs. Brigham has been in frail health for some time, and it was feared that the shock would prove fatal, but she has improved to such an extent that it is now hoped she will fully recover. The carriage went over with such force as to rebound into an upright position, and the horse was stopped without further injury, after running a short distance.

The special town meeting on Tuesday afternoon called out an attendance of about 200, and the question of disposing of the old school house and lot at Three Rivers and erecting a new building near the common, was quite thoroughly ventilated. Geo. W. Randall was chosen moderator, and motion was made by Dr. Ruggles that the town build a new school house on the lot named, in accordance with plans in the hands of the school committee. Quite an extended debate followed, during which Agent Baker of the Otis Co. took occasion to state the attitude of that company in regard to the matter. He stated that the company had no present use for the school house or lot, and were not anxious to secure possession of it, nor to dispose of the lot on which it was proposed to build, though ready to exchange lots if the town desired to do so. Two or three spoke in favor of the motion, but the general sentiment of the meeting was decidedly against it, and when the question came to a vote it was defeated by a large majority, and the meeting then adjourned. Some criticism was made on the course of the petitioners for the meeting, in making the articles so that the town had no option in the matter, but must vote to make just the change proposed, or take no action at all. More school room is needed at Three Rivers, and the town is ready to make provision for it, we believe, in such a way as the citizens of that village may desire, but this meeting showed that only a small portion of those present from there were in favor of the proposed change.

LUDLOW.

Col. John Miller, who died last Saturday at the age of 88, was well known in all this region, and had been a prominent figure in the town for many years, having filled several offices in the town, and deriving his military title from his early connection with the militia. He was the youngest of four brothers, all of whom have died within the past five years. He leaves a widow 87 years old, to whom he had been married for 66 years, and also 10 children.

WALES.

The hot weather has started out the local ice dealer.

Mr. N. Holmes, the organ dealer, has moved his family to Northampton.

S. H. Sibley & Son are running out stock, and will shut down in a few weeks.

A new bell is soon to be put in the belfry of the Baptist church, to take the place of the old and cracked one.

Mrs. George L. Webber of Holland was thrown from the carriage while on her way to church last Sunday, and quite seriously injured, cracking one rib, and being badly jarred. It was all on account of a defective highway.

MONSON.

Miss Winslow's dancing school closed Monday evening with a social.

The harmony society closed rehearsals for the season Tuesday evening.

Geo. C. Collins of Westfield is organist at the Congregational church.

Daniel O'Brien bought the Rockwell Keeney place on Washington street Wednesday for $3500.

Miss Maggie Carberry, organist of St. Patrick's church, is to have charge of choirs at Palmer, West Springfield and Mittineague.

This evening the "Tableaux of Erin" exhibit at Central Hall. Next week Wednesday the Catholic society give another entertainment, and Friday evening the West Warren Dramatic Club present a play at the same place.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

Water in the river is very low for this season of the year.

Rev. T. B. Smith will preach at the chapel Sunday evening.

Rye has taken an upward movement, $1.08 now being offered.

The sale of the old cheese factory in this village takes place next Wednesday.

James W. Bennett has exchanged his house in this village for the farm of Wells S. Phelps of Stony Hill, paying $800 to boot.

The rehearsal of singing for the Sabbath services will be held at the chapel this (Saturday) evening. It is very desirable that all who sing will attend.

Dennis Powers has the refusal of a piece of land containing about 6 acres on the road to the Street, just beyond the school house, where he expects to build this Fall.

WARREN.

The boot and shoe business is rather dull.

The skating rink opened Thursday evening.

Rev. David Moyes has been elected school committee.

The park has put on its best attire, and is looking very fresh and green.

The Warren Band are to furnish music on Decoration Day, the 30th inst.

The Ladies' Home Missionary Society met with Mrs. Abbie Shepard Wednesday afternoon.

Several of our farmers are sending their cream to Boston. The milk car is now loaded after six in the evening.

The Methodist society have formed an association for the purpose of building a parsonage, and have chosen a committee to select a site.

The Quaboag Engine Company have chosen S. A. Brown foreman, D. M. Button and F. P. Keefer assistants, and Charles L. Smith clerk and treasurer.

The annual meeting of the Woman's Board of Missions for Worcester county will be held in the Congregational church June 2d. A large attendance is expected.

A special town meeting will be held to-day, to see if the town will not rescind its vote in favor of a $2000 addition to the Center school house, and vote to build a new house near Maple street.

INDIAN ORCHARD.

A class of about 75 is to be confirmed at St. Matthew's church Sunday.

The Evangelical Sunday school have chosen Dr. S. F. Smith superintendent for another year, and he has reappointed the subordinate officers.

D. L. Fuller is to convert the barn on Oak street, which he lately bought of O. E. Tilley, into a dwelling house, and move it back from the street some feet.

Early in the present year a revival was started in the evangelical church and has continued ever since, and the labors of the christian people, aided by the praying band from Springfield, have been crowned with success beyond expectation. Few indeed are the churches, located even in places twice the size of the Orchard, which receive so large an accession in one day as did this church last Sunday. Over 300 persons assembled to witness the ceremonies. Especial pains had been taken to decorate the church, and a profusion of house plants, evergreens and wild flowers was the result, the pulpit and other parts of the audience room being handsomely draped with ivy and tarletan. The pastor, Rev. F. M. Sprague, delivered a short sermon from Rev. 22:17, after which 35 received the ordinance of baptism, and were, with 18 others previously baptized, taken into the church on profession of faith, 15 also being admitted by letter, making a total of 68. Two of the letters were from Sweden, and two from Germany. The membership is now about 128, 111 being resident members.

WARE AND VICINITY.

Such a dust through Main street is almost intolerable.

The outside of the Otis Company's new mill is completed.

Good russet apples at a dollar fifty per barrel are cheap for this time of the year.

A gang of men are at work on the Mass. Central R. R. about half a mile above the village.

E. C. Fenn is moving his market business into the south end of Sheldon's block with W. F. Coney.

Gamaliel Marsh will not return to Chicopee for a residence, having sold his house there the past week.

The graduating exercises of the senior class of the high school are to be held at the East Congregational church.

The committee of the East Congregational society have sold the old market building on Church street to L. W. Robinson. It will be moved to the lot north of Storrs' new block, which has been leased for that purpose.

The wonderful Engle clock is to be exhibited at Music Hall three days next week, May 19, 20 and 21. This is a most remarkable piece of machinery, and is said by some who have seen both to even surpass the famous Strasburg clock. This clock produces forty-eight moving figures, twenty-six more than any clock in the world.

The house and barn of Alva Leonard, situated on the Gilbertville road, about three miles from Ware, were totally destroyed by fire on Friday afternoon of last week. The fire was supposed to have taken from a defective chimney. Insured for $1400. Mr. Leonard has moved into the village, and his horse, cow and farming tools are to be sold at auction to-day.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles S. Robinson go the last of this month to take the position of master and matron in the farm house of the reform school at Westboro. This is an entirely unexpected opening for them, they not even knowing such a position was vacant. They were recommended to the superintendent as the persons for the place, by parties in Boston, who knew he was about selling out here.

At the adjourned parish meeting in the chapel Monday evening the building committee were authorized to purchase the lot on Church street now occupied by the market building, and to sell the building, also to receive bids for the lot on which the chapel now stands. One member was added to the finance committee, and they were instructed to continue the circulation of the subscription paper. About $300 more is needed to make up the amount required.

At the meeting of the voters of fire district No. 1 at Music Hall Monday afternoon the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Chief Engineer, Thomas C. Gleason; assistant engineers, Myron Ramsdell, Edward A. Aldrich, William Medcalf, Frank Ward; clerk, Charles E. Blood; treasurer, Otis Lane; prudential committee, Frank P. Clark, George C. Holden, George Gould. It was voted to raise $420 to pay Oregon Engine Company for their services this year. E. H. Baker, C. D. Gilbert, D. W. Miner, P. McMahon, C. E. Stevens and H. Ramsdell were chosen a committee to take in consideration the matter of building an engine house and cisterns, and are to report at an adjourned meeting to be held the 23d of May. Some of the most important articles were left to be acted upon at the adjourned meeting.

The Congregational church at Holbrook settled a pastor on Tuesday, after being without one for three years, and hearing 240 candidates. Even then a number of members protested against the action of the council.

A Florida grower, who has been shipping cucumbers North for two weeks past, receives $3.50 per dozen for these incendiary vegetables.

There were in the United States the past year 962 daily papers, with an aggregate circulation of 3,581,187, for which the people are supposed to pay annually $26,250,100.

Only once before since its completion, 57 years ago, has it been necessary to postpone to so late a date as this year the opening of the Erie Canal.

Besides having by far the largest and best stocked dry goods store in Springfield, Forbes & Wallace have just finished a most elegant front. The show windows are of the largest French plate glass. The finish is in hard woods, natural color. A broad entrance in the center takes the place of the former entrances. The new floor at the entrance is laid in colored tiles. The chance to display fine dress goods is better than at any store in the city. Our readers who intend to visit the city will admire the improved appearance of this popular store, which under the illumination of the electric light arrests the attention of all passers-by, and whose great bargains inside daily attract throngs.

CATARRH is a poisonous infection of the mucous membrane, just as small pox is a virus of the blood. Catarrhal virus can be only reached and exterminated by antidotal, inoculative elements, that are absorbed by the purulent mucous. DR. A NEW DEPARTURE
In the Weekly Republican!

Since its foundation nearly 60 years ago the Springfield Republican has always contributed generously to the instruction and entertainment of its large rural constituency by its agricultural news. To make the paper still more valuable as a guide and assistant to farmers and their families it has been determined to introduce a special agricultural department into the weekly edition. This department will be begun in the number of May 13. It will occupy from four to five columns of space, contain a variety of valuable original and selected matter, and be under the charge of a trained agriculturalist. Each week there will be a special article on some live subject by a leading agricultural writer. Among those who have already been secured as contributors are Dr. Geo. B. Loring, president of the New England agricultural society, Dr. E. Lewis Startevant of South Framingham, secretary of the society for the promotion of agricultural science, Maj. Henry E. Alvord of Easthampton, President Chadbourne of Williams College, President Levi Stockbridge of the Amherst Agricultural College, and James S. Grinnell of Greenfield. Particular attention will be given to describing local enterprises and experiments in agriculture and to reporting local meetings and discussions. The other departments of the Weekly, news, editorial, literary, religious and miscellaneous, will be kept up to their recognized high standard, and all of the best characteristics of the paper carefully preserved.

In order to permit those who are not now subscribers to the Weekly to try it at slight expense, after this important addition to its attractions has been made, trial subscriptions from May 20 to the close of the year will be received at 60 cents, and from July 1 for 50 cents.

Sample copies free.

The Two Countries.

There is a land of tears and bitter wailing—
A land most like that drear one Dante knew,
Where wan-faced Niobes, with dark robes trailing,
In sad procession move, brow-bound with rue.
It is a land peopled by witless mortals—
Compared with them the virgins five were wise,
And it is writ above their gloomy portals:
"We Did Not Think It Paid To Advertise."

There is a land that flows with milk and honey—
Not the condensed, nor yet the sorghum strains;
Each dweller bears a gripsack fat with money,
Bonds, coupons, stocks, and various other gains.
Happy are these as, at high tide, the clamlet;
No fear doth drown the laughter in their eyes;
For better luck they'd not donate one damlet;
The pastry's theirs - they learned to Advertise.

THE NUMBER OF BUFFALO KILLED LAST WINTER.

It is estimated by competent authorities that 100,000 buffalo hides will be shipped out of the Yellowstone country this season. Two firms alone are negotiating for the transportation of 25,000 hides each. When to this is added the immense amount of skins and furs of other kinds—deer, elk, antelope, bear, beaver, etc.—some idea may be formed of the extent of the Yellowstone pelt and fur trade.

Most of our citizens saw the big load of buffalo hides that the C. K. Peck brought down last season, a load that hid everything about the boat below the hurricane-deck roof. There were 10,000 hides in that load, and they were all brought out of the Yellowstone on one trip, and transferred to the C. K. Peck. How such a load could have been piled on the little Terry not even the men on the boat appear to know. It hid every part of the boat, barring only the pilot house and the smokestacks. But such a load will not be attempted again. For such boats as ply the Yellowstone there are at least fifteen full loads of buffalo hides and other pelts. Reckoning 1000 hides to three car loads, and adding to this fifty cars for the other pelts, it will take at least 350 box cars to carry this stupendous bulk of peltry East to market. These are not guesses, but estimates made by men whose business it is to know about the amount of hides and furs awaiting shipment.

Nothing like it has ever been known in the history of the fur trade. Last season the output of buffalo hides was above the average, and last year only about 30,000 hides came out of the Yellowstone country, or less than a third of what is there now awaiting shipment.

The past severe Winter caused the buffalo to bunch themselves in a few valleys where there was pasturage, and there the slaughter went on all Winter. There was no sport about it, simply shooting down the famine-tamed animals as cattle might be shot down in a barnyard.

To the credit of the Indians it can be said that they killed no more than they could save the meat from. The greater part of the slaughter was done by white hunters, or butchers, rather, who followed the business of killing and skinning buffalo by the month, leaving the carcasses to rot. When the buffalo are all killed off, as they bid fair to be in a very few years at this rate, then everybody will wonder that the Government did not do something to preserve this, the noblest of animal game, or at least prevent the killing of the buffalo for the hides alone.—Sioux City Journal.

"Look here," said Gus De Smith to a newspaper reporter, "you tell me a couple of good jokes; I want to get 'em off as original, you know, at a little social gathering to-night. I will lend you $5 if you do." "Can't possibly do it. If you get off the jokes everybody will know you stole them, and if it leaks out that I've got $5 everybody will think the same of me." Hence the dead-lock still continues. —Galveston News.

An exchange tells of a young lady who, six months after a happy marriage, on being asked if she was much troubled with cold feet, simpered hesitatingly, and with ingenious simplicity replied: "Ye-yes; but—they're not my own."

According to Josh Billings "pashence is a good thing for a man to hav; but when he haz got so much ov it that he kan fish all day over the side ov a boat without eny bait on his hook, lazyness is what's the matter with him."

Old Twiggs: "Hello Jones, got your feet sopping wet, haven't you? Why don't you wear rubbers, as I do? I haven't wet my feet in six months." Jones: "Well, I should think you'd be ashamed to say so!"

"We want an impetus!" shouts a contemporary. Somebody should place an inverted tack on his chair. It goes right to the spot every time; and if no impetus, no pay.

Josh Billings says: "I haven't much doubt but that man sprung from the monkey, but what bothers me is where the cursed monkey sprung from."

Parties who ascend Bunker Hill Monument are like newspaper advertisers—they all want to get to the top of the column.

Doubt is a coward, a traitor and a liar. Ever since the world began our hopes have been truer than our fears.

The reason why the female sex is so fond of ribbons is doubtless because Eve was made of a rib-bone.

A crusty old bachelor says he thinks it's woman, and not her wrongs, that ought to be redressed.

Every cloud has a silver lining. The boy who has the mumps can stay away from school.

Hundreds of men, women and children rescued from beds of pain, sickness and almost death and made strong and hearty by Parker's Ginger Tonic are the best evidences in the world of its sterling worth. You can find these in every community. —Post. See advertisement. 5w6

WILL IT CURE ME?

Said a man whose wobegone countenance and broken-down constitution plainly showed traces of disease—a sufferer with Nervous Dyspepsia, in whose stomach the most delicate morsel lay like lead. Refreshing sleep and quiet nerves were strangers to him, and he despaired of ever being well.

We advised him to take

Simmons Liver Regulator,

which he did, and in a short time was not only relieved but cured.

Reader, if you are suffering with Dyspepsia or Liver Disease in any form, do not wait until the disease has taken a fast hold upon you, but use the Regulator when the symptoms first show themselves. It has relieved untold suffering. SIMMONS LIVER REGULATOR is not an alcoholic stimulant, but a PURELY VEGETABLE REMEDY that will cure when everything else fails. It is a faultless family medicine. Does not disarrange the system. Is no violent drastic purge, but nature's own remedy. The friend of everyone, and will not disappoint you. A single trial will convince you that it is the cheapest, purest and best Family Medicine in the world.

ASK the recovered dyspeptics, bilious sufferers, victims of fever and ague, the mercurial diseased patient how they recovered their health, cheerful spirits and good appetite--they will tell you by taking Simmons Liver regulator.

BACK ACHE

POSITIVELY CURED BY

BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS.

Reasons Why they are Preferred to All Other Porous Plasters or External Remedies:

FIRST.

Because they possess all the merit of the strengthening porous plaster, and contain in addition thereto the newly discovered powerful and active vegetable combination which acts with increased rubefacient, stimulating, sedative and counter irritant effects.

SECOND.

Because they are a genuine pharmaceutical preparation, and so recognized by the profession.

THIRD.

Because they are the only plasters that relieve pain ot once.

FOURTH.

Because they will positively cure diseases which other remedies will not even relieve.

FIFTH

Because over 5000 physicians and druggists have voluntarily testified that they are superior to all other plasters or medicines for external use.

SIXTH.

Because the manufacturers haue received the only medals ever given for porous plasters.

PARKER'S GINGER TONIC.—GINGER, BUCHU, MANDRAKE, STILLINGIA and many of the best medicines known are combined in Parker's Ginger Tonic, into a medicine of such varied and effective powers as to make it the greatest Blood Purifier and Liver Regulator, and the Best Health and Strength Restorer ever used.
It cures Dyspepsia, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Sleeplessness, and all diseases of the Stomach, Bowels, Lungs, Liver and Kidneys.
Remember! This Tonic never intoxicates, cures drunkenness, is the Best Family Medicine ever made, and is entirely different from Bitters, Ginger Preparations and other Tonics. None genuine without signature of HISCOX & Co., Chemists, N. Y.

PARKER'S HAIR BALSAM.—The best, cleanest and most economical Hair Restorer and Dressing. 4m6

MANTELS AND GRATES.—We have a choice selection of Mantels and Grates, Stucco Center Pieces, etc., etc. We would call special attention to our Shaking, Dumping, and Dustless open Parlor Fire-place. By the peculiar construction of the backs and sides, which are of cast iron lined with soap-stone, is found a dust flue which carries off the dust while shaking the fire, preventing the escape of the dust or ashes into the room. Mason work attended to.

HILL AND DRILL

PHOSPHATE.

SEND FOR PAMPHLET.

This is a bone superphosphate, and may be used on any crop, in the hill or drill or broadcast, either with or without manure, and will produce a much earlier and larger crop. In the report of the Massachusetts Inspector of Fertilizers, its valuation is from $3 to $10 per ton higher than other Phosphates which sell at the same price. The past year over 3000 tons were sold against 100 tons three years ago, showing that it is liked by the farmers. If there is no local agent near you send to us.

A NEW DEPARTURE
In the Weekly Republican!

Since its foundation nearly 60 years ago the Springfield Republican has always contributed generously to the instruction and entertainment of its large rural constituency by its agricultural news. To make the paper still more valuable as a guide and assistant to farmers and their families it has been determined to introduce a special agricultural department into the weekly edition. This department will be begun in the number of May 13. It will occupy from four to five columns of space, contain a variety of valuable original and selected matter, and be under the charge of a trained agriculturalist. Each week there will be a special article on some live subject by a leading agricultural writer. Among those who have already been secured as contributors are Dr. Geo. B. Loring, president of the New England agricultural society, Dr. E. Lewis Sturtevant of South Framingham, secretary of the society for the promotion of agricultural science, Maj. Henry E. Alvord of Easthampton, President Chadbourne of Williams College, President Levi Stockbridge of the Amherst Agricultural College, and James S. Grinnell of Greenfield. Particular attention will be given to describing local enterprises and experiments in agriculture and to reporting local meetings and discussions. The other departments of the Weekly, news, editorial, literary, religious and miscellaneous, will be kept up to their recognized high standard, and all of the best characteristics of the paper carefully preserved.

In order to permit those who are not now subscribers to the Weekly to try it at slight expense, after this important addition to its attractions has been made, trial subscriptions from May 20 to the close of the year will be received at 60 cents, and from July 1 for 50 cents.

Sample copies free.

Malaria.

Our baby lay in its mother's arms,
All sweet with its tiny dimpled charms;
But little mouth and tongue were sore,
And of its food 'twould take no more.
The doctor hemmed and shook his head,
And looking wise, he gravely said,
"Malaria—'tis plainly seen—
Three times a day give him quinine!"
Said grandmamma, "Dear me, that's new;
When I was young we called it 'sprue!'"

Our urchin, Tom, ne'er off his feet,
One day his dinner could not eat;
His head ached so, he was so ill,
Poor mother's heart with fear did fill.
The doctor felt his hands and head,
And looking wise, he gravely said,
"Malaria—'tis plainly seen—
Three times a day give him quinine!"
Said grandmamma, "That can't be so!
That boy's been smoking, sir, I know!"

Our lady Maud, at seventeen—
As bright a girl as e'er was seen—
One day turned languid, white and frail,
And roses red did strangely pale.
The doctor felt her pulse and said,
While wisely he did shake his head,
"Malaria—'tis plainly seen—
Three times a day give her quinine!"
Said grandmamma, "That can't be right!
Why, my good sir, she danced all night!"

Our pride, our eldest, Harry dear,
One night did act so strange and queer
That mother, frightened, panting said,
"Run for the doctor—he'll be dead!"
The doctor came, and shook his head,
And looking at him, grandly said,
"Malaria—'tis plainly seen—
Three times a day give him quinine!"
"What stuff!" said grandma, "I am thinking
That good-for-nothing boy's been drinking!"

The head of the house, forever well,
One day fell ill, and sad to tell,
Could not arise, but loud did cry,
"If this keeps on I'd rather die!"
The doctor came, stood by the bed,
And looking solemn, gravely said,
"Malaria—'tis plainly seen—
Three times a day give him quinine!"
Growled grandmamma, "Oh, fiddle dee dee!
He's only bilious, seems to me!"

One day our grandpa—eighty-four—
Complained that he could see no more;
That, at his age, it troubled him
That his good eyesight should grow dim.
"I've often seen it act that way,"
The doctor solemnly did say,
"Malaria—'tis plainly seen—
Three times a day give him quinine!"
But grandma said, "I never see!
Old man, you're growing old, like me!"

THE TALISMAN.

A pout upon the lips of Gerald Sinclair's young wife—unmistakably a pout—for, although a wife of almost two years, the fond, indulgent husband had for the first time said nay to an openly-expressed wish.

The fancy ball of the season, a grand and fashionable assemblage, was to take place during his absence, and he had said that he should prefer she did not attend.

She was only twenty. Let this much be said in extenuation of the two tears that rose to the brown eyes, and slowly trickled down the pretty face, splashing on the dainty morning dress, which, clinging to the dainty form, revealed so perfectly its graceful outlines.

Certainly Niobe had no reason to feel ashamed of this one of her children. But Gerald Sinclair had only stooped to kiss away the glistening drops, in a half-hurried manner, perhaps to hide his awakening remorse.

"Never mind, little wife, I'll make it up to you another time."

Then he was gone; but she sat still, turning and turning her wedding ring, with eyes bent upon it. It was a curious ring—a solid band, set with five large diamonds.

It had been her charm, her talisman, not to be taken from her finger until soul and body had parted; but this morning it had lost its charm. If it failed to scatter the clouds, it failed to bring back the sunshine.

Even when the hour came around for Gerald's home-coming he missed his usual warm welcome; but he thought that he might trust his wife's heart, and so said nothing. The next day he started on his journey.

"You're not going, my dear?" exclaimed Mrs. Martin, bursting in upon her friend on the morning of the ball. "And why not?"

"Gerald is away," replied Mrs. Sinclair, with some little show of wifely dignity, as though the fact were in itself sufficient explanation.

"And why need that make any difference?" pursued Mrs. Martin, a bewitching little widow some few years her friend's senior. "I will share my escort with you—Count Belzoni!"

Sophie Sinclair looked amazed. She knew that the man mentioned had but lately gained entree into society, and knew also that her husband disliked and distrusted him.

Once or twice she had seen his eye fixed admiringly upon herself, and had felt somewhat as a bird might feel beneath the basilisk glare of the serpent.

"Well, why don't you answer?" continued Mrs. Martin. "Will you go?"

"No, no," she replied, trying to speak with firm decision. "Besides, I do not think that Gerald admires the count."

"Prejudice. The count is one of the most charming and agreeable men I know. Indeed, I think I shall be canonized for my willingness to share his attentions, especially as I have heard him say all manner of pretty things about you."

"Nonsense, Ellen!" retorted Mrs. Sinclair. But she felt the ground slipping from her feet as she spoke.

After all Gerald had not said positively no. Had he thought it necessary after he had openly expressed his disapprobation of her going?

He had not known that she would be so sorely tempted. Besides, she would wear a mask. No one would know her, and when she told Gerald all he would forgive her. A sudden thought came to her.

"I will go," she said at last, after considerable urging, and looking at the picture in all its brightest lights, "on one condition, and that is, that no one is to know me, not even the count. Say that you have persuaded a friend to accompany you who wished to remain unknown. I will come to your house, where he will find me, and thus give no clue."

So it was decided. But, spite her exquisite costume of a fairy, as she concealed it and herself beneath a large domino, as the clock on the mantel chimed ten it seemed to Sophie every stroke said, "Stay! stay!"

And she was almost tempted to stay, but she had promised Ellen; and, after all, she had heard that it was well for young wives to assert themselves.

An hour later, and on the Count Belzoni's arm, she entered upon the brilliant scene. So far he had not even seemed curious to ascertain her identity. She experienced at this a singular sense of relief.

The ball was at its height as the clock rang out the hour of midnight; but, for the first time in her life light and gayety were distasteful. A hundred times she wished herself at home.

"I will tell Gerald; I have already been punished," she whispered to herself, as she stood for a moment alone in a quiet corner.

"You look more like a nun than a fairy—rather like one who had foresworn the vanities of the world than a siren to tempt men to their destruction," said a voice close to her, "though to the latter I know no one better fitted."

"Sir!" she exclaimed indignantly, as she recognized the count, standing at her elbow.

"Ah, you thought I did not know you. I should penetrate any disguise you wore. Besides, you have forgotten to remove a badge of recognition."

She followed with her eyes his downward glance, and saw that it rested on her hand, ungloved, as in better accord with the exigencies of her costume.

Involuntarily she drew it away, with the ring which had betrayed her.

Denial was useless.

"Since you know me, then," she said, "we will no longer play a part. To others we are masks; to ourselves we are ourselves."

"Ah, madame," he whispered, "let us rather say to the world we are ourselves, to each other we are a mask. Can men, think you, look coldly on such beauty as you possess? Can—"

Indignant and alarmed she checked his further speech by starting forward to escape him. His hand closed on hers as in a vise. She wrenched it from him, sprang among a crowd of maskers, and so made her way to the door.

"Call a carriage for me," she directed.

Ten minutes later she was within her own house. Her first impulse was to tear off the hated costume which had caused her such trouble; her next to throw herself on the bed and sob out her excitement and contrition. The morning sun, streaming in her room, awoke her.

With a shudder she remembered the events of the past night. She looked down at her hand—the hand that had been polluted by another's touch—as though in some way she expected to find the contamination branded on the soft, white surface. It was all unmarred; but—she looked again—she looked away and back—she rubbed her eyes and looked—the color meanwhile fluttering out of her cheeks and her pale lips quivering, as if her heart seemed to stand still in a sudden agony of fear; for from the third finger was missing the talismanic ring.

When and where had she lost it, and how could she find courage to confess all to Gerald? She rose and dressed, revolving and revolving this problem in her mind.

At any hour her husband might return. For the first time she dreaded to meet him—dreaded to look into the kindly, handsome eyes and read there all his incredulous reproach, mingled, perhaps, with scorn and anger.

The day wore on. Her friend, Mrs. Martin, ran in to scold her for desertion; but her pale face and trembling tones made good her plea of sudden illness.

At nightfall Gerald returned. She threw herself in his arms in a fit of nervous weeping, and when he wonderingly asked the reason, her courage failed her.

Why was it she had never imagined that he might look sternly until to-day?

A week passed, when one evening, sitting in the twilight, a step sounded close beside her. She looked up to discover the count.

"Pardon," he began, in answer to her indignant, questioning look. "Why must you be so cruel? May I see you now?"

"Sir, I command you to leave me. I am now under the protection of my own roof."

He was about to answer, when a latch key was heard inserted in the outside door.

In an instant he had sprung into some place of concealment, but the fact that he was near lent to the young wife a sudden courage, born of the moment's desperation. Her husband, entering, approached her, but she motioned him back.

"Gerald," she said, "I have a bitter confession to make. It is fitting that you should hear it now."

He listened with arms folded across his breast, while she told him all the story of that fated night.

"And this is all?" he questioned bitterly, when she paused.

"No, not all," she continued, raising her voice, "My confession has another witness, who has forced his hated presence again upon me. The Count Belzoni is here again, Gerald."

As she spoke she drew aside the curtain; but the form she expected to disclose was gone, the open window attesting to its flight.

Silently the husband drew a paper from his pocket and showed her a paragraph offering a reward for the arrest of a thief and swindler called the Count Belzoni.

"My darling," he said, "my little wife has learned a good lesson she will never forget. I have known this story all the time, but have waited until you came to tell it to me. I returned the night of the ball to take you with me, when I found you had gone. Imagine what I suffered, and my added suffering when, arrived at the scene of enjoyment, where I followed you, I discovered who was your companion. I stood near you and heard the words he addressed to you—heard with joyful heart your answer; saw you wrench your hand from his hold, and also saw, what you did not, the sparkle of the ring he drew from your finger. Poor little girl! I watched you hasten through the crowd, and knew that you had already met your bitterest punishment. It has been through my efforts that the count has been traced and exposed. Only this morning I recovered your ring from the man with whom he pledged it as security. Once more I place it on your finger; but, remember, darling, it is only the outward charm. A wife's true talisman is her husband's honor, which no thief may steal, unless he adds assassination to his crime and buys it with her heart's blood."

The young man who hammers his thumb nail this Spring while putting down carpets, or who is violently caught under the chin by a clothes line when he goes out in the yard after dark, should remember that in the revised edition of the New Testament the words have been changed to "hades" and "condemnation."

It was their first night aboard the steamer. "At last," he said, tenderly, "we are all alone, out upon the deep waters of the dark blue sea, and your heart will always beat for me as it has in the past?" "My heart's all right," she answered, languidly, "but my stomach feels awful."

Childlike Trust.

The child leans on its parent's breast,
Leaves there its cares, and is at rest;
The bird sits singing by the nest,
And tells aloud
His trust in God, and so is blessed
'Neath every cloud.

He has no store, he sows no seed,
Yet sings aloud and doth not heed;
By flowing stream or grassy mead
He sings to shame
Men who forget, in fear of need,
A father's name.

The heart that trusts forever sings,
And feels as light as it had wings;
A well of peace within it springs;
Come good or ill,
Whate'er to-day, to-morrow brings,
It is His will!

A gill of strong sage tea taken at bedtime will relieve night-sweat.

For rheumatism: a large piece of flannel well sprinkled with saltpeter.

Poison from bees, hornets, spider-bites, etc., is instantly arrested by the application of equal parts of common salt and bicarbonate of soda, well rubbed in on the place bitten or stung.

Sick headache can often be greatly relieved, and sometimes entirely cured by the application of a mustard plaster at the base of the neck. The plaster should not be kept on more than a quarter of an hour.

Corn tea for a sick person. Brown and pound in a mortar one cup of sweet, dry corn, pour on this two cups of boiling water, and steep fifteen minutes. This is very light and nutritious, and can be taken when the patient is very weak.

A standing antidote for poison by dew, ivy, poison oak, etc., is to take a handful of quicklime, dissolve in water, let it stand half an hour, then paint the poisoned parts with it. Three or four applications will never fail to cure the most aggravated cases.

The food of the eye is light, as air is for the lungs, bread for the stomach, and as the fins of a fish presuppose water. To shut ourselves up in dark rooms, with or without weak light, is simply suicidal. Weak eyes, indeed, are the accompaniment of dark rooms, stained glass and gas.—Dr. J. H. Hanaford.

According to a writer in the Scientific American, a little warm turpentine poured on a lock-jaw will give relief in less than a minute; it is also a sovereign remedy for any severe cut or bruise, and for croup. In the latter ailment it should saturate a flannel on throat and chest, and three or four drops be taken inwardly on a lump of sugar.

The following is said to be a good cure for colds. Boil two ounces of flax seed in one quart of water; strain, and add two ounces of rock candy, one-half pint of honey, juice of three lemons; mix, and let all boil well; let cool, and bottle. Dose, one cupful before bed, one-half cupful before meals. The hotter you drink it, the better.

Persons convalescing from rheumatism should choose a residence where the death rate from heart disease is low. It is desirable that all persons whose family history indicate proclivity to rheumatism should choose for their homes such localities and districts as experience has shown to have a low mortality from the secondary results of this disease. Thus may be avoided diseases to which their constitutions are prone.

The best remedy for bleeding at the nose, as given by Dr. Gleason, is a vigorous motion of the jaws, as if in the act of mastication. In the case of a child a wad of paper should be placed in its mouth and the child instructed to chew it hard. It is the motion of the jaws that stops the flow of blood. This remedy is so very simple that many feel inclined to laugh at it, but it has never been known to fail in a single instance, even in very severe cases.

RIGHTS IN THE ROAD.

If a farm deed is bounded by, on or upon a road, it usually extends to the middle of the roadway. There are a few exceptional cases; but ordinarily the farmer owns the soil of half the road and may use the grass, trees, stones, gravel, sand or anything of value to him, either on the land or beneath the surface, subject only to the superior rights of the public to travel over the road and that of the highway surveyor or other similar officer to use such materials for the repair of the road; and these materials he may cart away and use elsewhere on the road, yet he has no right to use them for his own private purposes. No other man has a right to feed his cattle there, or cut the grass or trees; much less to deposit his wood, old carts, wagons or other things thereon. The owner of a drove of cattle which stops to feed in front of your land, or of a drove of pigs which root up the soil, is responsible to you at law as much as if they did the same things inside the fence. No one has a legal right to pick up apples under your trees, although the same stand wholly outside the fence. No traveler can hitch his horse to your trees in the sidewalk, without being liable, if he gnaws the bark or otherwise injures them. You may untie the horse and remove him to some safe place. If your well stands partly on your land and partly outside the fence, no neighbor can use it, except by your permission. No man has a right to stand in front of your land and whittle or deface your fence, throw stones at your dog, or insult you with abusive language, without being liable to you for trespassing on your land. He has a right to pass and repass in an orderly and becoming manner—a right to use the road, but not to abuse it.—Am. Cultivator.

An every-day religion—one that loves the duties of our common walk; one that makes an honest man; one that accomplishes an intellectual and moral growth in the subject; one that works in all weather, and improves all opportunities,—will best and most healthily promote the growth of a church and the power of the gospel.—Bushnell.

A RUNAWAY TRAIN.

The most hair-raising episode that ever happened to a New Mexico mountain railway train fell to the lot of Conductor Blessingham Thursday afternoon at 3 o'clock on the west slope of Glorietta Summit. The train comprised nearly thirty loads, and as it entered upon the descent Jake Brown, the engineer, threw on the brake, but found it was broken, and would not work. Brown called for brakes, but the trainmen had already set every one and realized that the train was beyond their control. Seeing that nothing could be done to stop the mad course the train was going, Brown jumped from the cab while going at the rate of sixty miles an hour and landed seventy-two feet distant, actual measurement. Blessingham, who was on the caboose with Pawnee Charlie and wife as passengers, fearing that the train was going to destruction, cut his way car loose and checked it with the brakes, while the train continued its velocity down the long grade. The fireman stood at his post like a hero, and while the engine was plunging down the flight at a giddy speed he crawled out on the footboard and poked sand through the sand-box, thinking that it might asssit the wheels in getting a grip upon the rails. As the train sped around Material curve which is "short and steep," the velocity was so great that the locomotive ran on one rail, and overbalanced so greatly that it came within an ace of losing its equilibrium. The brakemen on deck were obliged to lie flat and cling to the running boards for safety. For six miles those badly frightened men stuck to the ship and faced the horrors of death. Below Canoncito is a natural basin, with three miles of level track, and it was on this stretch that the runaway train was mastered and stopped.—Las Vegas Optic.

BEACONSFIELD AND WIFE.

It is said that Lord Beaconsfield's wife, who was the widow of his fellow-member for Wycombe, Mr. Lewis, proposed to him, and not he to her. She had conceived a great admiration for him during the life of her first husband. After the death of Mr. Lewis, she found herself the mistress of a large fortune, and without any encumbrance in the shape of children or poor relatives. She had the foresight to see that a great career was open to Disraeli, but that he was hampered by debt and the want of money. She proposed to lend him—practically to give him—a very large sum of money. He declined the generous offer. He could not, he said, accept such a favor from any one—most positively not from a woman. "Not even from your wife?" asked Mrs. Lewis, placing her hand in his. She conquered, and he was her devoted friend and lover ever after. But Mr. Disraeli was essentially an actor in private as well as in public life, and it has been hinted that he even acted his professed love for his wife, and really had no romantic or sincere affection for her, regarding her only as a nephew might look upon a rich and affectionate old aunt, who would give him all the money he wanted, so long as he was good and kind to her. This was, most probably, baseless slander. Mr. Disraeli was not a sensualist. He had a most vivid imagination, which enabled him to invest any object with the attributes and charms which he desired it to possess. In this way he made of his wife—who certainly was neither beautiful nor very highly gifted with intellect—a paragon of everything that was charming and worshipful, and he accordingly thus worshipped her.

CHEERFUL WOMEN.

In marrying, men should seek happy women. They make a terrible mistake when they marry for beauty, for talent, or for style. The sweetest wives are those who possess the magic secret of being happy under any or every circumstance. Rich or poor, high or low, it makes no difference—the bright little fountain of joy bubbles up just as musically in their hearts. Nothing ever goes wrong with them; no trouble is too serious for them to "make the best of it." Was ever the stream of calamity so dark and deep that the sunlight of a happy face across its turbid side would not awake an answering gleam? Why, these joyous tempered people don't know half the good they do. No matter how cross and crabbed you feel, no matter if your brain is full of meditations on "afflictive dispensations," and your stomach with medicines, pills and tonics, just get one of those cheery little women talking to you, and we are not afraid to wager anything that she can cure you. The long drawn line about your mouth will relax, the cloud of settled gloom will vanish—nobody knows where—and the first thing you know you are laughing. Ah! what a blessing are these happy women! How often their little hands guide the ponderous machinery of life with almost an invisible touch! No one knows, no one will ever know, until the day of judgment reveals, how much we owe to these hopeful, uncomplaining, happy women.

A little boy came in to his mother one day, saying: "Mother, the boys out there are swearing, and I would not play with them, but came right into the house." "Swearing!" said the mother, thinking her child was perhaps too young to know what profanity was, "What is swearing, my child?" "Why, it is saying 'God' outside their prayers," was the ready and original reply.

The Journal.

SATURDAY, MAY 21, 1881.

No attempt having been made to reconsider the confirmation of Stanley Matthews as justice of the United States Supreme Court, he was on Tuesday sworn into office by Chief Justice Waite.

B. K. Bruce, the colored ex-senator from Mississippi, was nominated by President Garfield on Thursday for the important office of register of the treasury, and received the compliment of a unanimous confirmation by the Senate.

The resignation of Senators Conkling and Platt leaves the United States Senate in the hands of the Democrats for the time being. They take the matter very good naturedly, and are not disposed to disturb the Republicans in any way.

President Garfield on Thursday returned to the Senate all but two of the Conkling nominations which he recently recalled, showing clearly that he has no idea of making war on Conkling, as the latter seems to think. The Senate will adjourn this week, probably.

Judge Robertson was on Wednesday unanimously confirmed by the Senate as collector of the port of New York. The news created immense enthusiasm at Albany, the Senate chamber ringing with cheers, and in the evening Judge Robertson was serenaded by a large concourse of people. Salutes of 100 guns were fired at Albany, Utica, Rochester, and other places in honor of the confirmation.

The Athol Chronicle came out last week in a spick and span new spring suit of type, while it was also greatly improved in its general make-up. Brother Waterman's office was partially destroyed by fire a few weeks ago, and he displays true journalistic enterprise in throwing aside all the old material, and starting anew with a brand new press and all the "fixin's", making a better paper than ever before. His enterprise deserves, and will doubtless receive, substantial reward from both subscribers and advertisers.

Postmaster General James has already made a saving of over $400,000 in the star route mail service, without, it is claimed, in any way interfering with the efficiency of the service. It will not take many months' work of this kind to make the department self-sustaining, and then perhaps we can have two-cent letter postage. Gen. James was the model postmaster of the country, and promises to become the model postmaster general. Wonder if he would not make a model President!

Czar Alexander of Russia is paving the way for his own destruction by the Nihilists. He has accepted the resignation of Gen. Melikoff, who as commandant at St. Petersburg has done much to ameliorate the condition of the people and strengthen the empire; and in so doing the Czar shows a disposition to grant no new privileges to his subjects, and remove none of their burdens. Like Rehoboam of old, he seems to say: "Whereas my father did lade you with a heavy yoke, I will add to your yoke: my father hath chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions."

Gen. Grant was so stirred up by the nomination of Judge Robertson that he felt called upon to write to President Garfield, giving him a little fatherly advice in regard to the matter. He also wrote Senator Jones at length upon the subject, characterizing the nomination as "an insult" to Conkling, "to be resented to the bitter end." The letter has been given to the public, and shows the General to be entirely wrong in some of his statements. It is an unfortunate document for the ex-President, who during his administration was constantly doing the same thing for which he now criticizes Garfield so sharply in Conkling's interest. It makes a great difference whose ox is gored.

Boston is considerably provoked because the Legislature refused to amend the city charter by striking out the clause requiring the aldermen to call a "general meeting" of citizens on the petition of fifty voters. Nobody knew there was such a clause, and when it was discovered, by the application for its removal, certain fellows got up a petition for a meeting, to discuss a lot of minor questions. The aldermen tabled the petition, but the courts have been appealed to, and they will very likely have to call one. A public meeting for the discussion of questions in a city of nearly 400,000 inhabitants is obviously absurd, and it is difficult to understand why the Legislature refused to strike the obsolete clause from the charter.

The proposed centennial celebration of the battle of Yorktown on the 19th of October is rapidly assuming a definite shape. Congress has voted $100,000 for the erection of a statue of Lafayette; the corner stone of the pedestal will be laid on that day in the presence of the President, the members of the cabinet, and the Congressional Commission. France has already accepted an invitation to be represented. It is probable that a French fleet will bring over a French regiment. The celebration will continue several days, and all the States are expected to be represented.

A bill has passed the New York Senate providing for the deepening of the Erie Canal, so it shall contain 10 feet of water, instead of 7 as now. The bill also provides for a new tier of locks, 26 feet wide and 236 feet long, upon the entire length of the canal.

A car run by electricity is now working successfully between Berlin and a suburb six miles distant, traveling at a speed of 18 miles an hour without difficulty.

A Desperate Move by Conkling.

Senators Conkling and Platt of New York caused a decided sensation in the United States Senate on Monday, by resigning their seats in that body. They gave their reasons for so doing—or rather Conkling gave his reasons—in a long communication to Gov. Cornell, setting forth the break between the President and Conkling. His whole complaint hinges on the nomination of Judge Robertson for collector of New York, which was made without any consultation with Conkling. Robertson being one of Conkling's strongest opponents in the State of New York, the nomination was of course very obnoxious to him, and he made strenuous efforts to induce the President to withdraw it, "in the interest of harmony." Failing here, he then appealed to the "courtesy of the Senate," a wretched custom by which nominations have been rejected when objected to by senators from the State where they were made. He succeeded in staving off action for some time, until the President, becoming impatient at the delay, demanded that the Senate should act upon it in some way, without, however, attempting to influence their action on the matter one way or the other. He also withdrew the nominations of several of Conkling's friends, to prevent the threatened confirmation of these and postponement of action upon Robertson's nomination until next Winter. The matter being thus brought to an issue, and the Republican senators manifesting a disposition to take up the nomination and confirm it in spite of Conkling's displeasure, he gave up the contest and announced last Friday that he would on Monday either report the nomination, or acquiesce in the discharge of the committee from further consideration of it. When Monday came, he resigned.

This is the sum and substance of the whole matter. Mr. Conkling simply resigns because the President will not submit to his dictation in making the appointments in New York. His ulterior purpose is unquestionably to secure an indorsement of his course by a triumphant re-election to the Senate, there to enter upon an unrelenting warfare upon the administration. The New York Legislature has generally been ready to fulfill his behests, and he may accomplish his purpose; but a somewhat threatening spirit of independence is working in that body, and it may be that the Legislature which unanimously passed a resolution approving Judge Robertson's nomination will not stultify itself by returning Conkling to the Senate because he opposed his confirmation. There is much excitement at Albany, and the friends of the administration are confident that Conkling will be defeated.

Senator Conkling is a most able and adroit politician. He has been prominent as a leader in the Republican party. But if he cannot lead, he will not follow, and in this respect he is a dangerous man for any party. Never before has a United States Senator resigned because he could not "run" the President. It is a most childish proceeding, and the man who gets to that point should be allowed to stay resigned. For Senator Platt there can be only a feeling of pity, mingled with mirth. He simply did his master's bidding, expecting to share in his victorious return. But he will most probably find himself badly left.

THE LEGISLATURE.

The State Legislature adjourned last week Friday, at midnight, after a session of 129 days, during which it passed 305 acts and 72 resolves, one of the latter, concerning the harbor commissioners, being vetoed by the Governor. On the whole the Legislature has made a very creditable record, its greatest mistake being in voting for a special session to convene Nov. 9th, to consider the report of the committee on the revision of the statutes, which holds sessions through the Summer. The Legislature also made a mistake in refusing to submit to the people the question of biennial elections. But if it made some mistakes, it also did some things deserving of commendation, one of its best acts being the passage of the bill to relieve property from double taxation, a measure which has been brought before many preceding Legislatures, without securing any action. The tax on deposits in savings banks was also reduced from three-fourths to one-half of one per cent; and the members had sufficient virtue to refuse to raise their own salaries or those of their employes.

On the liquor question the Legislature did the usual amount of tinkering, and fortunately it was all in the right direction. The penalties for drunkenness were increased to $5 and $10 for the second and third offences respectively, with costs, and the alternative of two months and of one year's imprisonment. A portion of the costs may also be added to the $1 fine for the first offence. Applications for licenses to sell liquor must be advertised, and no license is to be given to a place if an adjoining real estate owner objects; while all screens are to be removed from premises where liquor is sold.

Among the other measures of general interest passed were the bills prohibiting smoking and the use of liquor at town and ward meetings; making Memorial Day (May 30) a legal holiday; authorizing any court to exclude minors as spectators from the court room during any trial; prohibiting the sale as butter or cheese of any imitations of those substances; authorizing the double-tracking of the Hoosac Tunnel road within three years, and appropriating $325,000 for beginning the work; forbidding railroads to employ persons in any position requiring them to distinguish form or color signals, unless they have a certificate from some competent person that they are not color-blind; and submitting to the people at the next election a constitutional amendment providing that no honorably-discharged soldier shall be disqualified to vote on account of being a pauper, or because of the non-payment of a poll tax.

Summer visitors are beginning to arrive. H. O. Usefly, Esq., is already here with a few of his adult relatives, and as soon as they get comfortably fixed around town he will send for all his cousins and his sisters and his aunts, and with their children they will soon make things lively.

H. P. and J. S. Holden will start next Monday on their western trip, going as far west as Denver, Col., and perhaps taking a run down into New Mexico. They expect to be gone about a month. Mrs. Anna Warren will occupy her old position in H. P. Holden's store during his absence.

Potatoes are scarce and high, notwithstanding the generous yield last year, and are selling at from $1 to $1.15 per bushel, according to quality. They are not a cheap diet at this price, and those people are fortunate who put in enough of the tubers last fall to carry them through this spring, for half that price.

The Boston & Albany road is having three Vanwormer dump cars built. They are similar in appearance to an ordinary platform car, but are so arranged that, by one man turning a crank at one end of the car, the heaviest load can be dumped, and the pulling of a lever puts the car back in its proper position.

In spite of the stormy weather, a very good sized audience assembled at the Congregational vestry Wednesday evening, to witness the presentation of "The Turn of the Tide," by the young people of the society. The play passed off quite smoothly, and so satisfactorily that it may be repeated at some future time.

The lower end of the road leading from Wilson Brainard's to the Center has been badly washed by the rains this week, and will need considerable repairing to make it passable. The roads in other parts of the town have doubtless suffered more or less in the same way, and will require a good deal of touching up.

The committee appointed recently to provide a new and larger vault for the Palmer Savings Bank have contracted with W. N. Flynt & Co. of Monson for the construction of a substantial granite vault, 8 feet 8 inches deep, 5 feet 4 inches wide, and 7 feet high, inside measurement, to be completed within a few weeks. The entire cost of the change will be about $1000.

E. P. Wood, who has had charge of the steam pump of the Boston & Albany Railroad at this station during the past year, has resigned, to accept a fireman's position on the eastern division of the New York & New England Railroad, and A. L. Hills, formerly an employe of the Hartford, Providence & Fishkill, and New York & New England railroads; is acting in the position.

A woman's hat and a pool of blood were found on the walk in front of Lawrence's Block Thursday morning, traces of some dire tragedy which is yet unexplained. All that is known, bearing on the matter, is the statement of Night Watchman Smith, who saw a drunken woman around the depot late in the evening, and advised her to go home. She probably fell on the walk, cutting herself, and losing her hat.

The body of Merrill Ladd, who will be remembered by some of our citizens as the first agent of the New London Northern Railroad in this place, where he resided for two or three years, passed through here last week Friday on its way to Windham, Conn., for burial. Mr. Ladd removed to Chicago in 1854, where he had lived most of the time since then. His death was caused by quick consumption, after an illness of six months.

The committee on enlarging the school house in this village looked over a plan prepared by Mr. Hoag, at their meeting last Saturday, and were so well satisfied with it that they concluded to have specifications and estimates made. The plan contemplates an addition about 44x36, making the building in the form of a letter T. A hall would then be put through the middle of the old building, the old halls at each end being added to the school rooms.

The sun shone out for a moment Thursday night, for the first time since Sunday. A large amount of rain has fallen in the meantime, which has filled the thirsty earth and has been a grand thing for the grass, but has almost discouraged some of the farmers, who were already much behind in their planting. But the moon changed yesterday, and the rain was apparently at an end. A warm sun for a few days will now set things "a-humming" at a rapid rate.

Those energetic housekeepers who are in a hurry to do up their spring cleaning before the arrival of warm weather, and who take down stoves and put themselves in readiness for summer at the first touch of spring, have had an opportunity to repent of their hurry this week. The cold rain and chilly air have compelled them to settle down by the kitchen stove, or invite a visitation of rheumatism, neuralgia, and kindred ills by shivering around in fireless rooms. In this climate there are often days in the warmest months when a little fire is needed to make one comfortable, and at least one of the living rooms should have the appliances for extra warmth whenever wanted.

Sheriff Palmer went to Holyoke last week and arrested Timothy McCarthy for bigamy, and his wife for adultery. McCarthy formerly lived in Thorndike. He has been married three times, and says that his first wife is dead, but his second wife is living in New Bedford and supporting three of their children, receiving some aid from this town. Last year McCarthy, who is an old man, became acquainted with Ellen McMahon, a Scotch girl 19 years old, and induced her to marry him, representing himself as a single man. She was released on her own recognizance, but McCarthy was locked up in default of $1000 bonds, and it is understood the grand jury have found a bill against him.

GRANBY.

George Montague's house, barn and other farm buildings were destroyed by fire early last Saturday morning, with nine cows, two horses, several hogs and a large stock of grain. Some of the household furniture was saved. Loss about $5000, which is covered by insurance. The fire was doubtless incendiary.

THREE RIVERS.

Rev. T. C. Russell will administer the ordinance of baptism at the usual place at noon next Sunday.

There will be a union temperance meeting at the Baptist church Sunday evening. Mr. Russell will give an address on "The Rum Monster, and How He may be Destroyed." Rev. Mr. Dudley will also speak.

LUDLOW.

While returning from church last Sunday E. H. Stewart heard a noise near the road, in the vicinity of the Springfield reservoir, and found three large black snakes in a bunch. After a sharp skirmish he succeeded in dispatching them, and found that they measured 5 feet, 4 feet 9 and 4 feet 8 inches in length, respectively.

WALES.

Selectman F. L. Burley has been quite sick for a few days.

When are the highways to be repaired? is a serious question.

E. J. Gardner lost his valuable young horse Wednesday.

The assessors are now taking the valuation, preparatory to making up the taxes.

H. G. Church shot a fox on the road to Wales Wednesday, supposed to be mad.

Farmers complain of too much rain now. They can't plant. It is hard work to make weather to suit man.

Hubbard Bros. found the basement window of their store pried open and the front door unlocked Wednesday. Some sneak thief probably helped himself to a few small articles.

THORNDIKE.

The choir of the Congregational Church have secured the services of a new organist.

Michael Granfield bruised Michael O'Reilly pretty badly in a drunken quarrel Thursday, and a warrant was issued for his arrest.

Flames were seen to issue from the residence of Mrs. Fogarty, not far from the town house, Tuesday afternoon. Considerable damage was done to the main building, but timely assistance prevented a great conflagration.

Charles E. Merritt, principal of the Ware high school, will lecture on temperance at the Congregational church, Sunday evening, at 7 o'clock. Mr. Merritt will be assisted by members of the Ware reform club. The public is cordially invited.

Daniel Crowley's 14-years-old son Jeremiah disappeared from home at an early hour Thursday morning, taking with him $50 in cash belonging to his father. He was captured in Belchertown yesterday forenoon by Sheriff Palmer, and most of the money recovered, minus the amount he had expended for a ticket to Brattleboro.

MONSON.

L. C. Moulton will soon open ice cream rooms in Central Block.

The bicycle fever has struck Monson, and several aspirants for honor can be seen practising daily on Main street. A club is talked of.

John Brockbank left Wednesday for an extended trip of several months through the West. He goes partly for health and partly for pleasure, and as he takes along his "Ballard" he may make some trouble among the game in that section.

The Memorial society have engaged Rev. F. A. Warfield of Boston to deliver the address Memorial Day. The day will have a more general observance this year than in some former years, and all citizens are invited to unite in making the exercises worthy of the day.

The severe storm of the past week has washed the roads to some extent and caused a general suspension of out-door work. The farmers don't know whether to be happy or not. While it helps the grass it delays planting, already later than usual. On Monday the high water carried off the dam of Smith Bros'. mill at South Monson.

BONDVILLE.

R. L. Bond, lumber dealer, is very busy just now, having completed a large shed on the vacant lot opposite his dwelling.

The Boston Duck company's boarding house is undergoing a thorough renovation, under the charge of Richard Russell.

Chas. Johnson has completed the job of moving the old Duncan house to its new position, to make room for the proposed canal for the new mill.

P. H. Potter has sold out his business at Boston and gone to Stanton, Mich., to engage in the lumber trade with his brother, T. D. Potter, formerly of this place.

The friends of F. O. Smith, for some time book-keeper in the finishing-room of the dye works, will be sorry to learn that he has tendered his resignation, to take effect at once, and will leave immediately for Big Rapids, Mich., where he has accepted a situation as book-keeper. He takes with him his wife, who has taught school in the village for the four past years. The best wishes of their many friends accompany them.

Canterbury Bros. are building for the M. E. society a new parsonage near A. R. Murdock's. G. W. Canterbury and John Hayes are building them each a house on Central street. A. P. Knowlton has also bought a lot on the same street, and contemplates building later in the season; while G. W. Canterbury has the contract for building at once three two-tenement houses for the Boston Duck Co. on Main street, between Paymaster Packard's and S. P. Weld's residences.

WARE AND VICINITY.

Alva Leonard has bought the Dunbar place on the Palmer road of L. W. Robinson for $1200.

A sea gull was seen to fly over Ware on Tuesday, probably driven inward by the severe storm.

There was a washout on the Ware River R. R. between this place and Gilbertville on Monday, which delayed the trains some time.

The curbing is being set and the grading done around the new library building. The dedication will not be likely to take place this month, on account of the delay in getting the furniture.

Belle Menard, daughter of Joseph Menard, aged about 12 years, while at play some days since was so severely injured in the face by a piece of old tin thrown at her by one of her playmates that she has lost the sight of one of her eyes.

Notwithstanding the assertions of those in favor of license and rum that there is as much drunkenness now as before the first of May, we believe if they were willing to do it they might see a marked improvement. The billiard saloons are closed at reasonable hours, and there are not nearly as many of our young men seen frequenting the rum holes. And then, we do not have the name of licensing what we know to be one of the greatest evils in our country.

The committee of the Grand Army, at a meeting on Thursday evening, completed the programme for Decoration Day, which is quite different from that of former years. The G. A. R. will meet at their hall at 7½ a. m., when they will take teams and with the band visit the cemetery in Ware Center, returning in time to form in procession at 10 o'clock with Division No. 3 A. O. H., the Oregon Engine Company, and other organizations, when they will visit the graves of comrades in the several cemeteries in the village. At half past one in the afternoon the post with invited guests will form on Main street and proceed to Music Hall, where an address will be delivered by Maj. Henry E. Alvord of Easthampton. The post solicit contributions of flowers for the occasion, and also ask our business men to close their places of business on that day, that all may join in this celebration.

A hand car containing four men was overtaken by a freight train on a trestle at Mainville, Pa., Tuesday, and thrown fifty feet, two of the men being killed instantly, and the others fatally injured.

Literary Notes.

The Atlantic Monthly for June has several features which will commend it to a host of readers. Besides liberal installments of the serial stories by Miss Phelps and Henry James, Jr., there are two admirable articles for the season—"A Taste of Maine Birch," a thoroughly characteristic outdoor essay, by John Burroughs, and "A Spring Opening," a charming descriptive article, by Edith Thomas. A paper which deserves the attention of every one interested in social science is "An Indoor Pauper," a careful statement of facts gathered from reports of a large number of the States, by Octave Thanet. H. H., in a paper entitled "Bergen Days," contributes a very interesting account of Norwegian life and character. John C. Ropes, who is peculiarly qualified to write upon military subjects, in a paper entitled "Who Lost Waterloo?" describes the various manœuvres and movements of that fateful day with a clearness and precision which must be in the highest degree attractive to persons who take an interest in military matters, as well as to all who have a particular interest in that world-changing battle. "Over on the T'other Mounting," by Charles Egbert Craddock, is an exceedingly engaging story of Southern life and scenery. Richard Grant White this time writes in his usual charming style of "French Tragedy." The reviews of new books are unusually varied and interesting this month; there is a diversity of readable brief essays in the Contributors' Club; and the number concludes with a touching poem in memory of Mr. Fields. The second number of the Atlantic, under Mr. Aldrich's editorship, does great credit to his care and judgment. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.

Harper's Magazine for June—the beginning of the sixty-third volume—is a brilliant number. It is not more attractive from the artist's point of view than it is impressive in a literary sense, having contributions from the best writers in every one of the many fields covered by its contents. Samuel Adams Drake contributes the first of his promised series of papers on the White Mountains, beautifully illustrated by William Hamilton Gibson; Mrs. Sara A. Hubbard a paper on our humming-birds, with charming illustrations by J. C. Beard; William Winter a timely and excellent sketch of Edwin Booth, accompanied by a first-rate portrait. Mrs. Lizzie W. Champney writes about Lisbon, first of a series on Portugal. Mr. Abbey contributes a very impressive full-page illustration of Herrick's poem, "The Mad Maydes Songe;" Amelia E. Barr is the author of an interesting article on the "Ballads and Ballad Music Illustrating Shakespeare," illustrated by Abbey; Luigi Monti contributes a brief article on one of the most promising of young Italian sculptors—Benedetto Civiletti—with a portrait, and illustrations of two of his works; James Parton contributes a curiously interesting article on the trial of Jeanne Darc; Edward Atkinson gives some important information in a brief paper, entitled "Kentucky Farms;" Saxe Holm contributes a love story, and the serial novels by Mr. Hardy and Miss Woolson are continued; Paul Hayne contributes a poem, "The Dead Child and the Mocking-Bird;" and Will Carleton, the author of Farm Ballads, a poem of considerable length, entitled "The First Settler's story"—illustrated by Frost; the editorial departments are well sustained.

It may surprise some of the young readers of St. Nicholas, who are enjoying the rollicking fun of the serial for boys, "Phaeton Rogers," now being published in that magazine, to know that its author, Mr. Rossiter Johnson, is most of the time engaged in the staid work of editing the "American Cyclopædia." He is already well known among older people as the editor and originator of the "Little Classic" series, and the author of some admirable magazine articles and stories. The short articles which he has heretofore contributed to St. Nicholas have been specially notable for their boy-spirit and the overflowing humor of the situations and dialogue; but in the present serial he has far surpassed anything which he has done heretofore, and no more laughable and more boy-like adventures are to be found in recent writings than those of his inventive hero, Phaeton Rogers.

We have received a roll of attractive music from O. Ditson & Co., and notice in it, first, a song for Decoration Day, entitled "Lay the Flowers Lovingly" (30 cts.); a ballad by Edward Oxenford, called "The King's Champion" (35 cts.); and one of Stephen Adams's inimitable sea-songs, by the name of "Ben Lee" (35 cts.) There is also a waltz for piano, from the new and popular opera, "The Mascot" (40 cts.); a rustic dance, "Les Paysans" (35 cts.); and one of Smallwood's pretty lesson pieces, "Jenny of the Mill" (25 cts.) With the music we also receive a copy of Ditson & Co's. Musical Record, which is a standard in the way of musical news, and costs $2 per year.

A Card.—The undersigned takes this opportunity to return his sincere thanks for the many tokens of kindness received from friends during his late severe illness. O. P. Allen.

Palmer, May 18th, 1881.

The people of Somerset county, Md., are greatly excited over the confession of a woman, now on her death-bed, that she and her son murdered a man eighteen years ago. Two negroes were executed for the crime.

Several persons having been made sick by using water from a well near Merchantville, N.J., an investigation was made last week which resulted in the finding of a child's decomposed body in the well.

The exportation of dried apples from this country to France has greatly increased of late years, and now it is said that a large part of this useful product comes back in the shape of Normandy cider and light claret.

A little girl at Racine, Wis., last week jumped the rope 102 times, which so injured her brain and other internal organs that she was a terrible sufferer until relieved by death.

A negro murdered a little girl at Talladega, Ala., last week, for her jewelry. He was captured while disposing of the body, and was at once swung up to a limb until dead.

A sheet of granite measuring over 600 feet, and seven feet in thickness, was loosened at the Plymouth, Conn., quarry on Monday by a shock from an electric battery.

Friends of ex-Receiver John D. B. Coggswell are raising funds with which to make good the deficit in his accounts.

Utah is just now the chosen field for considerable Christain missionary work. There are forty-four Presbyterian missionaries in the Territory, maintained at an annual expense of $36,000, the Congregationalists are spending $30,000 in new school houses and churches, the Methodists have twenty missionaries on the ground, and other denominations are represented. These tremendous onslaughts have incited the Mormons to renewed zeal.

A colony of eighty-four persons at St. Peter, Minn., is composed of one woman and her children, grandchildren, and great-grandchildren, with their husbands and wives.

Nancy Lester, who was buried at Greenfield Saturday, was the oldest person in that part of the State. It is said that she was 105 last November.

There are many forms of nervous debility in men that yield to the use of Carter's Iron Pills. Those who are troubled with nervous weakness, night sweats, &c., should try them. 2w9

A pure Bourbon Whiskey, free from drugs or any deleterious substances is the "G. O. Taylor Old Bourbon." It has been known for years, and approved by the highest authority. Bottled only by Chester H. Graves & Sons, Boston, whose signature will be found over each cork.

Our neighbors say that they have found the finest stock of wall papers and curtains at T. W. Gilbert's, State street, Springfield. They all report his store as the largest and best stocked, and there they can get what they want. He will offer for the next 30 days some extra good bargains in fine wall papers.

Any one wishing something elegant and thoroughly well made in the line of wardrobes, desks or counters, should see those at W. D. Kinsman's store, Springfield. His private office was fitted up by D. H. Joyce, and we have rarely seen better work than has come from Joyce's cabinet works on Taylor street of that city.

Forbes & Wallace, Springfield, offer at great reduction the following corsets: Dr. Warner's Flexible Hip Corset marked down to 75 cts.; Madam Foy's Improved Corsets marked down to $1; Dr. Warner's Health Corset marked down to $1. Corsets that are retailing everywhere at 75 cts., down to 50 cts. In the above they can supply all sizes.

Despondency, if allowed unchecked, will often produce a morbid condition, so that the least unsatisfactory affair that happens will swell into terrifying proportions. The mind being warped often imparts torpidity to the body, all of which more frequently is the effect of inaction of the liver than from any other cause, and by resorting to Simmons Liver Regulator the mind will often find relief with the body.

"I don't want that stuff," is what a lady of Boston said to her husband when he brought home some medicine to cure her of sick headache and neuralgia which had made her miserable for fourteen years. At the first attack thereafter it was administered to her with such good results that she continued its use until cured, and made so enthusiastic in its praise that she induced twenty-two of the best families in her circle to adopt it as their regular family medicine. That "stuff" is Hop Bitters.—Standard.

We take pleasure in calling the attention of our readers to the large and elegant photographic parlors in Gill's art building, where they can find all the latest novelties connected with the business and a great variety of frames and cases for the Spring & Summer trade. Also the beautiful crystal picture and instantaneous photographs of children (the only place in the city where they are made). In fact, if you want a picture that you would take pleasure in keeping yourself or presenting to a friend, visit our friend Moore, corner Main and Bridge streets, Springfield.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPDEN SS. PROBATE COURT.—To all persons interested in the estate of Eunice B. Durkee, late of Palmer, in said county, deceased, Greeting:

Whereas, David E. Tenney, the executor of the will of said deceased, has presented for allowance the second and final account of his administration upon the estate of said deceased,

You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be holden at Springfield, in said county, on the first Tuesday of June next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, why the same should not be allowed. And said executor is ordered to serve this citation by publishing the same once a week, in the Palmer Journal, a newspaper printed at Palmer, three weeks successively, the last publication to be two days at least before said court.

Witness, William S. Shurtleff, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this nineteenth day of May, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one.
3w5 SAMUEL B. SPOONER, Register.

NOTICE is hereby given that the subscriber has been duly appointed executrix of the will of James Whitman, late of Palmer, in the county of Hampden, deceased; and has taken upon herself that trust, by giving bonds as the law directs. All persons having demands upon the estate of said deceased are required to exhibit the same; and all persons indebted to said estate are called upon to make payment to MARY WHITMAN, Executrix.

Love's Labor Lost.

Moonlight talks, midnight walks,
Longing eyes, soothing sighs,
Front gate, hours late.

Parlor scene; feeling mean;
"Dearest Bess, answer yes?"
Kind kiss, blind bliss.

Interview, papa too,
Nothing loth, happy both,
Couple glad, have it bad.

Organ swells, marriage bells;
Honeymoon, ended soon;
Double brown, settled down.

One year, skies clear,
Years two, rather blue,
Years three, can't agree.

County court, "splendid sport,"
Sorrow, sin, jury grin,
Divorce given, fetter riven.

Gossips tell, "Knew it well,
Told you so, long ago."
Braying mules, forty fools.

Worried wife, lonely life,
Husband roams, seeking homes.
Care. Cost. "Love lost."

MORAL.

When you wed, look ahead.
Might fall, that's all.

POSSIBILITIES OF THE FUTURE.

Prof. Perry, an eminent English savant, in a recent lecture predicted that the time was close at hand when all the heating would be done without fuel or fear of conflagration; when all lighting would be freed from grease, smoke or odor; when all power would be supplied without the chance of explosion, fire or exhaustion of material; when the telegraph would send fac similes of letters and the mail would become obsolete; when telephones would maintain neighborly intercourse a thousand miles away; when photophones would render audible the music of the spheres, or the awful howling of sun storms through a hundred thousand miles of cloud; when microphones would collect the imperceptible noises of invisible nature and teach us the song of the animalculæ as we have been taught the song of the robin and the meadow lark; when one pervading agency of nature, which is or represents no material, no destructive process, but merely a change of condition, and which is, possibly, the sole power of all material existence, is fully applied. The possibilities of science, or rather of electricity, which is coming to mean all of science that regards the energies of nature, are amazing even to those who are beginning to get used to whispered conversation carried on over a half dozen miles of wire, by the light of a voltaic arc that closely mocks the sun, timed by an electric clock that rocks the cradle and runs a sewing machine.

The latest and most refreshing Sabbath school incident happened in a class not a thousand miles from Lewiston. The teacher had grown eloquent in picturing to his little pupils the beauties of Heaven, and he finally asked: "What kind of little boys go to Heaven?" A lively little four-years-old boy, with kicking boots, flourished his fist. "Well, you may answer," said the teacher. "Dead ones!" the little fellow shouted, at the extent of his lungs.

A burly rowdy who has already served five or six sentences is brought before the police. Just as they are about to begin the examination, "Mr. President," says he, "my lawyer is indisposed. I call for a delay of one week." "But you have been caught in open misdemeanor, your hand in the pocket of the plaintiff. What could your lawyer say for you?" "Precisely, Mr. President; I'm quite curious to know."

Two young clergymen were disputing so loudly on a knotty point of theology that they awoke a big dog that had been sleeping on the hearth before the fire, whereupon he began to bark furiously. An old preacher, who had been quietly sipping his tea while the disputants were talking, gave the dog a kick, exclaiming: "Hold your tongue, you silly brute. You know no more about it than they do!"

The pyramid of Pueblo, in Mexico, is larger than the great pyramid of Cheops, in Egypt. The latter covers only fourteen acres, while the Mexican one covers forty acres of ground, and was originally 600 feet high. It is made of sun-dried brick, and is supposed to have been built 7000 years ago.

Never use the curry-comb on a horse's legs below the knee and hock. A corn broom is best, since it takes out the dirt and does not hurt the horse. When the curry-comb and common brush are all that are used to clean the horse its legs will seldom be found properly cleaned.

Valuable information from a bachelor: May is one of the unlucky months for marriages. The other unlucky months are January, February, March, April, June, July, August, September, October, November and December.—Louisville Courier Journal.

An English boy, on being asked the other day who was Prime Minister of England, answered, without hesitation, "Mr. Spurgeon."

REMEDY FOR HARD TIMES.—Stop spending so much on fine clothes, rich food and style. Buy good, healthy food, cheaper and better clothing; get more real and substantial things of life every way, and especially stop the foolish habit of running after expensive and quack doctors or using so much of the vile humbug medicine that does you only harm, and makes the proprietors rich, but put your trust in the greatest of all simple, pure remedies, Hop Bitters, that cures always at a trifling cost, and you will see better times and good health. Try it once. Read of it in another column. 2w9

Hundreds of men, women and children rescued from beds of pain, sickness and almost death and made strong and hearty by Parker's Ginger Tonic are the best evidences in the world of its sterling worth. You can find these in every community.—Post. See advertisement. 5w6

TAKE
SIMMONS
Liver Regulator!

ASK the recovered dyspeptics, bilious sufferers, victims of fever and ague, the mercurial diseased patient how they recovered their health, cheerful spirits and good appetite; they will tell you by taking Simmons Liver Regulator.

THE CHEAPEST, PUREST AND BEST FAMILY MEDICINE IN THE WORLD for DYSPEPSIA, CONSTIPATION, Jaundice, Bilious Attacks, SICK HEADACHE, Colic, Depression of Spirits, SOUR STOMACH, Heart Burn, &c., &c.

This unrivaled Southern remedy is warranted not to contain a single particle of Mercury, or any injurious mineral substance, but is

PURELY VEGETABLE,

containing those Southern roots and herbs, which an All-Wise Providence has placed in countries where Liver Diseases mostly prevail. It will cure all diseases caused by derangement of the Liver and Bowels.

The SYMPTOMS of Liver Complaint are a bitter or bad taste in the mouth; pain in the back, sides or joints, often mistaken for Rheumatism; SOUR STOMACH; loss of appetite; bowels alternately costive and lax; headache; loss of memory, with a painful sensation of having failed to do something which ought to have been done; debility; low spirits, a thick yellow appearance of the skin and eyes, a dry cough often mistaken for Consumption. Sometimes many of the symptoms attend the disease, at other times very few; but the LIVER, the largest organ in the body, is generally the seat of the disease, and if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and DEATH will ensue.

"I can recommend as an efficacious remedy for disease of the Liver, Heartburn and Dyspepsia, Simmons Liver Regulator.
LEWIS G. WUNDER, Philadelphia."

"We have tested its virtues personally, and know that for Dyspepsia, Biliousness and Throbbing Headache, it is the best medicine the world ever saw. We have tried forty other remedies before Simmons Liver Regulator, but none of them gave us more than temporary relief; but the Regulator not only relieved but cured us."—Ed. Telegraph and Messenger, Macon, Ga.

Saving Mother.

The farmer sat in his easy chair
Between the fire and the lamplight's glare;
His face was ruddy and full and fair.
His three small boys in the chimney nook
Conned the lines of a picture book;
His wife, the pride of his home and heart,
Baked the biscuit and made the tart,
Laid the table and steeped the tea,
Deftly, swiftly, silently;
Tired and weary and weak and faint,
She bore her trials without complaint,
Like many another household saint—
Content, all selfish bliss above,
In the patient ministry of love.
At last, between the clouds of smoke
That wreathed his lips, the husband spoke;—

"There's taxes to raise, an' int'rest to pay,—
And ef there should come a rainy day,
'Twould be mighty handy, I'm boun' to say,
T' have sumpthin' put by. For folks must die,
An' there's funeral bills, and gravestuns to buy—
Enough to swamp a man, purty nigh.
Besides, there's Edward and Dick and Joe
To be provided for when we go.
So 'f I was you, I'll tell you what I'd du:
I'd be savin' of wood as ever I could—
Extry fire don't du any good—
I'd be savin' of soap, and savin of ile,
And run up some candles once in awhile;
I'd be rather sparin' of coffee an' tea,
For sugar is high,
And all to buy,
And cider is good enough for me.
I'd be kind o' keerful about my clo'es
An' look out sharp how the money goes—
Gewgaws is useless, nater knows;
Extry trimmin'
'S the bane of women.

"I'd sell the best of the cheese and honey,
And eggs is as good, nigh about, 's the money;
And as to the carpet you wanted new—
I guess we can make the old one du.
And as for the washer, an' sewin' machine,
Them smooth-tongued agents 's so pesky mean,
You'd better get rid of 'em, slick and clean.
What du they know about women's work?
Du they calkilate women was born to shirk?"

Dick and Edward and little Joe
Sat in the corner in a row.
They saw the patient mother go,
On ceaseless errands to and fro,
They saw that her form was bent and thin,
Her temples gray, her cheeks sunk in,
They saw the quiver of lip and chin—
And then, with a warmth he could not smother,
Outspoke the youngest, frailest brother,—

"You talk of savin' wood an' ile,
An' tea an' sugar, all the while,
But you never talk of savin' mother!"

—Interior.

VIVA'S LANDLORD.

"Viva, dear, it's coming near the first of May!"

And gentle Mrs. Raynor laid down the coat that was perpetually becoming elbowless, and looked across the lamp-lit table with anxious eyes.

"Yes, mamma, I know," a trifle wearily.

Viva, a slender, pretty girl, with dark-brown hair gathered loosely behind shell-pink ears, and lips red as the cactus flower, met her mother's gaze with eyes bright with wistful thoughtfulness.

"And we must move, of course," cried a shrill young voice from the sofa, where sat Jessie, a volatile, overgrown school-girl, "because the front gate's off its hinges, and the roof leaks, and—"

"Yes, Jessie, we all know the reason for moving, but give mamma an opportunity to suggest where."

"There's hardly much choice about that," the pale-faced little woman said sadly. "Some place where the rent would be moderate; but—" a sudden look of longing shining out of the pain-worn face—"I would give all the world, dear, to see the country again. I fee. stifled here."

A gleam of quick determination came into Viva's velvety-brown eyes.

"And so you shall, mamma!" she said, emphatically.

"My darling, how?" in mild surprise.

"Well"—Viva puckered up her low, white brow, and tried to look wise and business-like—"you see we could get a cottage in some of the suburban villages at half what a city house would cost. Besides everything is so much cheaper in the country, and we could return to the city the coming Winter."

"But your pupils, Viva?"

"I could manage to give all the lessons in three days of the week—taking the train in, you know, is almost as cheap—and do work for Crumley the intervening days. Now, mamma!" triumphantly.

"It looks plausible at first sight, my pet, but I'm almost afraid to hope. Dear, dear! how that boy does wear out his clothes!"

Viva came over and clasped two maroon merino arms around the invalid figure before her.

"Hope as much as you like, mamma darling," she cried, gaily; "for we'll watch the papers till we see a treasure advertised 'cheap'—in italics, you know—and then—"

The rest was too glorious to describe.

Three days later Viva danced in, out of a blinding April shower, with rose-red cheeks and starry eyes.

"Here it is, mamma," she cried, enigmatically, with a hearty kiss and hug that almost demolished the small figure in the arm-chair. "Now listen."

And from the open paper of that morning, she read aloud:

TO RENT—IN SUBURBAN VILLAGE, Twenty minutes' ride from the city, an eight-room cottage, with garden attached. Cheap, to good tenant. Apply to Clifford Chandos, Room 12, 74 E—— street, City.

"I am sure this will suit—'cheap,' in italics, as I said, mamma. You will have your happy, countrified Summer, after all," with an exultant laugh. "Now, for a while, good-bye."

"Where are you going, dear?"

"To see about this, mamma. Lessons are over—"

"Yes, but I do not quite like the idea of your going alone, Viva."

"What! An old-maid music teacher like me? I almost acquire the dignity of age in this voluminous waterproof and green veil. Green! Just think of it! I might as well have red hair and spectacles. My nervous old darling, I'll be back before you know I'm gone."

And with this decidedly sweeping, but scarcely possible assertion, she was out again under the rifting, drifting April sky, and going cityward as fast as the street cars could take her.

In the thickest, busiest portion of the city, up two flights of dingy stairs went Viva.

A timid knock at room 12.

"Come in."

She turned the handle, and with the green veil well down, went in.

Two or three gentlemen, writing at baize-covered desks, looked up carelessly as she entered, and went on with their work.

A gentleman enveloped in clouds of cigar smoke, with feet considerably elevated above the level of his head, glanced toward the door, as the graceful figure in the threadbare waterproof came timidly in. Down came the feet, out went the cigar, and Clifford Chandos, pushing a chair forward, bowed gravely, questioningly, to the lady before him.

"I—I called to inquire about a cottage advertised."

"The cottage? Oh, yes, to be sure! Will you please be seated, and I will give you the particulars."

And Viva, taking the proffered seat, listened while the tall, grave man, with straight, black brows, and keen, kindly eyes, explained the terms with pleasant courtesy.

And when she lifted the obnoxious green veil a moment to conclude some necessary arrangement, Clifford Chandos started ever so slightly as he saw the pretty, girlish face before him, as serene aud dignified in its grave, business-like composure as though its owner were eight-and-fifty instead of eight-and-ten.

"When will you look at the place, Miss—?"

"Raynor," supplemented Viva.

"Miss Raynor. Shall we say to-morrow at one?"

"At two, if as convenient."

"Certainly. Two, if preferable."

Then he held the door open as courteously as though she wore sealskin and diamonds, while with a quiet grace she bowed slightly and passed from the room.

And Clifford Chandos went slowly back to his chair, a softer light in his keen gray eyes, and actually for once in his life forgot to relight his cigar.

* * * * * * *

The day came at last when, from the stuffy city house, the Rayners moved to the pretty, roomy, raftered cottage, where honeysuckle and wild roses straggled at their own sweet will over roof and porch.

And Viva, coming home from the dusty city three evenings in the week, pale and tired, brightened and laughed her own low, happy laugh at the sight of her mother's face—grown young again—at the window, and at the sound of Dick and Jessie's boisterous laughter.

It was curious all the repairing that cottage needed after they moved in. It was more curious that their quiet, handsome landlord should insist on supervising it all himself.

He grew into their simple lives in those days. Mrs. Raynor came to think the cheery voice better than any medicine, and the children to shout lustily at sight of him, and Viva to listen for the sound of his firm footstep on the garden path.

One evening, when the soft May wind was swaying the "lady-fingers," as the children call them, Viva snatched up her hat and strolled down to the pretty rustic gate.

Just a little more tired than usual after a desperate struggle to teach an irritably obtuse pupil the mysteries of crotchets and quavers and demi-semi-quavers.

She stood there, a fair, girlish figure in her soft white dress, a great bunch of blue meadow-violets at her slender throat and waist. The scented wind gently loosened the dark-brown hair and blew a fitful drift of rose-bloom into the pure, pale face.

Very pretty?

Well, Clifford Chandos thought so, at all events, as he came along the uneven country road with his light, firm footfall.

"Good evening, Miss Raynor."

Sfie turned suddenly, the faint flush deepening to carnation.

"Good evening, Mr. Chandos."

I think a person can give one a very tolerable shake of the hands without holding one's fingers quite a minute. But apparently Mr. Chandos thought differently.

"Miss Raynor, will you come for a walk—just a little way down the road? There is a show place there I should like to have you see."

He asked pleadingly, hurriedly, as though fearful of a refusal.

"Is it far?"

"No," eagerly; "quite near. Besides, I have something to tell you—or rather ask you—Miss Viva."

They were already strolling slowly on. She paused and looked up in vague alarm.

"To ask me, Mr. Chandos?"

"Yes. Viva, I want to ask you to leave Rose Cottage."

Was he mad?

"To leave Rose Cottage!" she repeated, blankly.

She stopped short and looked up at him with brown, bewildered eyes.

"Are you not satisfied with us as tenants? What will mamma say?"

"I did not ask your mother to leave Rose Cottage"—and his voice was trembling and low—"I asked you!"

"Me? Why, Mr. Chandos—"

She broke off abruptly as she saw the look in the eyes of the man regarding her. Such a look as would make more successful wooers in the world to-day—a look of passionate love and resolute determination to have her in spite of herself.

"Viva, my darling—my darling!" he cried, all the mischief in his voice swept away by his fiery earnestness, "won't you understand? I love you very dearly, Viva, and I want you for my wife!"

"Yes, I understand," she said, simply.

"I am not a rich man, dear, but I would give my life to make you happy!"

She looked up at him with bright, outshining eyes, and though her cheeks flamed hotly, she said in her gentle, straightforward, girlish way:

"I would be honored to be your wife were you penniless, Mr. Chandos."

"Mr. Chandos!" sternly. "Little wife, say 'Clifford!'"

And, her hand in his, she said it, simply: "Clifford."

In a short time they paused before a massive entrance gate and pretty Gothic lodge.

"This is the great place of the neighborhood, Viva. Shall we go up and look at it?"

They paused at the great stone steps of an ideal country seat, stretching, verandahed, porticoed, with huge stone lions on guard at the door.

"Come in, dear," holding out his hand with a curious smile.

"But the owner?"

"I go with his permission."

Then, passing the servant at the door, he led her through rooms where the mighty touch of Midas was softened and made perfect by the mightier touch of taste; through a conservatory where birds and flowers were drowsily falling asleep, and marble statues gleamed palely forth from tropical, dusky nooks.

"It's a handsome place, dear, isn't it?" he asked, when once again he stood 'neath the darkening sky.

"Handsome? Oh, Clifford!" with an ecstatic, long-drawn breath.

"I hardly know how much rent I ought to charge you, little woman," he cried, quizzically, drawing her closer to him; "but I'll be moderate. Suppose we say—one thousand kisses per annum."

"Yours!" she gasped. "You said you were not rich."

"Well, not Rothschild nor Vanderbilt, love, but," with a sudden change of tone, "richer than all the world, sweetheart, in you."

So, after all, Viva graces a home worthy of her. And Jessie sententiously remarks:

"'Twas well we moved."

And Viva nods and smiles as she slips her little sparkling hand into her husband's loving clasp.

HOME-MADE SUPERPHOSPHATE.

A good corn fertilizer may be made by taking five hundred pounds of finely ground bone, and mixing it with two hundred pounds of sulphuric acid (oil of vitriol) and six hundred pounds of plaster of paris (gypsum). A convenient way of mixing is thus described: Procure a good-sized hogshead and saw it in two. Then divide the ground bone into two equal parts, and place half in each of the half-hogsheads. Divide the acid the same way, and pour upon the bone. The ground bone is to be thoroughly mixed with the acid by means of a hoe, and allowed to stand three or four days, or until it becomes a complete paste. Then the plaster is to be added, and this is usually done by shoveling out a bushel or so upon the barn floor, sprinkling on the plaster and working it over with a hoe until it is well mixed, and shovel it into a barrel, and take out another batch which is to be treated in the same way until the whole is mixed. Cover up the filled barrels and allow them to stand and ferment for a week. To prepare it for use, pour a barrel of the fermenting mixture upon the barn floor, and work into it one or two bushels of dry loam or muck. Let it remain a few days, and it becomes pulverized and all ready for use.

A gentleman says he has used this formula, or one much like it, for many years, and has tried it side by side with purchased superphosphates, and with more satisfactory results. Its cost, aside from the labor of manufacture, is about seventeen dollars per ton, or considerably less than half that of the commercial superphosphate; labor included, it would not cost more than half. There is no doubt that fertilizers of this kind are of great benefit to vegetation in giving it an early and vigorous start, even if one has an abundance of stable manure. Our seasons are short, at the best, and a week's start, for corn, by means of superphosphates, may save the entire crop from an early frost.—Farmers' Cabinet.

A WONDERFUL LAKE.

The greatest wonder in the State of Iowa, and perhaps in any other State, is what is called the Walled Lake, in Wright county, twelve miles north of the Dubuque and Pacific Railway, and 150 miles west of Dubuque City. The lake is two or three feet higher than the earth's surface. In some places the wall is ten feet high, fifteen feet wide at the bottom, and five feet wide on the top. Another fact is the size of the stone used in the construction, the whole of them varying in weight from three tons down to 100 pounds. There is an abundance of stones in Wright county, but surrounding the lake, to the extent of five or ten miles, there are none. No one can form an idea of the means employed to bring them to the spot, or who constructed it. Around the entire lake is a belt of woodland half a mile in length, composed of oak. With this exception the country is a rolling prairie. The trees must have been planted there at the time of the building of the wall.

In the Spring of 1856 there was a great storm, and the ice on the lake broke the wall in several places, and the farmers in the vicinity were obliged to repair the damages to prevent inundation. The lake occupies a ground surface of 2,800 acres; depth of water as great as 25 feet.

The water is clear and cold, soil sandy and loamy. It is singular that no one has been able to ascertain where the water comes from or where it goes, yet it is always clear and fresh.

Connecticut is more alive than any other State to the value of village improvement societies, which are coming into existence in all parts of the Commonwealth. A law was recently passed unanimously by both branches of the Legislature providing that any person planting or protecting forest trees one-quarter of a mile or more along any public highway may receive for ten years an annual bounty of $1 for each quarter of a mile so planted; the forest trees to include the elm, maple, tulip, ash, basswood, oak, black walnut and hickory; the elms to be not more than sixty feet apart, and the others not more than thirty feet apart. In addition to this State bounty a number of public-spirited citizens have offered prizes of considerable value for the most successful attempts, within specified conditions, to make the towns in which they live attractive. This work, if conducted judiciously, is fruitful of excellent results. The bare and unattractive aspect of American villages is a reproach which can be removed with small cost and trouble to the individual and within a comparatively short time. Connecticut and Massachusetts already have made praiseworthy progress and many other States an encouraging beginning.

Drink? Deacon Hogwhistle wouldn't drink for anything. But he got hold of a receipt for making mince pie. It was as follows: "First take some chopped meats; add brandy; add chopped apples; add brandy; taste it; add more brandy; add a little chopped potato; add brandy; put in some raisins; add brandy; stir well and add some brandy; put in a little nutmeg; add brandy; add a little citron; add brandy; use a teacupful of sugar; add brandy." The deacon concluded he should like some mince pie, and he decided that instead of making the pie and then eating it, he would put the different ingredients, one at a time, into his stomach and let them become pie there. This was the explanation given to and accepted by the society when it hauled him over the coals for intoxication.

A lady alighting from a street car met an acquaintance, who said to her, "You appear to be excited." "So I am. I had to stand up the whole way." "Did nobody offer you a seat?" "Yes, one man; but I declined it, thinking that he would urge me to accept." "And he didn't?" "No; the beast went on reading and never looked up again. Bah! if there's anything I hate it's hoggishness in a horse car."

Said Edith to her doll: "There, don't answer me back. You mustn't be saucy, no matter how hateful I am. You must remember I am your mother!" Strange what curious ideas children get into their heads sometimes!

Three Fishers.

Three fishers strolled into the market place,
'Twas some two hours after the sun went down,
And a look of gloom was on each man's face,
For at empty baskets they each did frown,
For men may fish, but may get no bite,
And tired and ugly go home at night,
And vent their wrath in groaning.

Three fishers strolled into the beer saloon,
Where the crowd sat round and the gas was bright,
And each gaily whistled a merry tune,
And showed his fish with assumed delight,
For men will fish, yea, and men will lie,
And boast of catching fish they buy,
While inwardly they're groaning.

HER TERRIBLE ADVENTURE.

There were a party of four couples coming over on the Sarcelito boat, last Sunday, and the pretty girl of the gushers looked up at Mount Tamalpais and said:

"Oh, that horrid, horrid mountain. I had the most frightful adventure up there last summer you ever heard of! It's a wonder my hair didn't turn white."

"What on earth was it?" chorused the rest.

"Well, you see, I was up there with a private picnic party, and I wandered off by myself about a mile, picking flowers. After awhile I sat down to rest in a lonely canon, and before long I heard a queer rustling sound in some of the bushes right behind me. I knew at once, somehow, that it was a grizzly."

"Great Scott! and you all alone!" shuddered her escort.

"Not a soul within a mile of me; I was just paralyzed with terror. I didn't dare to stir, but in a minute I heard the beast coming toward me through the thicket."

"Oh, if I'd only been there," said a pimply-faced young man, breathing very hard.

"I knew it was no use to try and run, and I had read somewhere that bears never touch dead people. So I just shut my eyes and held my breath."

"Gracious!"

"Pretty soon the great brute walked up close and began sniffing me all over. Oh, it was just terrible!"

"Should have thought you would have fainted."

"Oh, I didn't dare to," said the heroine.

"Just then I suppose the party rushed up and rescued you?" said the appalled audience.

"No, they didn't. Pretty soon I felt the great beast pulling at the flowers in my hat, so I just got up and shooed the horrid thing away."

"What! The grizzly?"

"Oh, it wasn't a grizzly. It was a nasty old cow. But just suppose it had been a grizzly."

But the audience refused to suppose, and the party looked like a Quaker funeral until the boat struck the wharf.—Virginia (Nev.) Chronicle.

THE ELECTROPHONE.

The Paris correspondent of the London Daily Telegraph describes a remarkably interesting experiment which has just been made at Calais and Dover, between which places a conversation has been kept up viva voce by means of a new kind of telephone, which has been patented under the name of electrophone. Not only were the words whispered in the instrument at Calais distinctly heard at Dover, and of course vice versa, but the listener at one end was perfectly able to distinguish by the mere tones of the voice the person who was speaking at the other end. While the human voice was being transmitted through one of the wires, the other wires were being employed for the transmission of ordinary telegraphic messages. Moreover, the experiments were conducted between the hours of 10 and 4, that is, in the busiest part of the day, when the wires were in unceasing requisition. The voice of the speaker was distinctly heard as soon as the wires were joined to the apparatus, and conversations were carried on without interruption in the presence of Sir James Carmichael, chairman of the Submarine Telegraph Company; Mr. Sabine, Mr. Despointes and other competent specialists. There can be no longer any doubt that it is perfectly practicable to converse across or rather under the sea by means of any submarine cable, and the success of the experiment opens up vistas of the possibilities of rapid communication that a few years ago would have belonged to the realms of dreamland alone. The inventor maintains that it is just as easy to talk across the Atlantic as from one room to another.

Some Pennsylvania hogs recently brought a lot of illicit distillers to grief. A drover bought a number of these animals which had been raised principally on chestnuts and acorns in the Dry Ridge woods, and turned them loose in a distillery yard at Pittsburg. The hogs at once rushed to a trough full of spent mash in a corner and began devouring it greedily. As hogs unaccustomed to mash will not eat it, the proprietor of the distillery knew that some illicit manufacture of whisky was going on, and so informed the revenue officers, who at once went to the district where the hogs had been raised, and succeeded in finding and breaking up several "moonshine" establishments.

"William," she exclaimed, pushing him away from her, "you've been eating radishes." "Clara," he responded reproachfully, "you forget that I live in a boarding house, and that radishes at this season of the year cost ten cents a bunch." "Forgive me, Willie," she said penitently, and immediately rising turned the light down several degrees lower.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Nothing is intolerable that is necessary. Now, God hath bound thy trouble upon thee, by His special Providence, and with a design to try thee, and with purposes to reward and to crown thee. These cords thou canst not break, and therefore lie thou down gently and suffer the hand of God to do what He pleases.—Jeremy Taylor.

"Let us play we were married," said little Edith, "and I will bring my dolly and say, 'See baby, papa.'" "Yes," replied Johnny, "and I will say, 'Don't bother me now. I want to look through the paper.'" Children have strange ideas of grown folks' ways, now don't they?

ARCHAISMS IN THE REVISED NEW TESTAMENT.

Prof. Fisher, of Yale, contributes a scholarly and thorough review of "The Revised New Testament" to the June Scribner, enumerating all the important changes and on the whole commending the conscientious and careful work of the revisers, although he takes exception in some few minor instances. After giving several examples of changes made by the committee, he writes as follows:

"The authors of the New Revision, had they undertaken to exclude all archaisms, would have been obliged to go farther in modifying the tone of the received version than was necessary or desirable. They have wisely decided to retain such as are perfectly intelligible and cannot be dropped without dispelling in some degree the atmosphere that invests the ancient translation. There is no objection to saying that Joseph 'minded to put her away privily' (Matt. 1.19). Every one sees the meaning of 'minded' at a glance, without reflection. In some instances, however, archaic forms have been retained, which are less agreeable, and which might have been spared without the least harm. Why was it necessary to retain the word 'bewrayeth'—'thy speech bewrayeth thee' (Matt. 26.73)? The difference between this word and 'betrayeth,' if there be any difference, readers will not discern. In the Lord's Prayer, why do we still read, 'which art in Heaven,' for 'who art in heaven?' It appears that the retention of 'which' is due to the English branch of the board of revisers. It is a remarkable fact that the English company, with the uprightness which belongs to the character of true scholars, and with a genuine English boldness in a matter where the truth is at stake, do not hesitate to alter the form of the Lord's Prayer, by substituting 'as we have forgiven, for 'as we forgive,' and 'deliver us from the evil one,' in the room of 'deliver us from evil'—it is remarkable, we say, that the same scholars should cling to the old 'which' for the modern and more grammatical 'who.' Fearless in revising the Greek text to make it accord with the demands of truth, they are excessively cautious about modifying the English phrases which represent it. Owing to the same mode of feeling, they hold on to 'whiles'—'whiles thou art in the way with him'—(Matt. 5.25) as if 'while' in the room of it were not harmless, and a better word for the modern ear. If it be asked why 'which' is kept in the Lord's Prayer and 'whiles' in the Sermon on the Mount, the solution must be found in that tenacious conservation in minor things which belongs, in unison with a courageous spirit of progress, to the English mind, and is discerned in many phenomena of English life. Why do the boys in the great school at Winchester still eat their supper off wooden plates? Why do the lawyers and judges still load their heads with ponderous wigs? When such questions are answered, the reason will perhaps be found why the giving up of the dear old 'which' and 'whiles' is a thing not to be thought of."

The following is told of a well-known "beauty lady," who is happy in the possession of a little girl about five years old, almost as pretty as her mother: Not long ago, an elderly, eminently respectable gentleman made an afternoon call, and as elderly gentlemen often do, he took up the child and kissed her. "You must not do that," said the child, struggling; "I am a respectable married woman!" "What do you mean, my dear?" asked the astonished visitor. "Oh, that's what mamma always says when gentlemen kiss her," replied the artless infant.—London Cuckoo.

Judge, severely: "How do you know the defendant is a married man? Were you ever at his house?" "No, sir." "Do you know him personally?" "No, sir." "Did anybody ever tell you they were married?" "No, sir; but when I see a man and woman come to the same church regularly for three years, occupy the same pew, and have a hymn-book apiece to sing out of, I don't want to see no marriage certificate. I can swear to their relation all the time." Verdict for the plaintiff.

The Norristown Herald tells of a young lady who was on her forty-ninth yawn when her young man took a seat at the piano and warbled: "O what shall I give my love?" "O give her a rest," was the unconscious reply of the sleepy girl; and the warbler put on his hat and went right out to the black and solemn night without kissing her good-by. And it was only one o'clock a. m., too.

Genevieve Ware is shocked beyond all expression because men and women are compelled to sleep in the same sleeping-car. It is dreadful. We have often worried over the same, and been afraid to go to sleep, lest some woman should chloroform us and kiss us in our dreams. No man is safe in a mixed sleeping car.

The Journal.

SATURDAY, MAY 28, 1881.

STARTLING developments are promised shortly in the star route investigation at Washington, and it is intimated that the lightning will strike pretty high up, and that some of Secretary Blaine's warm friends may suffer. "Let no guilty man escape," whoever he may be.

BOSTON is developing considerable enthusiasm over the proposition to hold a world's fair in that city in 1885. A preliminary meeting to talk over the subject was well attended by the solid men of the city Wednesday evening, and a committee of conference was appointed to consider the subject in all its bearings and report at an adjourned meeting next week.

AN APPEAL is made by the war department at Washington to all officers of the late volunteer forces who still have in their possession or control books and other records pertaining to their commands, to deposit them with the adjutant general's office, in order that the pension claims of the widows, orphans and disabled soldiers, whose claims depend for verification upon these records, may receive proper attention.

GOV. LONG has issued a proclamation calling attention to the fact that Memorial Day, next Monday, is for the first time a legal holiday, and recommending its observance. He says: "Let us honor, not mourn, the dead. Let us reap, as they sowed, not war, but peace; not hate, but love; not discord and chains, but union and liberty. Let us scatter their graves with the everlasting, not the cypress. So through tears shall unblend the rainbow."

THE United States Senate finally adjourned last week Friday afternoon, after confirming most of the President's nominations, though a few went over without action, and the nomination of Wm. E. Chandler to be solicitor general was rejected by a vote of 24 to 19, the Democrats voting solidly against him on account of his pronounced partisanship, and one or two Republicans voting with them. Mr. Chandler now hopes to become a United States Senator from New Hampshire, to succeed Senator Rollins.

COL. THOMAS A. SCOTT, ex-president of the Pennsylvania Railroad, died at Clifton, Pa., last Saturday, at the age of 56. For thirty years he was the leading spirit of the Pennsylvania road, which, from being a road of minor importance, grew under his management until it became the most perfect railroad organization in the country, and a leading line between the East and the West, with numerous important branches. It is his best monument, and his life was cut short by his devotion to its interests.

SECRETARY WINDOM has received the total amount of 5 per cent bonds called for, to be continued at 3½ per cent, and this within a dozen days of his call. Within two months the secretary has refunded $445,000,000 of 5 and 6 per cent bonds, without disturbing the financial equilibrium by a ripple of excitement, and the continued bonds are subject to the call of the government at any moment. His course was criticised somewhat at first, but even his critics now allow that his plan has resulted in a brilliant success.

THE terrible tragedy on the Thames river in Canada Tuesday evening was simply a monstrous crime, for which somebody ought to be held strictly accountable, and punished to the full extent of the law. The catastrophe is not an auspicious opening of the excursion season, but if it makes the steamboat owners more careful, and government inspectors more alert, its lessons will not be entirely lost. But will it make them more careful? We had some serious lessons in this line last year, which seem to have been entirely forgotten.

IT is the custom of the United States Senate to elect a president pro tem. of the Senate before an adjournment, but no such action was taken last week, and if the President and Vice President should both happen to die before next December, the country would be left without a constitutional head. This is not probable, however; but even if such an event should happen, we imagine that the country would be equal to the occasion, and some comfortable way out of the difficulty would be devised, so that the wheels of government would continue to move without any serious delay.

EX-SENATORS CONKLING and Platt have gone to Albany this week, and are working like beavers to secure a re-election. Vice President Arthur is also on hand to aid them, and the whole power of the "machine" is being exerted in their behalf. They have been beaten in their first skirmish, however, their attempts to secure a caucus having failed, and there is at least an even chance that they will be defeated finally, if the anti-Conklingites are able to hold their forces together against the strong influences brought to bear upon them. Even if Conkling secures a re-election, it will be after a humiliating struggle, which will make it a sorry sort of a "vindication" for him.

TUESDAY was the 37th anniversary of the sending of the first telegraphic message, when Prof. Morse sent over the wires from Washington to Baltimore, a distance of 40 miles, these words: "What hath God wrought!" There are now over 400,000 miles of telegraph wires in this country, to say nothing of the thousands of miles in other countries and encircling the whole earth, enabling communication to be held with almost any part of the globe; while the wonders of the telephone and kindred recent inventions are opening vistas of yet more marvelous attainments in the future, which promise to eclipse even the wonders of the past.

MISHAPS AND MISDEEDS.

A sad disaster occurred on the Thames river about a mile below London, Ont., Tuesday evening. The steamer Victoria was returning from Springbank with some 600 excursionists on board, when the boat gave a sudden lurch and went over, collapsing like an egg shell, and plunging her human freight into the river among the debris, 243 men, women and children being drowned. The scene, as anxious and bereaved friends gathered on the shore, while the search for bodies was carried on by the light of bonfires, was heartrending, and the city was completely stunned by the appalling calamity. The accident was caused by criminally overloading a light boat utterly unfit to carry such a crowd, and the loss of life was largely increased by the top deck holding down and smothering the people under it. Thursday was given up to the burying of the dead at London, all business being suspended. A deep gloom has settled over the city, and strong men can hardly speak to each other without breaking down.

The British steamer Ganos, from Matanzas for Boston, with a cargo of 2300 hogsheads of sugar, collided in Boston Bay last week Friday night, during a thick fog, with the Warren line steamer Pembroke, and sunk in five minutes. All the crew escaped but one man, who leaped overboard and was drowned. The loss on vessel and cargo is about $500,000, and the Pembroke has been libeled for over $420,000.

Dr. B. F. Green of Lowell, formerly a Methodist minister, has been arrested on the charge of performing an abortion on Miss Mary Chandler, 19 years old, who died at Boston last Saturday. Herbert Davis, the girl's lover, who took her to Green's office, though protesting against the operation, has also been arrested.

An explosion of several barrels of Danforth's fluid in the cellar of a building at St. Joseph, Mo., Monday evening, blew up and burned the building. A number of colored men were in a saloon on the first floor, four of whom were burned to death, and twelve or fifteen seriously or fatally injured.

Three men were killed and several injured at Deadwood, Dak., last week Thursday night, by the caving in of a mine. A similar accident in a coal shaft at Mill Creek, Pa., last Saturday, resulted in the killing of two men.

A passenger train on the Hudson branch of the Boston & Albany Railroad collided with a freight engine Tuesday morning, wrecking the engines and killing the engineer and fireman of the passenger train.

Five pilots were drowned by the upsetting of a boat in a gale off Bic, P. Q., last Saturday, and eight men perished in a similar manner at other points.

A small house occupied by a French family at Shrewsbury was burned Tuesday, and a 6-years old child perished in the flames.

D. A. Towner, a Boston bookkeeper, shot himself dead on his mother's grave at Middletown, Ct., Tuesday.

A child fell over a precipice near Ithaca, N. Y., on Sunday, and dashed his brains out on the rocks below.

James Johnson, a Springfield expressman, choked himself to death last Saturday with a handkerchief.

A boiler explosion at Memphis, Tenn., on Tuesday, killed two men and severely injured three others.

A high chimney fell on workmen in New York Monday, killing two and injuring several others.

THE Revised New Testament, which was issued in this country on the 20th inst., is meeting with a wonderful sale, and for a time at least it will be the best read book of the day. Its reception, on the whole, is very complimentary to the work of the translators, who have been engaged in the work of revision for the past ten years. It could hardly be expected that any new translation, however perfect it might be, would be received without criticism, for the King James version has been so long in use, and people have become so much attached to it, that no other can take its place in their hearts at once. The revised version meets with considerable sharp criticism in England, but in this country it is very generally commended. There are many points in which it might have been improved, without doubt, but it makes clear many dark passages in the old version, and unquestionably brings us nearer to the truths of the Gospel as originally written. Even should it not take the place of the common version, it will serve a good purpose as a commentary, and will be much used for this purpose.

Lottie Maloney, a young woman 22 years of age, who left her home at Smyrna, Del., a couple of years ago, and went to Philadelphia in search of work on account of her parents' poverty, found a position eventually as housekeeper for Dr. J. M. Leon, who had become interested in her welfare. The doctor is one of the oldest physicians in the city, and Lottie won her way into his heart to such an extent that he has recently adopted her by process of law, and proposes to make her an heir to some $300,000 of his property.

The total number of letters mailed in the United States for the year ending Dec. 31, 1880, was 1,053,252,876, or an average of 21 for every man, woman and child in the country. In addition there were mailed 324,556,440 postal cards, 812,032,000 newspapers and 40,148,792 magazines and other periodicals.

A farmer living in Markham township, twenty miles from Toronto, Ont., has discovered a pit on his farm containing 500 skulls and five times as many leg and arm bones. It is believed that it is an Indian ossuary, and that the remains have been under ground 200 years.

A New Haven trunk dealer received a trunk for repairs Tuesday, and, in making the preliminary diagnosis, he found in small drawers a gold watch, $30 in gold, two gold bracelets and a diamond and pearl set, besides a number of less valuable articles of jewelry.

Lompoc, Santa Barbara county, is an aggressive temperance community. The only liquor saloon in the town was blown to atoms by a large bomb last Saturday night, while unoccupied, making the second saloon destroyed there by gunpowder.

Saint Gaudens' statue of Admiral Farragut —commended on all sides as the most thoroughly artistic work of its kind in the United States—was unveiled with appropriate ceremonies in Madison square, New York, Wednesday afternoon.

Another telephone wire has been put in between Monson and this place this week, to accommodate the increasing business, and a wire has also been run to the State Primary School.

The potato bugs begin to appear, and the currant worms are just getting to work in good shape. Paris green for one, and hellebore for the other kind, is the best thing known to spoil their appetites.

At an adjourned session of the probate court in Springfield, Tuesday, leave was granted to sell real estate from the estate of Laura A. Parks of Monson, to pay debts; and the administrator's account in estate of John Ratigan of Brimfield was filed.

J. C. Tibbetts, late assistant superintendent at the State Primary School, who has been rusticating down in Maine for a few months past, has accepted the position of superintendent of the Liversidge Institute for boys, at Boston, and entered upon his duties last week.

The Boston & Albany road is relaying a considerable portion of its tracks with a heavier rail than it has heretofore used. The rails taken up, which are of steel, are not worn to any great extent and are to be relaid upon the branches. A number of powerful locomotives are to be built at the Springfield shops the present season.

Decoration Day, next Monday, being now a legal holiday, the banks will be closed, and persons having notes coming due on that day must take care of them to-day. We do not learn that there is to be any public observance of the day whatever in this place, though the few soldiers' graves in the cemetery will probably be decorated by friendly hands in a private way.

A list of depositors in the swindling "Ladies' Deposit" in Boston, which came to grief last year, was published the other day, showing some 800 depositors who have proved their claims, while there are doubtless many others who preferred to swallow their losses quietly rather than let their names be known. In the published list we find the names of M. Alice Armstrong of Wilbraham, who was "in" for $280, and Lucy A. Tucker of Ware, who was down for $339.20.

The managers of the Boston & Albany Railroad might add materially to the convenience of their patrons in this vicinity, in a small way, if they would furnish a ticket from this station to Springfield and return for 75 cents. As it is now, people must visit the ticket office at each place, or else buy two tickets here, when one would answer just as well. The reduction of a cent in the price would still give the road its regular rate of 2½ cents a mile—and for that matter it could afford to sell such excursion tickets, good for one day, for 70 cents.

Rev. C. H. Eaton, who has just entered upon the pastorate of the Church of the Divine Paternity in New York, will begin his summer vacation of three months in the course of a week or two. During the vacation the church is to be handsomely decorated and a memorial, probably of bronze, will be erected to its late pastor, Rev. Dr. E. H. Chapin. The cost, which will include frescoing, stained glass windows and the memorial, will be about $20,000. The work will be done by Lewis C. Tiffany, and will be finished early in September.

Elvira Makely was found guilty of burning Montraville Ackert's house at Brimfield Aug. 1, 1879, at the superior court in Springfield Wednesday, but the case goes to the supreme court on exceptions, and the case of Ackert goes over to the December term, to await the final disposition of the Makely case. Timothy McCarthy, formerly of Thorndike, was sentenced to 16 months' imprisonment for adultery. Martin Andrews, the Hampden negro who assaulted Constable Beebe of that town last November, goes to jail for nine months; James Wallace of Monson was given 30 days for an assault on John Anthony; and Wm. R. Barrows of Monson, who was on trial at the last term for rape on a 5-years-old girl, the jury disagreeing, entered a plea of guilty of simple assault, and was given a six months' sentence. The case against Charles H. Yale of Granby, for an assault on a Palmer girl, with intent to commit rape, has been continued, on account of the sickness of his counsel.

HOLLAND.

William L. Webber of this town has been commissioned as a justice of the peace.

THREE RIVERS.

George E. Sanford of this place has taken the Cove House, at South Haven, Ct., for the Summer, and will be glad to see all his friends there on their vacation trips.

WALES.

Mrs. Wyman, the boarding mistress at Shaw mill, is quite sick.

There was no bell at the Baptist church last Sunday, and will not be next, so people must watch their clocks or be late to church.

Quiet-loving citizens say the carousing and peace-disturbing noise that has been going on in the streets for a few nights must and shall be checked.

THORNDIKE.

It is calculated that the brick work of the new mill will be completed in about six or eight weeks unless the weather is unusually bad.

The citizens of this village are experiencing the practical workings of the license law, and the question whether a license or a prohibitory law is best adapted to decrease the evils of intemperance is pretty well settled in the minds of most of our people. It is to be regretted that those who have regard for order and decency should be forced to behold those sights which occur not unfrequently upon our streets.

BELCHERTOWN.

Rev. Mr. Hastings, formerly of Connecticut, was installed as pastor of the Baptist church Wednesday afternoon. Charge to the pastor by Rev. Mr. Newton of Leverett; reading and prayer by Rev. T. C. Russell of Palmer.

Enthusiastic meetings are being held to make arrangements for the reception of the 10th Mass. regiment June 21st. Colt's Armory Band will give a concert on the park of one hour's duration, after which Gov. Long and others will address the people. This celebration promises to be one of the best Belchertown has ever had.

BONDVILLE.

O. B. Smith has lost a valuable cow, by getting loose in the barn and eating too much meal.

Miss Addie Hoyt, of Wilbraham, has taken the place of Mrs. Smith in the second primary school.

The engineers of the Mass. Central Railroad have been making the final survey, and will have a large force of men at work here in two or three weeks.

W. C. McClallan of Chicopee has been awarded the contract for digging the canal and putting in the foundation for the new mill, and will begin work at once.

Tuesday evening the village people were treated to a very agreeable out-door concert by the Boston Duck Band, and were somewhat surprised by the boys' fine playing. We are in hopes to hear them often, now that they are doing so nicely under the management of Wm. O. Regan.

WARREN.

Rev. David Moyes has gone to Europe for a Summer vacation.

A new brick picker house is being built at Knowles's warp mill.

The Catholics had a coffee party at Brigham's Hall last evening.

The selectmen have appointed Schuyler Hamblet night watchman.

Rev. Mr. Walker of Spencer exchanged with Rev. Mr. Forbes last Sabbath.

Another town meeting to-day, to consider the location of the new school house.

The Ladies' Home Missionary Society met with Mrs. Alfred Warriner Wednesday afternoon.

The skating rink is well started and patronized, the band playing two or three times a week.

Rev. Mr. Forbes will preach a memorial service next Sabbath to the Grand Army, who are expected to be present.

Memorial Day will be observed next Monday. Gen. John L. Swift delivers the address, and the Warren Band will furnish music.

HAMPDEN.

It is currently rumored that Abner C. Burleigh has bought Horace M. Sessions' farm. Mr. Sessions has disposed of all his stock, and much of his personal effects.

The valuable breeding mare owned by Abner C. and Charles H. Burleigh dropped dead in the harness Tuesday of this week. She was heavy with foal at the time. She leaves quite a number of colts, all valuable.

The committee appointed some two months since at the agricultural meeting held here, to ascertain if a creamery could be established in the place, are ready to report, and will at a meeting to be held at the Methodist church vestry June 1st, at 2 o'clock p. m. They will recommend the formation of a stock company with a capital of from $2000 to $3000, they having secured the promise of more than 200 cows in Hampden, Longmeadow and Wilbraham. Others from Connecticut have signified their readiness to support the project. The committee will suggest locating the creamery on land of Silas W. Chapin, where there is a cold spring sufficient and suitable for the creamery, but without buildings. Another locality will be recommended with a house and barn on it, known as the "old Leach place," and owned by Isaac W. Leach. Both are centrally located, and in the vicinity of the Allen House. The committee are strongly of the opinion that the enterprise is no longer in doubt, but at no distant time the thing will be in running order.

MONSON.

Carpenters are scarce.

Road Supervisor King is mending the public ways.

The lawn mower is more and more in use these days.

L. C. Moulton has opened an ice cream saloon in Central Block.

Chas. Carpenter was severely injured by a refractory bull a few days since.

It's been decoration day every day since the milliners had their openings.

Building at South Monson is just "booming" now—and there is more to come.

How doth the busy assessor improve each shining opportunity to interview the tax payers!

Work on the new straw shop is progressing finely, and carpenters are in demand in that section.

Remick has a cellar dug and lumber on the ground for a new dwelling house on Pleasant street.

The Newfoundland and little Spitz are in conference with the town clerk for another year's lease.

That fine pair of black horses seen on our streets the past week are owned by Hon. S. F. Cushman.

Two members of the sportsmen's club brought in a string of 78 trout the other day, caught—"Oh! over there!"

E. S. Safford and family are now located at Hudson, N. Y. They made many friends during their stay in Monson.

The Springfield Weekly Republican offers reduced rates for the balance of the year. Subscriptions received at the post office.

Albert Danforth will be in the employ of Flynt & Co. for the year ensuing, as builder and contractor in the carpenter and joiner work.

Willie Rice, who has been in the house of correction a little over a year, on a two-years' sentence for perjury, has been pardoned by Gov. Long.

Flynt & Co. have contracted to build for W. H. Bugbee & Son a double tenement dwelling house on Pleasant street, to be completed Sept. 1st.

E. F. Willis, the clothier, has a much larger stock of gents' furnishing goods and clothing than heretofore, and his patrons are increasing daily.

Amasa Harvey, formerly of Wales, is viewing building lots in certain localities, and will probably soon determine the location and erect a dwelling house.

Work on the library building is rapidly progressing, the first story being nearly completed, and the stone for the balance cut and ready to be put in place.

The straw works of Merrick, Fay & Co. have had a very successful season, and turned out large quantities of the most fashionable ladies' and gents' wear.

The yards and grounds on Main street are looking unusually fine for this season of the year, the warm wet weather of the past few weeks having developed a richness of foliage not always seen.

Hampden Avenue is busy with the sound of the stone hammer in laying cellar walls, and the carpenter's saw and hammer in erecting dwellings, some 8 or 10 going up in this locality this season.

Bicycles crop out early this season. Heretofore 'twas the custom to buy sickles in harvest time. The riders furnish entertainment every evening now, and appear to be getting quite proficient in the art.

A mysterious disease has been troubling the horses for the two weeks past. Their hind legs seem paralyzed, in some cases almost totally. Some are affected slightly, while others are a number of days in recovering.

The officers of the Improvement Association held a meeting last Tuesday evening at the residence of the president, S. F. Cushman, and committees were appointed for various purposes, to report at the adjourned meeting June 7.

Henry Glynn is turning out a large quantity of new work in the wagon line, and G. M. Mixter, the carriage painter, is having more than the usual number of contracts for the better class of work, which has proven so acceptable to all patrons.

The programme for Decoration Day is as follows: At one o'clock a detachment of veterans will visit and decorate the graves in the Moulton Hill cemetery; at half past two there will be a concert by a chorus from the Harmony Society at Central Hall; at three o'clock at the same place an address by Rev. F. A. Warfield of Boston, with music by the Central Hall Orchestra. After the address the procession will form and, headed by the Monson Brass Band, march to the main cemetery, where the graves will be decorated. All old soldiers and sailors are requested to report to the marshal of the day, A. A Gage, on their arrival at the hall. Contributions of flowers and evergreens are earnestly solicited, and may be left at Central Hall during the forenoon.

G. H. Newton, of the Inland Whaling Association, arrived home last Tuesday and reports having left his crew in the northern part of Michigan, where Professor Mummery, formerly of the British Museum, is carrying out the project of petrifying the whale. Mr. Newton is confident that in the course of two or three weeks he will have a completely natural petrified whale that will last for years. The exhibit has proven a valuable assistant to many scientific men of the West, illustrating many heretofore disputed points regarding the great mammal, as well as giving the children and public generally a complete and perfect lesson in natural history. Manager Englehardt has charge during Mr. Newton's absence.

WARE AND VICINITY.

The Otis Company are making preparations to build an addition to the building known as the trim shop. It is also reported that they are to build a two-tenement house on Park Avenue this season.

The first train down on Monday morning was obliged to stop at Gilbertville on account of a bursted flue. So it was said "the seven o'clock train did not go until ten," which was quite a disappointment to some who wished to get into Springfield early for circus day.

A petition has been in circulation for signatures this week to have the county commissioners come here and relocate and determine the boundaries of Water street from the bridge to West street, and of North street from Main street to Muddy Brook. This we understand is preparatory to the laying of more concrete walk this season by the Village Improvement Association.

There are some symptoms of the boating and canoeing fever having reached Ware. The raising of the dam has set back the water so far that it is said that with a boat built flat so as to run in shallow water one may go nearly to Gilbertville, and with a canoe it is claimed that one may go down the river to the Connecticut with but few short "carrys," and from thence to the Sound if he wishes.

Harry Johnson had the first finger of his right hand badly injured while playing ball on Monday. The second joint was driven back, shortening the finger about half an inch, and when one of his companions attempted to pull it back he pulled too hard, displacing some of the tendons, so that it is worse off than if broken. Eddie Tuttle has, we understand, been at home suffering with a similar accident.

The Ware glass ball club are making some good scores these days, some of them averaging better than some of the professionals at the great match in Springfield this week. Those who comprise our club are a modest set, so we refrain from giving names, but give some of the scores. There are four that have broken 19 out of 20, several 18 out of 20, a large number that have broken 17 out of 20, and the average for the club is about 16 out of 20 balls.

New books in the library the past week: Carleton's "Household Encyclopædia;" "Guttenberg, or the art of Printing;" "Arrows of the Chase," John Ruskin; "Great Cities of the Ancient World;" "Great Cities of the Middle Ages;" "Discoveries and inventions of the 19th century;" "Life and her children," A. B. Buckley; "Speeches from the Dock;" "Stories of the sea," E. E. Hale; Lives of Butler, Descartes and Dryden; "Buried Alive, or ten years in Siberia." Among fiction are: "By the Tiber," "A Fair Barbarian," "Tsar's Window," "Nameless Nobleman," "Trotty Books," by E. S. Phelps. The American Art Review has been added to the library the present year.

At the adjourned meeting of the fire district on Monday it was almost unanimously voted to raise and appropriate $3000 for the purpose of securing the chapel lot on Water street, and erecting an engine house thereon. The price to be paid for the lot was $1500, but it has since been ascertained that the building, lot and all, with furnace in the basement, can be had for the sum of $3500, and a warrant has been posted for a meeting of the district to be held on Wednesday, June 1st, at 3 o'clock p. m., to see if the district will authorize the building committee to purchase the chapel building as well as the lot, and authorize said committee to exceed the appropriation at a former meeting by so much as may be necessary to make such purchase, as well as to make some necessary changes for the accommodation of the fire department. By doing this the district will get a much better building than could be put up for the money.

Magazines, Etc.

The element of timeliness which is found, to some extent, in every number of Scribner's Monthly, is particularly noticeable in the June issue, just published. The opening article is a description, by R. W. Gilder, of "The Farragut Monument," designed by Augustus St. Gaudens, and just unveiled in Union Square, New York, and is accompanied by a full-page engraving, by Cole, of the figure, and by illustrations of other parts of the monument. In connection with this subject is "An August Morning with Farragut"—a vivid account of the great admiral's famous victory at Mobile, by Lieutenant J. C. Kinney, who was on board the Hartford during the fight, and tells the true story of the lashing. Other papers which come under the head of "seasonable" are: The second part of Col. Waring's "Sanitary Condition of New York," entitled "The Remedy," and recommending a complete system of house and street drainage; a brief sketch of the late Earl of Beaconsfield, accompanied by a full-page portrait, with an unpublished sonnet written by Disraeli in 1839; a brief biograpical and critical sketch of the artist Bastien Lepage, illustrated; a scholarly review of the "Revised New Testament," just published, by Professor Fisher of Yale; "The Westminster Play," a description of one of the annual performances of an ancient Latin play, for which the Westminster school is noted; "Some New Berries," inclning late news from the fruit world, by E. P. Roe, with illustrations; also a paper on "Practical Floriculture, by Peter Henderson, the well-known floriculturist, with numerous illustrations. Lovers of light reading will find plenty to interest them in this number. There is an opening instalment of several pages of "A Fearful Responsibility," by W. D. Howells (the "fearful responsibility" being an American girl); "A Rainy Day with Uncle Remus,"—five new fables told in his inimitable style, by Joel Chandler Harris; the second instalment of George W. Cable's "Madame Delphine," which is full of action; "Fritz," a bright history of a pet bird; "Along the North Shore of Long Island," describing a canoe-trip by Charles H. Farnham, with charming illustrations; a description of lobster-fishing and lobster-canning, contributed by W. H. Bishop, with illustrations; a travel article, by Miss Gordon Cumming, giving account of a visit to "The Largest Extinct Volcano" in the world, with an illustration of the crater. There is the usual variety of poetry, and in the editorial department Dr. Holland takes occasion to give an interesting review of the history of the magazine, and the recent changes in the firm, which will be followed next autumn by a change in the name of the magazine to The Century, though the present name will be continued as a sub-title for a year.

The Literary Revolution is prompt with its edition of the Revised Testament. The English edition was put on sale on the morning of May 20th, and at 8.30 p. m., the same day, the American edition was in type, and of the various editions as many as 50,000 copies a day will be manufactured till the demand is met. The prices, in type nearly double the size of the British edition, are as follows: The New Testament complete for 10 cents; the Gospels complete for 7 cents; the Gospels separate, each for 2 cents; and in various forms and styles, up to full Turkey Morocco, gilt edges, for the new and old versions on pages facing for $1.50. For sale by the leading booksellers, or will be sent by mail on receipt of price. Address American Book Exchange, 764 Broadway, New York.

The Idaho Statesman of May 7 says: "The clover fields are ready for the scythe, the grain fields are ankle high, roses are in bloom and apple and peach trees are bowing their limbs with small fruit as large as chestnuts."

Farmers in Central Illinois report Winter wheat suffering from chinch bug and Hessian fly. Thousands of acres are being plowed up to plant corn.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPDEN SS. PROBATE COURT.—To the heirs-at-law, next of kin, and all other persons interested in the estate of Irene Eddy, late of Monson, in said county, deceased, Greeting:

Whereas, a certain instrument purporting to be the last will and testament of said deceased has been presented to said court, for probate, by George Eddy of Ware, in our county of Hampshire, who prays that letters testamentary may be issued to him, the executor therein named,

You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be held at Springfield, in said county of Hampden, on the first Tuesday of June next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, against the same.

And said petitioner is hereby directed to give public notice thereof by publishing this citation once a week, for three successive weeks, in the newspaper called the Palmer Journal, printed at Palmer, the last publication to be two days at least before said court, and to mail a copy of such notice to each of said next of kin who may reside out of this Commonwealth, fourteen days at least before said Court.

Witness, William S. Shurtleff, Esquire, Judge of said court this third day of May, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one.

3w8 SAMUEL B. SPOONER, Register.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPDEN SS. PROBATE COURT.—To the heirs-at-law, next of kin, and all other persons interested in the estate of Chauncy Wood, late of Monson, in said county, deceased, Greeting:

Whereas, a certain instrument, purporting to be the last will and testament of said deceased, has been presented to said court, for probate, by Joshua Tracy of said Monson, who prays that letters of administration, with the will annexed, may be issued to him, the executors named in said will having declined,

You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be held at Springfield, on the first Tuesday of June next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, against the same.

And said petitioner is hereby directed to give public notice thereof, by publishing this citation once a week, for three successive weeks, in the newspaper called the Palmer Journal, printed at Palmer, the last publication to be two days at least before said court.

Witness, William S. Shurtleff, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this tenth day of May, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one.

3w8 SAMUEL B. SPOONER, Register.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPDEN SS. PROBATE COURT.—To all persons interested in the estate of Eunice B. Durkee, late of Palmer, in said county, deceased, Greeting:

Whereas, David E. Tenney, the executor of the will of said deceased, has presented for allowance the second and final account of his administration upon the estate of said deceased,

You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be holden at Springfield, in said county, on the first Tuesday of June next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, why the same should not be allowed. And said executor is ordered to serve this citation by publishing the same once a week, in the Palmer Journal, a newspaper printed at Palmer, three weeks successively, the last publication to be two days at least before said court.

Witness, William S. Shurtleff, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this nineteenth day of May, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one.

3w5 SAMUEL B. SPOONER, Register.

NOTICE is hereby given that the subscriber has been duly appointed executrix of the will of James Whitman, late of Palmer, in the county of Hampden, deceased; and has taken upon herself that trust, by giving bonds as the law directs. All persons having demands upon the estate of said deceased are required to exhibit the same; and all persons indebted to said estate are called upon to make payment to MARY WHITMAN, Executrix.

The Boston Girl.

I told her of a maid whose mind
Was filled with tender thoughts and fancies,
A lovely being of the kind
They write about in old romances.
"Knowest thou," said I, "this maiden fair,
Whose beauty doth my thoughts beguile?"
She answered with a dreamy air—
"Well, I should smile!"

"Her cheeks possess the rose's hue,
No form is daintier or completer,
No hair so brown, no eyes so blue,
No mouth is tenderer or sweeter.
The favored youth who gains the hand
Of this fair girl will ne'er regret it."
With modest grace she added: "And Don't you forget it."

"Oh, thou mistress of my heart!
My angel! let me kneel before thee
And say how heavenly sweet thou art,
And how devoutly I adore thee."
She turned away her lovely head,
And with a languid look that fired
My soul, in murmured accents said—
"You make me tired."

PRACTICAL INFORMATION.

"What is rack rent, dad?" inquired a young Comstocker who had been reading the news from Ireland.

The patient parent laid down the stock list and replied:

"Do you know how much I charge Mr. Boggarty for his room up stairs?"

"Yessir; $12 a month."

"Well, now, suppose Mr. Boggarty should take it into his head to have, at his own expense, new paper put on the wall, the ceiling whitened, and all the furniture mended, the room would look a heap sight prettier, wouldn't it?"

"Lor!" murmured the intelligent boy.

"Well, if the minute Boggarty had got all these improvements made I should go up and look around and smile and jingle the money in my pocket and remark: 'This is a pretty good sort of a layout for a single man, Boggarty, and you have altogether too soft a thing. Your rent will be $20 a month hereafter,' what would you think of it?"

The innocent child giggled and said: "That would be cheek, wouldn't it, dad?"

"Bet your money on it, my boy," replied the father, beaming kindly upon his offspring. "That would be rack-renting Mr. Boggarty, and if he kicked and claimed that all the improvement had been made by him without costing me a cent, and I should fire him out, that would be eviction. I will now," continued the parent, warming up, "briefly review the history of Ireland for the past 700 years. When Brian Borhu—"

But his son had fled.

A walk in the country now-a-days is most delightful. The birds are singing everywhere, and building their nests in convenient trees and thickets, or sitting patiently upon the eggs which are so full of promise; the violets modestly hide in the outskirts of moist woods, and the dandelions gleam like golden buttons upon the emerald-green waistcoat of the meadow; the bell-like note of the jay rings from the tall, secluded pine, and the cheerfully profane exhortation of the plowman to his cattle, half a mile off, comes clearly down the breeze, while all the moist spring air is redolent with the odor of fish guano and superphosphate and ground bones, and other stimulants which man has provided for the excitation of nature.

A new system of weather signals for the benefit of farmers is now being perfected at the signal bureau, Washington, which promises to be of much value, particularly during the harvest season. The plan will be to discharge daily at 3 a. m., at certain railroad stations in farming sections, a red, blue, or green rocket, the color to indicate clear, rainy, or variable weather. The only expense to the government will be the rockets. —Michigan Farmer.

He was making a call and they were talking of literature. "The Pilgrim's Progress," she remarked, "always seems to me painful. Of course you are familiar with Bunyan?" He said he had one on each foot, and they bothered him a good deal.

A singular disease has broken out among the cattle at Ludlow, Vt. Several have died, and many are sick. The lungs of the cattle that have died are found to be dark and honey-combed, and water is found in the brain.

A Chicopee man who wanted a drink but didn't fancy taking it in sight of all who passed on the street, got around the screen law by spreading a large umbrella over his shoulder as he quaffed his liquor.

After supper at a ball—He: "Without joking, Elsie, I do adore you. When I look at you, there is such a commotion in my breast." She: "And in mine too, Henri; it must be the lobster salad!"

People using the new automatic pencils are reminded that the purple lead used is a deadly poison. It is said that a piece one-half the size of a pea will cause the death of a robust man.

"How far is it to Butler if I keep straight on?" "Well, about twenty-five thousand miles, but if you turn the other way, it's about half a mile."

REMEDY FOR HARD TIMES.—Stop spending so much on fine clothes, rich food and style. Buy good, healthy food, cheaper and better clothing; get more real and substantial things of life every way, and especially stop the foolish habit of running after expensive and quack doctors or using so much of the vile humbug medicine that does you only harm, and makes the proprietors rich, but put your trust in the greatest of all simple, pure remedies, Hop Bitters, that cures always at a trifling cost, and you will see better times and good health. Try it once. Read of it in another column. 2w9

Hundreds of men, women and children rescued from beds of pain, sickness and almost death and made strong and hearty by Parker's Ginger Tonic are the best evidences in the world of its sterling worth. You can find these in every community. —Post. See advertisement. 5w6

SIMMONS
Liver Regulator!

ASK the recovered dyspeptics, bilious sufferers, victims of fever and ague, the mercurial diseased patient how they recovered their health, cheerful spirits and good appetite; they will tell you by taking Simmons Liver Regulator.

THE CHEAPEST, PUREST AND BEST FAMILY MEDICINE IN THE WORLD for DYSPEPSIA, CONSTIPATION, Jaundice, Bilious Attacks, SICK HEADACHE, Colic, Depression of Spirits, SOUR STOMACH, Heart Burn, &c., &c.

This unrivaled Southern remedy is warranted not to contain a single particle of Mercury, or any injurious mineral substance, but is containing those Southern roots and herbs, which an All-Wise Providence has placed in countries where Liver Diseases mostly prevail. It will cure all diseases caused by derangement of the Liver and Bowels.

PURELY VEGETABLE,

The SYMPTOMS of Liver Complaint are a bitter or bad taste in the mouth; pain in the back, sides or joints, often mistaken for Rheumatism; SOUR STOMACH; loss of appetite; bowels alternately costive and lax; headache; loss of memory, with a painful sensation of having failed to do something which ought to have been done; debility; low spirits, a thick yellow appearance of the skin and eyes, a dry cough often mistaken for Consumption. Sometimes many of the symptoms attend the disease, at other times very few; but the LIVER, the largest organ in the body, is generally the seat of the disease, and if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and DEATH will ensue.

"I can recommend as an efficacious remedy for disease of the Liver, Heartburn and Dyspepsia, Simmons Liver Regulator.
LEWIS G. WUNDER, Philadelphia."

"We have tested its virtues personally, and know that for Dyspepsia, Biliousness and Throbbing Headache, it is the best medicine the world ever saw. We have tried forty other remedies before Simmons Liver Regulator, but none of them gave us more than temporary relief; but the Regulator not only relieved but cured us."—Ed. Telegraph and Messenger, Macon, Ga.

The Devil.

Men don't believe in a Devil now, as their fathers use to do;
They've forced the door of the broadest creed to let His Majesty through.
There isn't a print of his cloven foot or a fiery dart from his bow
To be found in earth or air to-day, for the world has voted so.

But who is it mixing the fatal draught that palsies heart and brain,
And loads the bier of each passing year with ten hundred thousand slain?
Who blights the bloom of the land to-day with the fiery breath of hell,
If the Devil isn't and never was? Won't somebody rise and tell?

Who dogs the steps of the toiling saint and digs the pit for his feet?
Who sows the tares in the fields of time wherever God sows his wheat?
The Devil is voted not to be, and, of course, the thing is true;
But who is doing the kind of work the Devil alone should do?

We are told he does not go about as a roaring lion now;
But whom shall we hold responsible for the everlasting row
To be heard in home, in church and state, to the earth's remotest bound,
If the devil by a unanimous vote is nowhere to be found?

Won't somebody step to the front forthwith, and make their bow and show
How the frauds and the crimes of a single day spring up? We want to know.
The Devil was fairly voted out, and, of course, the Devil's gone;
But simple people would like to know who carries his business on. —Independent.

IN A QUICKSAND.

It is now quite a number of years since two old hunters, Buck Stradling and Tom Snuffle, were hunting with me in the western part of Texas, just south of the famous Llano Estacada. We had gone into the interior more for sport than anything else, caring very little whether we secured more game than answered for our immediate wants or not.

Penetrating still further and further toward the Mexican frontier, we finally struck a barren, parched country, upon which we entered with some hesitation.

"This looks as though we shan't find any water," I remarked, as we reined up our horses and took a survey of the arid plain.

"Does look rather skeery," replied Stradling, taking his short, black pipe from his mouth, "but I guess we'll try it. It'll make a sort of variety to this eternal tramping."

"But what will we do without water?" I asked.

"Why, you see, there is water four or five miles back of us; so we can go ahead for a day, and, if we can't find anything, why we can turn 'round and make back tracks. It'll go rather rough, but it won't hurt us. My idea," continued the trapper, growing philosophical, "is that we don't know what water is till we've gone two or three days without it, just as the only way to get a good, sound refreshing sleep is to sit up for a couple of nights."

So it was concluded that we should venture upon this unknown Sahara; and giving rein to our horses, we struck off upon an easy gallop.

We saw nothing of buffalo or deer, and more than once I questioned the prudence of the step; but as we were actuated somewhat by curiosity, I said nothing, and we pressed forward.

We had an abundance of dried meat, which, no doubt, would last us all the time necessary. Now and then we got sight of an antelope; but they were very shy, and kept at a distance that placed them beyond all danger of our guns.

As we were riding along, and had come to the conclusion that it would be impossible to secure any game, I was sure I discerned a pair of antlers beyond a swell in the prairie, and declared as much to my companions; but they only laughed at me, and told me to give up the foolish thought. I was certain, however, that I had seen the animal, and as there was a chance to secure something palatable for supper, I assured them that I would do so. They told me to go ahead, while they reined their animals down to a walk and pursued their way more leisurely.

However, the antelope were a thousand feet distant, upon a smooth, grassy slope. There was not the slightest covering to protect an approach, and I began to debate the best course to pursue. Should I imitate the call of one of their number in distress? There was something so inhuman in that that I revolted at the thought, and took the consolation that no true hunter would descend to such meanness. Should I tie my red handkerchief upon my ramrod, and take advantage of their curiosity? They were too shy.

Ah! an idea struck me. My eye suddenly rested upon a bluish line running across the prairie beyond where the animals were feeding. It was either a buffalo road or the channel of an arrayo; but whichever it was, it was the very cover I wanted, and I determined to take immediate advantage of it.

Retreating from the thicket as stealthily as I had entered it, I hurried along the slope to a point where I had observed that the ridge was depressed to the level of the plain. Reaching this, to my still greater surprise I found myself on the banks of a small arrayo, whose water slowly meandered over a bed of sand and gypsum. The banks were two or three feet above the surface of the stream, except where the ridge came down upon the stream. Here was quite a high bluff, and, hurrying around its base, I stepped into the channel and commenced wading upwards.

This was quite a difficult feat, as the bed of the creek was soft and yielding, and I was obliged to tread very cautiously and slowly, lest I should alarm the game. The antelope is the most timid of animals, and has a wonderfully acute sense of hearing—so much so that none but the experienced hunters can approach him.

After creeping along in this wearisome manner for several hundred yards, I reached a small clump of wormwood bushes growing out on the bank. Thinking this might be high enough to answer for cover, I slowly raised myself up and peered through the leaves. I had just the right place, and, sighting the heart of the buck, I pulled the trigger. The animal sprang up and dropped dead. I was on the point of running forward to claim the prize, when I saw the doe run up to its fallen mate and sniff at it as if bewildered at the occurrence. Suddenly she seemed to comprehend the sad truth, and, throwing back her head, began to utter the most plaintive and piteous cries, while she occasionally ran round the body as if totally unable to control her grief.

As I watched the mournful actions of the doe, and heard its piteous cries, I saw that it would be a mercy to kill it and end its misery. Actuated by what was perhaps a questionable humanity, I took a careful aim, pulled the trigger, and, as the smoke cleared away, I discovered the doe lying with its head resting upon its departed mate.

"Both are out of distress," was my comfortable reflection, "and I have secured a rare supper, with which I will tickle the palates of my two friends, and convince them that they are not the only ones who have a knowledge of hunting—but what is the meaning of this?"

I attempted to move, and found both feet fast. My first thought was that I had been stricken with paralysis, and a chill ran over me from head to foot. But no; I could feel the blood coursing to the remotest part of my system, and I tugged like a giant. I tried to step, twisted to the right and left, wrenched my body, but all in vain—I was fast.

Suddenly the truth flashed upon me—I was sinking in a quicksand!

With this knowledge came a fierce resolve not to succumb. I would wrench off my feet before I would die in this inglorious and dreadful manner. Summoning all the strength of which I was the master, I tugged and pulled and twisted with the fury of madness, and then paused, exhausted, and found the only result was that I had sunk several inches deeper in the quicksand. The soft, clinging sand was already at the top of my boots and had wedged them around my ankles so that it was impossible to pull them off. All the time I could feel myself sinking slowly and surely, as though some monster, deep in the bowels of the earth, had grasped me by the feet and was gradually drawing me under.

Almost beside myself with terror, I shouted for help, and then laughed loudly at the idea of my voice reaching any one. I was miles away from any person. The only living creature within my hearing was my horse, and he answered me with a neigh, as if sympathizing with me in my despair.

And now I tried to think coolly upon my position. Was there no possible way of extricating myself? Stay! Suppose I should lay my rifle horizontally across the sand, would it not prevent my sinking? Perhaps so; at least I could try it.

I looked around for my gun, but nothing of it was to be seen. That, too, alas! had sunk beneath the surface. Could I dig my way out? No; the sand streamed into the hollow as often as I tore it out with my frenzied fingers.

Such, and similar, were the thoughts that coursed through my seething brain. I raised my eyes to Heaven, and almost expected to see a frown of divine anger for the part I had taken. But no; the sun was shining as bright and the sky was as cerulean and mild as before. No; whatever transgressions I had committed, I knew there was nothing but forgiveness and love bending over me, and I prayed as only sinful men can pray when encompassed by certain death.

But all the time I was sinking—sinking slowly but surely, and the moment could not be far distant when I should be swallowed up and disappear from view entirely, and those who would come to search for me could only surmise my fate.

Could I not lie flat on my back, and thus stay my downward course? The thought was dismissed the moment it came to me. The water was eighteen inches deep, and I should drown at once. Oh, heavens! dying by this slow torturing process. The thought drove me mad for the time.

After a while I became cool again. If I must die I must; and I aroused myself to meet it manfully. I stood erect and found that my head had sunk to the prairie level, and I could just see the victims of my heartlessness. My heart reproached me at the sight. Was this not a just retribution for the misery I had inflicted? What right had I to shoot those poor innocent creatures who had never harmed me? Was it not the final adjustment of justice that I should be made to feel and suffer the same pangs that I had inflicted upon them?

I had taken my last fond look upon the green, fair earth. I could only see the blue, clayey wall which held the stream, and the water which ran unheeding by me. Again I looked up at the blue, sweet sky, and then endeavored to resign myself to my fate. But I could not; the memories of the fair earth and my past pleasures and friends came so vividly over me that I found myself continually bursting into struggling spasms to escape, but all equally fruitless as were the first feeble attempts to walk.

In the midst of this racking suspense I was startled by the shrill neighing of my horse. At first this gave me indescribable distress, as I could not avoid contrasting his free situation with my own. But suddenly a bright thought flashed over me. Could not my horse rescue me?

He was tied to a frail cactus limb that he could easily break if he chose. Without losing time—for time was never so precious—I uttered a call which I had often used to bring him to me; then listened with an anxiety which it is useless for me to attempt to depict. Suddenly I heard the sound of his hoofs, as though he were struggling to free himself, and the next moment I recognized his well-known tramp, and knew that he was approaching. Then he suddenly appeared on the bank, and, looking down at me, uttered a joyful neigh of recognition.

Peculiar attachment exists between the hunter and his horse, and it was a habit of his, whenever I called to him to gallop up to me and press his nose against my cheek. Reaching out my hands toward him, in my usual caressing manner, I repeated the call. The next moment he bounded down into the channel and I caught him by the bridle. Time was becoming fearfully precious. I was already down to my waist in the water. I seized the lariat, and passing it under the saddle girths, secured it in a firm knot. I then made a loop and passed it around my body.

Heaven bless the noble horse! The tears swell to my eyes when I reflect upon the grand creature to whom a few years ago I gave an honorable grave in the broad prairie. All the time I believe he comprehended my sore strait, and understood perfectly what was required of him. He knew, too, the treacherous nature of the ground upon which he stood, for while waiting he continued lifting his feet and slightly changing his position to prevent his sinking. Finally I had my arrangements completed, and I gave the word to the horse to move. The intelligent animal stepped off slowly, pulling gradually, but with all his tremendous strength. To my inexpressible joy I felt my body rising, and in less than a minute I was pulled out of the sand on the hard, clayey bank. Thank Heaven and my true, tried, noble horse!

I threw my arms around his neck and kissed him, and shouted for joy. And had I not a right to do so? And did I do more than my duty when I refused all offers to part with him, and kept him with all the care and kindness that I would have used to nurse a feeble parent?

THE SAME OLD ROUND.

"Could I see the editor?" she asked, looking around for him, and wondering what was going on under the table.

"Eh! yes, I'm him," responded the editor, evolving himself and slipping a cork into his vest pocket. "What can I do for you?"

"I'm a student at Packer's Institute," responded the blushing damsel, "and I have written a little article on 'Our School Days' which I would like to have published in the Brooklyn Eagle, if you think it good enough."

"Certainly," replied the editor, gazing in unconscious admiration upon the beautiful face before him. "Does it commence, 'Our school days! how the words linger in sweet cadence on the strings of memory!' Is that the way it runs?"

"Why, yes," responded the beaming girl. "Then it goes on 'How we look foward from them to the time when we shall look back to them!' How did you know?"

"Never mind," said the editor, with the engaging smile which has endeared him to the citizens of Brooklyn. "After that comes, 'So sunshiny! So gilded with the pleasures that make youth happy, they have flown into the immutable past and come to us in after life only as echoes in the caves of sweet recollection!' Isn't that it?"

"It certainly is," answered the astonished girl, radiant wtth delight. "How could you know what I had written?"

"Then it changes from the pianissimo and becomes more tender: 'The shadows gather around our path. The roses of friendship are withering, but may we not hope that they will bloom again as we remember the affection that bound us here and made—'"

"No, you're wrong there," and the soft eyes looked disappointed.

"Is it 'Hope on, hope ever?' asked the editor.

"That comes in further on. You had it nearly right. It is, 'The dun shadows close around us. The flowers of friendship are sleeping, but not withered, and will bloom again in the affectionate remembrance of the chains that bound us so lightly.'"

"Strange that I should have made that mistake," said the editor musingly. "I never missed on one before. From there it goes, 'Schoolmates, let us live so that all our days shall be as radiant as those we have known here, and may we pluck happiness from every bush, forgetting never that the thorns are below the roses, and pitying those whose hands are bruised in the march through life."

"That's it!" exclaimed the delighted girl, "And then comes 'Hope on, hope ever.'"

"Sure's you're born!" cried the editor, blushing with pleasure, and once more on the right track. "Then it runs, 'And as for you teachers dear!'"

"Yes, yes, you're right," giggled the girl. "I can't see how you found me out. Would you like to print it?" and her face assumed an anxious shade.

"Certainly," responded the editor. "I'll say it's by the most promising young lady in Brooklyn, the daughter of an estimable citizen, and a lady who has already taken a high social rank!"

"That finishes the school commencements at one swoop," sighed the editor gloomily, as the fair vision floated out. "Can't see how I made that blunder about the shadows and roses and friendship. Either I'm getting old or some of these girls have struck out something original. Here, Swipes, tell the foreman to put this slush in the next tax sales supplement," and the editor felt in his hair for the cork, and wondered what had happened to his memory.—Brooklyn Eagle.

THE APPROACH OF AN EARTHQUAKE.

An Italian writer on the recent catastrophe on the island of Ischia mentions those prognostics of an earthquake which are derived from animals. They were observed in every place where the shocks were such as to be generally perceptible. Some minutes before they were felt the oxen and cows began to bellow, the sheep and goats bleated, and rushing in confusion one on the other, tried to break the wicker work of the folds; the dogs howled terribly, the geese and fowls were alarmed and made much noise; the horses which were fastened in their stalls were greatly agitated, leaped up, and tried to break the halters with which they were attached to the mangers; those which were proceeding on the roads suddenly stopped, and snorted in a very strange way. The cats were frightened, and tried to conceal themselves, or their hair bristled up wildly. Rabbits and moles were seen to leave their holes; birds rose, as if scared, from the places on which they alighted; and fish left the bottom of the sea and approached the shores, where at some places great numbers of them were taken. Even ants and reptiles abandoned, in clear daylight, their subterranean holes in great disorder, many hours before the shocks were felt. Some dogs, a few minutes before the first shock took place, awoke their sleeping masters by barking and pulling them, as if they wished to warn them of the impending danger, and several persons were thus enabled to save themselves.

THE PROFITS OF THE REVISED TESTAMENT.

The question has been asked again and again, Where do the profits of sales of the revised New Testament go? There is no Bible society or missionary association to profit thereby, but after paying expenses, which by the British committee are given as $100,000 for work done thus far on both testaments, all other profits go to the University Press publishers, who at the outset in lieu of the copyright guaranteed all the expenses to the revisers then. The American committee, however, do not receive and will not get one cent. Their expenses, not for labor, but for travel, correspondence, stationery, &c., have been paid by private subscriptions up to this time. The profits must be very great if the Oxford publishers have already sold, as reported, 2,000,000 copies. But this number includes the 500,000 sent to this country. The different styles are sold cheaper in the United States than they are in England, Canada and the colonies because of the lack of international copyright here. For example, the very popular twenty cent edition sold here in New York sells in London and Quebec for twenty-five or thirty cents, and the higher priced copies are proportionally increased.—New York Herald.

Old as the hills: The valleys between them.

Summer.

There came a whisper through the wind-blown leaves,
That stirred in music underneath the eaves,
And fluttering breeze and fluttering foliage seemed
To waft my thoughts to dreamland as I dreamed
Of Summer.

There came a flood of light, a flush of bloom,
And roses scattered petals of perfume;
And wings of birds and echoes of their song
Bore every thought in cadence sweet along
To Summer.

There flamed in splendor fierce a fervent sun,
And sweet May paled and sighed, "My life is done;
To you, O, Sister June, be all I lose
And all I fain would gain, if I might choose
For Summer!"

There stood in meadow-grasses, ankle-deep,
One who awakened from her maiden sleep,
And waking turned to me with smile divine,
And, blushing, let her hand-clasp close to mine
In Summer.

And all the golden sunlight rained its gold
On tresses bright as any ray they hold,
And all the fervent splendor of the day
Wore fairer splendor than in sky and ray
Of Summer.

For what is earth if love be not our day?
And what is love if love care not to stay?
And, staying, seal our hearts in dreamless rest?
And resting thus, who dreams and is not blest
In Summer?

LEMONADE.

There is no more wholesome, refreshing and grateful beverage for family use, or as an offering to a friendly visitor, than a glass of lemonade. A little forethought and labor at the proper season will enable one to have it ready to serve the whole year round.

It has been the practice in my family to make up a whole box of lemons, with the requisite number of oranges, into lemon syrup; and so we have a full twelve months' supply for visitors, and to send to invalid neighbors and friends.

The best lemons come to us from Florida, and the next in quality from Palermo, in Sicily. Choose those having a thin, smooth skin, in preference to thick, rough-skinned ones, which are almost sure to be spongy and dry. It is advised to select from those that have never been unwrapt; and, after making choice of the best, to wash them slightly in cold water, wipe dry with a soft cloth, again wrap in clean, soft paper and keep in a cool, dry place. This treatment removes any stale flavor communicated by decaying fruit or the odor of the box.

The best oranges for this purpose are those from Jamaica, and next the Floridas. Buy them like the lemons, in their original wrappers; wash and repack them in like manner.

The materials and proportions of syrup are as follows: For three pints of lemon juice, one pint of orange juice and six pounds of fine white lump or granulated sugar. This will require about three dozen lemons, and half a dozen oranges, both of the largest size.

Pare the fruit, scrape off all the inner white rind down to the pulp. Cut them in half, pick out all the seeds, squeeze out the juice with a wooden squeezer, not a metallic one, strain it as finely as possible through a flannel jelly-bag, and then measure it and add the proper amount of sugar, three pounds to each quart of the mixed juices. Stir until it is a perfectly clear syrup, pour into bottles, filling them to the brim and set in a cool place till next day. With a sponge or soft cloth remove all the froth and scum, again fill up, and keep in a cool dark cellar or vault.

Thus made the syrup will retain its freshness any length of time.

This may seem a needless amount of labor, but it is amply repaid by the superior yield and quality of the syrup. The seeds are quite bitter, and if they are crushed in the squeezer or remain a short time in the expressed juice, they impart their bitter flavor to it. So of the peel; if the fruit is pressed without removing it, the juice is embittered by it; moreover it absorbs a portion of the juice and so causes waste. Lastly, the oil of the peel tends to cause fermentation in the syrup and prevents its keeping.

WHAT A NARROW FOOT DID.

A young lady took a car which brought her to the foot of California street and there took a seat on the dummy car, which bore her to the vicinity of her home on Octave street. As she left the car and was crossing the track upon the southern side her foot slipped and turned and was caught fast in the crack where the wire-cable passes. Some imperfection in the roadbed had caused the narrow aperture to expand, and the young girl's narrow foot was entrapped. The engineer of the east-bound dummy saw the obstacle on the road in season to check his swift approaching car and alighted with the conductor and several passengers of investigating mind, who endeavored to release the slender foot, but their efforts were vain. Another car and another brought up in funeral row, and constant reinforcements in the way of passing pedestrians cheered and enlivened the scene. An attempt was made to pry the iron rails forming the cable channel further apart, but they firmly resisted all efforts. Everybody had a suggestion. "Push your foot forward;" "Pull it back;" "Tip sideways;" "Lift your heel higher." The unhappy girl was almost fainting, but she persevered in her efforts to extricate the offending member. By this time travel on the road had virtually ceased. The last car had long ago passed, and was steadily approaching to fall into line at the rear of the singular procession. Down-town passengers fretted and fumed or slowly climbed the hill in disgust. On every street corner groups of waiting people berated the laxity of street-car management. Reporters from all the down-town dailies were proceeding westward to learn the meaning of the large crowd reported to have assembled in the western addition. From the scene of the accident envoys had been despatched to the railroad shops to bring appliances for taking up a section of the road. At this juncture a tall, brawny Englishman, in the dress of a mechanic, forced his way through the throng, and in a cheery voice, marked by the Derbyshire dialect, asked: "Ha' ye tried onfastenin' the young leddy's shoe?" Ten buttons flew from as many buttonholes; in the twinkling of an eye the foot was free.—San Francisco Chronicle.

"Can I give my son a college education at home?" asks a fond parent. Well, you may be able to teach him as much of Greek and Latin and mathematics as the college could; but you can never so thoroughly imbue him with the idea that everybody else is a blamed fool.

TO SMALL INVESTORS.

You have a little money laid up; say $500; you are questioning what to do with it. We do not propose to tell you, but we propose to give you general principles which may aid you in coming to a wise decision.

You may do one of three things with it; you may hoard it; you may invest it; or you may speculate with it. You may put it in a strong box and put the box in your safe or in that of a safe deposit company; in which case at the end of twenty years your $500 will not have gained a single dollar. It would be like the talent which the unprofitable servant hid in a napkin. You may buy five acres of land with it, and begin to cultivate them; in which case, if you buy wisely and cultivate skillfully and industriously, at the end of five years your five hundred dollars will have become a thousand. Or you may buy a thousand bushels of oats at fifty cents a bushel, in the expectation that oats are going to be higher next week, leave them at the mill or in the storehouse for a fortnight, and at the end of that time sell them to some one at sixty cents or forty cents a bushel; in which case you make or lose according as the market happens to rise or fall. In the first case you simply attempt to keep your money; in the second you attempt to set it to useful work; in the third you simply use it to get money out of your neighbor's pocket. To hoard money is simply to put it where it will be safe; to invest money is to put it where you think it will be useful; to speculate with money is simply to make a stake of it with a fellow gambler; the whole to be lost or won on the turn of the dice or the shift of the market.

Now you ought to have a clear and definite understanding of what you want to do with your money; do you want to hoard it, to invest it, or to speculate with it?

If you want to speculate with it we have no advice to give you. The sooner you lose it the better; and it probably will not be long. An amateur gambler who attempts to beat a faro bank is cautious in comparison with an amateur speculator who imagines he can send his $500 to Wall street and make it take $500 out of the pockets of men whose life is devoted to studying the market, and whose whole earnings are made by plucking amateur speculators.—Christian Union.

HOW DO YOU KEEP YOUR ROOM?—A look into the chamber of a boy or girl will give one an idea of what kind of a man or woman he or she will probaly become. A boy who keeps his clothes hung up neatly, or a girl whose room is clean always, will be very apt to make a successful man or woman. Order and neatness are essential to our comfort as well as to that of others about us. A boy who throws down his cap or boots anywhere will never keep his accounts in shape, will do things in a slovenly, careless way, and not be long wanted in any position. A girl who does not make her bed till after dinner, (and she should always make it herself rather than have a servant do it), and throws her dress or bonnet down in a chair, will make a poor wife in nine cases out of ten. If the world could see how a girl keeps her dressing-room, some unhappy marriages would be saved.

It sounds ridiculous, and is going to look odd in print, but you who dare, try it. Strip a solid head of cabbage to the blanched leaves, cut it in quarters, almost through the core, and steam still tender. Three or four tasteless wood-splinters across the bottom of the kettle will keep it out of the water. When nearly done, lift the cabbage into an earthen baking dish, of suitable size, cut it small, pour on the top of a pan of milk, with salt to taste, and bake an hour. A little bread or cracker dust will help make a brown crust, but the inside should be served rather milky or be stiffened with crumbs of pilot bread, as you like it.—Hartford Courant.

People who are alarmed by the approaching conjunction of several of the planets should read the following note written by Prof. Young of Princeton College to a Nebraska inquirer: "Dear Sir: It is true that Saturn, Jupiter and Venus are near conjunction and T. near its perihelion. But they have no influence whatever of any sort on the earth. The nonsense talked about the matter is worthy of the dark ages. Two tom cats fighting in the streets of Pekin will disturb the world more than all imaginable planetary conjunctions. C. A. Young."

There is a pleasant story of a rebuke once administered by Admiral Farragut in a most neat and decorous, but very effective manner, to a tobacco-smoking bishop. At dinner with Farragut, and after the meal was over, the bishop, about to select a cigar, offered the bunch to the sailor. "Have a cigar, Admiral?" said he. "No, Bishop," said the Admiral, with a quizzical glance, "I don't smoke—I swear a little, sometimes."

A preacher, not far from Boston, found himself at one time in a sad dilemma. He stopped in his sermon and said: "If I speak softly, those of you who are in the rear cannot hear; if I speak loudly, I shall certainly wake up those who are close to me."

A prominent dry-goods merchant in Boston worked half an hour on the following proposition, and failed to give an answer: "If four men build a stone wall in nine days, how long will it take five men to build a like wall in six days?"

"If I were as hard up as you are," remarked one citizen to another, "I'd get out of it some way, if I had to beg or steal." "What, I beg? I steal?" exclaimed the other, indignantly, "I'd sooner— sooner get trusted!"

The Journal.

SATURDAY, JUNE 4, 1881.

THE coal magnates have agreed to restrict production, working only every other week on full time, while the prices are also to be advanced.

EX-PRESIDENT HAYES characterizes ex-Senator Conkling as a "monomaniac on the subject of his own importance." Mr. Hayes seems to hit the nail squarely on the head.

THE Virginia Readjusters began their State Convention at Richmond on Thursday. Mahone's course at Washington was enthusiastically indorsed, and it is quite possible that he will be nominated for Governor.

WHEN the Vice President of the United States descends to the work of a button-holing politician, he forfeits his self-respect, disgraces his high office, and is deserving of the contempt of every American citizen. And yet that is just what Vice President Arthur has been doing for the past fortnight, in his servile work for Conkling.

GOV. LONG and his council on Tuesday commuted the sentence of Stearns K. Abbott, the supposed murderer of Mrs. Crue, from death to imprisonment for life. Abbott's conviction that he would not be hanged therefore proves true, though it was a narrow escape for him. In view of the evidence recently brought to light a new trial will be moved before long, and it will not be strange if Abbott eventually goes free.

EX-LIEUT. GOV. KNIGHT of Easthampton has acknowledged before the Payson church that he had given cause by his conduct for the scandal that has been current concerning his relations with a young woman in that place, though he asserts that his motives were only good. He asked forgiveness of the church, and promised to avoid all cause for a revival of the scandal in the future, and the church will therefore pursue the investigation no further.

INCREASED interest in the world's fair project was manifested at the adjourned meeting in Boston Wednesday evening, which was attended by some 300 men, but it was the sentiment of the meeting to go slow, and not rush blindly into the affair, with a prospect of coming out as flat as the proposed fair in New York did. Another and larger committee of picked men was accordingly appointed to further consider the matter and report at a meeting next week.

REPORTS are current that the New York & New England Railroad has been leased by the New York, New Haven & Hartford company. Nothing definite is known about it yet, but it would not be surprising if the Boston & Albany should find itself rather out in the cold on its New York business, some day, by such an arrangement. The New England managers lose no opportunity to increase the business of their road, and President Bliss will do well to keep a sharp eye on them.

THERE is no demand for the standard silver dollars, all that have been coined since January remaining in the treasury, while some that were then in circulation have found their way back into the vaults. But their coinage goes steadily on, at the rate of $2,000,000 a month, according to law, and additional storage room will soon be needed for them. When will Congress have sense enough to repeal the law making their coinage compulsory? There are enough of them already made to last until the "crack of doom."

CONKLING'S defeat is complete and humiliating. He went to Albany undoubtedly believing that he could secure a re-election by a large vote, which would be an ample "vindication" of his course, and return him to Washington with implied authority to make bitter war upon the administration. But he made a pitiable showing when the test came on Tuesday, receiving but 35 votes, or less than a third of the total Republican vote, while Platt received but 29. Wednesday saw no change in the vote, but on Thursday two ballots were taken, and Conkling's vote dropped to 33 on the second one. It is plain that Conkling and Platt have no chance of a reelection, but it is not clear yet who is to succeed them. The administration vote is divided among a number of candidates. Strong efforts are being made for a concentration of their votes, however, and Gov. Cornell and Chauncey M. Depew are now considered the most promising candidates.

JUDGE MATTHEWS, who was recently appointed a justice of the United States Supreme Court, has, in his first decision, pleasantly disappointed those who feared that he would be inclined to favor monopolies rather than the people. Singularly enough, the first case coming before him in his circuit involved the interests of railroads. The Standard Oil Company, one of the worst of monopolies, has compelled several lines of railroad to charge other oil producers $2 a barrel for transportation, while its own was carried for a low rate. Steamboats on the Ohio and some other rivers offered to take the oil for 50 cents a barrel, but were debarred by a United States law, which forbids passenger boats carrying oil when other routes are practicable. Judge Matthews decided that the rail routes were made impracticable by their exorbitant charges, and that steamboats could therefore lawfully carry oil. This decision will be quite a lift to the small producers which the Standard monopoly is trying to crush.

The Hudson River Tunnel at New York is progressing favorably. The south tunnel is now out 450 feet under the river, and the north tunnel about 360 feet. It is expected that the tunnel will be finished, ready for travel, by the summer of 1883.

LOCAL NOTICES.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

Whit-Sunday to-morrow.

Showers come easily now-a-days.

Read the selectmen's notice in another column.

Just one month, now, to the "glorious Fourth."

New cheese is now in market, at 15 cents per pound.

June is giving us a good many changes in the weather.

E. Brown's house has been brightened externally by the painters.

The schools will close for their summer vacation next week Friday.

Elder M. A. Potter of Worcester will preach at the Advent chapel Sunday.

Rev. F. A. Bisbee of Spencer will preach at St. Paul's church on Sunday.

A new wooden awning has been put up in front of F. C. Hatch's fish market.

The new fence on the side of the agricultural park adjoining the highway is about completed.

The Whitcomb California excursionists passed through here on their way home Wednesday morning.

The ball game on the park Monday afternoon resulted in a score of 12 to 5 in favor of the carpet mill nine.

The band gave an out-door concert Wednesday evening, which was duly appreciated. Why can't we have one oftener?

Mount Toby will have an additional attraction for excursionists this summer, in the shape of a new "Summit House."

The lady anxiliary visitors of the State Primary School will hold a meeting at the institution next week Friday, at noon.

A couple of fellows with a violin picked up a little loose change by songs and dances on the hay scales Wednesday evening.

The new uniform of the Boston & Albany brakemen consists of a white cap, blue blouse and pants, and black belt around the waist.

Fosket's Mills are now connected with this place by telephone, and parties in Brimfield are talking of having the line extended to that village.

Frank I. Davis has resigned his position as clerk in Park's store, to take effect about the first of July, and will be succeeded by J. G. Tuttle.

The Summer time table will go into effect on the Boston & Albany Railroad next Monday, with but little change from the present running of trains.

There was a large attendance at the strawberry and ice cream festival at St. Paul's church Wednesday evening, and the ladies cleared about $60.

J. H. Gamwell has laid about 550 feet of 1½ inch water pipe in Pleasant street this week, in place of some iron pipe which had become badly clogged with rust.

The Eastern Hampden Agricultural Society has its premium list out for its 29th annual exhibition, which will be held on Tuesday and Wednesday, Sept. 20 and 21.

Old fruit cans, with the tops and bottoms removed, and cut in two once each way, are just the thing to put around tomato vines, to prevent the depredations of the cut worms.

It is pretty generally agreed that the new color chosen for the Boston & Albany passenger cars is about as devoid of attractiveness and beauty as anything that could have been selected.

Secretary O. P. Allen of the agricultural society has about 50 copies of the annual report of the State Board of Agriculture on hand, for distribution among such members of the society as care for them.

The district court on Monday found J. P. Murphy guilty of illegally selling liquor to a minor, but Murphy appealed to the December term of the superior court, and it is understood that the selectmen have renewed his license.

The "Stand-bys" beat the high school nine 17 to 8 in a base ball game on the park Thursday afternoon. This afternoon, at 2.30 o'clock, the high school boys will try their luck with the carpet mill nine, on the same grounds.

Monday night's shower caused quite a washout on the Ware River Railroad between Gilbertville and Hardwick, some 20 to 30 feet in length and 17 feet deep, and the trains had to carry by all day. The damage was repaired early in the evening.

Beginning with next Monday Conductor Downer's afternoon train south will leave Palmer at 1.45 instead of 1.56 as at present. Conductor Sanders will leave New London five minutes later than now, but will reach this place at the same time.

The shower Wednesday evening cooled off the air a number of degrees, giving us a deliciously comfortable atmosphere on Thursday; but yesterday's damp and chilly air was a little too cool for comfort, and sent shivers over those who were dressed only for Summer warmth.

Our village improvement society does not make much noise, but is supposed to be doing something in a quiet way, which will make itself known in due time. The regular monthly meeting of the executive committee will be held at the house of Conductor Sanders next Monday evening.

J. T. Bostock of Milford assumed charge of the Boston & Albany ticket office at this station on Wednesday, in place of Agent Adams, resigned. F. E. Pettengill, who goes to Milford, is succeeded as freight clerk by J. H. Galleher, formerly of this place, but who has for some time been in the freight office at Norwich, Ct.

F. A. Luce, formerly a clerk in A. H. Willis's dry goods store, but now of Chicago, where for two years he has had charge of a branch salesroom of the Skinner silk company, has been back in the old Bay State this week for the purpose of taking back with him a life-partner, as will be seen from our matrimonial items.

Vennor predicts a wet June, with frequent severe wind and thunder storms, and probable frosts between the 5th and 10th of the month. He says: "The 'north waters' are only coming down now, which is an indication of a wet June. The warmest part of June is likely to occur between the 20th and 25th, when the heat may be excessive."

A few of the members of our sportsmen's club tried their skill at breaking glass balls Decoration day, some of them making scores of 29 out of 30, the balls sprung from a Holden trap, and they would like to hear from clubs making a better record. In the match between Will Keith and F. C. Hatch, the latter was victorious, breaking 19 out of 20, to 10 for Keith.

North Main street has been turnpiked this week. The new scraper has now been pretty well over the town roads, doing the work of several men in a much more satisfactory manner than it could have been done in the old way. Now if some of the sandy roads could be hardened, a beginning would be made towards a permanent improvement in the highways which would be of great value.

A grand bazar will be held in Wales Hall, for the benefit of St Thomas' catholic church in this village, commencing Monday evening, June 20th, and continuing four nights. On the opening night a cantata will be presented by the children of the Sunday school, under the direction of Miss Carberry of Worcester, who has been so successful in training children for entertainments in Monson and other towns. There will also be vocal and instrumental music by members of the choir and talent from abroad.

The experiences of one of our bicylists have been graphically portrayed upon canvas (said canvas consisting of a generous slice of tin) by a sympathizing and artistic friend, and the picture has been on exhibition this week, calling out many expressions of admiration from his numerous acquaintances. The picture will probably be framed before long and hung up in one of the Boston & Albany mail cars. Its story is told in the following touching verse:

"'Twas a young man from Palmer who tried
On a bicycle lofty to ride,
But a stone in the road
Upset the whole load,
And the poor fellow like to have died."

Memorial day was observed in this place by a general closing of the places of business in the afternoon. There was a ball game on the park, and some of the sportsmen tried their luck at glass ball shooting, but no attempt was made at any special observance of the day. Palmer is not much given to the ceremonious observance of holidays, but it would be well if this day, at least, could be marked by a public gathering and one or more addresses, to keep alive the memory of the departed heroes, and cultivate the patriotism of the rising generation by a review of the glorious work accomplished by them.

There was a pleasant and notable gathering at the house of Mr. Rhodes last week Wednesday, to celebrate the 72d birthday of Mrs. Rhodes's mother, Mrs. Elisha Brown. Mrs. Brown's four sisters were present, with their children, making a party of 27, and representing four generations, the oldest being 81, and the youngest 1 year old. The names and ages of Mrs. Brown's sisters are as follows: Mrs. S. Severy, of Oxford, 81; Mrs. A. Williams, of Woonsocket, R. I., 75; Mrs. J. Fuller, Hartford, 66; Mrs. C. Putnam, Webster, 62; all but the last named being widows. The united ages of the five sisters are 356 years, and all are in the enjoyment of good health.

WILBRAHAM.

Henry Burbank found a nest of 26 Indian arrow heads on his father's farm a few days ago, while planting corn.

WEST WARREN.

A. P. Adams, who has been an overseer in the spinning room of the Warren mills for nearly 10 years, has accepted a similar position in the mill at Thorndike.

THREE RIVERS.

The ladies of the Baptist society will have a strawberry and ice cream festival next Friday evening.

The Chapter of the Golden Rule Alliance is now well under way. They will have a strawberry and ice cream festival, with patriotic music, on Friday evening, June 17th.

INDIAN ORCHARD.

A Legion of Honor is to be organized here.

The Chapman Valve Mfg. Co. have purchased land south of their grounds, measuring in length 250 feet.

C. J. Eaton has resigned his commission as postmaster, and Dr. E. D. Chapman and W. B. Morse, the Main street druggists, and D. P. Woolson, are the active candidates for the vacancy.

HAMPDEN.

H. M. Sessions having sold his farm to A. C. Burleigh, will dispose of his stock and other personal property next Wednesday, at auction.

The meeting on Wednesday to consider the question of starting a creamery was attended by about 50 farmers, who pledged the milk from 142 cows. About 200 will be needed, and a committee was appointed to obtain further pledges, and report at an adjourned meeting in the Methodist church next Thursday. An effort will also be made to secure a capital stock of $2000 in $25 shares.

WALES.

The Baptists and Methodists held ice cream and strawberry festivals at their vestries on Wednesday evening, having a good attendance.

L. Pratt hired Wm. Parker's team Monday to go to Warren. On returning late at night, the horse slipped and fell on the railroad track in Warren, only a few rods in front of an approaching train. Having no time to get him up, he seized the horse by the head and dragged him off the track, but not in time to save the wagon, which was badly smashed, while Mr. Pratt and the horse were thrown several feet, as the horse was still hitched to the wagon.

WARREN.

The new school house is to be built on Maple street, just south of the cemetery.

A man from Wales had his buggy badly smashed by a train of cars Monday night.

The Methodists have secured a building lot on Main street, between H. Burbank's and Ed. Fairbank's.

Memorial Day was observed by a general suspension of business, decoration of graves, and an address in the afternoon, with a festival in the evening by the Grand Army.

The meeting of the woman's board at the Congregational church Thursday was a very pleasant gathering. The children from the Sabbath school listened to an address from Mrs. Harding in the afternoon.

BRIMFIELD.

Jonathan P. Webber has been drawn as juror for the June term of the Superior Court.

On Wednesday evening the ladies' union of the Second Congregational church had a strawberry festival at the town hall, which was well patronized.

Capt. F. D. Lincoln has been chosen president of the Hitchcock high school by the trustees, in place of N. S. Hubbard, who is in Europe, and James S. Blair succeeds A. L. Converse as treasurer, as Mr. Converse is to leave town.

On petition of G. M. Hitchcock and ten other persons, associated to form an incorporated parish or religious society under the name of the "Second Congregational Society of Brimfield," Joseph L. Woods, Esq., has issued a warrant for a meeting to be held this (Saturday) afternoon, at 2 o'clock, to organize the same.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

The ladies' benevolent society held their last gathering for the season at the chapel Wednesday evening. The annual strawberry festival will probably occur June 17.

On Wednesday morning the dead body of a man supposed to be George Barrows of Brimfield, was found floating in the canal of the paper mill. The body had evidently been in the water four or five weeks. Medical Examiner Breck of Springfield was called, who decided that death was caused by drowning. The body was buried under the direction of the selectmen. The deceased had been employed as a painter by several people in town. When last employed he was at "Silver Street," where he left his work in an unfinished state on Fast Day. He evidently committed suicide, as he had told several persons that he should take himself out of the way. He said he belonged in Brimfield, and had a sister in Vermont.

BELCHERTOWN.

The following committees have been appointed by the citizens to make the necessary arrangements for the reunion of the 10th regiment in this place on the 21st inst.: Reception, L. A. Smith, D. Stebbins, W. H. Bridgman, Revs. P. W. Lyman, Blackmer, S. G. Hastings; picnic, Alanson Curtis, J. R. Gould, P. E. Slater; rallying, school committee, superintendents of Sunday schools and teachers of the day schools; invitations, R. W. Lyman, E. S. Bridgman and the committee of the Grand Army post; finance, B. Butler, R. K. Shumway, Dr. W. P. Robinson, G. B. Weston; decoration, B. Butler, C. H. Snow, W. A. Snow, J. A. Barry; music, W. E. Bridgman; printing, M. P. Walker; transportation, R. E. Fairchild. E. R. Bridgman will be chief marshal, and W. E. Bridgman was chosen secretary and treasurer.

THORNDIKE.

Rev. C. H. Ricketts exchanges with Rev. Mr. Peirce of Brimfield to-morrow.

Dogs have been making havoc with a flock of sheep belonging to Frank Smith the past week, the damage being estimated at $100.

Charles F. Bennett, whose funeral occurred here last Tuesday afternoon, was well known in this vicinity. A few years since he occupied an overseer's position in one of our factories, but for the past two years he had been a salesman in Philadelphia, where he died last week. Although he had been in ill health for the past six months, his death was somewhat unexpected. He was buried from the residence of Col. Stever, where a large and mournful circle of friends had collected, deeply mindful of the genial yet sterling qualities of his manhood. Rev. Mr. Tuck of Middletown, Conn., officiated, assisted by Rev. Mr. Ricketts.

Dr. F. F. Spooner of North Brookfield will open dental rooms next week in Central Block. Dr. Spooner comes well recommended, having had 10 years' practice in New York and Philadelphia.

Decoration Day received more than usual recognition this year. The entire afternoon was devoted to the exercises, which were very interesting throughout. At 1 o'clock a delegation of veterans visited Moulton Hill Cemetery and decorated the graves there. At 2.30 the exercises in Central Hall began with a concert by a chorus of 30 voices from the Monson Harmony Society. After this came the other exercises, interspersed with music by the Central Hall Orchestra. Rev. F. A. Warfield of Boston gave a very fine address, and held his audience well in hand until the close. The hall was filled to suffocation, and several hundred were unable to gain admission. Fully 1500 people were in or about the building. The contributions of flowers were very large, and included many unique designs. After the exercises at the hall the veterans formed into line, and, led by the Monson Brass Band, 22 pieces, marched to the cemetery, where the graves of soldiers were decorated with flowers and evergreens. Business was almost universally suspended, and all classes endeavored to honor the day.

WARE AND VICINITY.

Goodrich Ellis fell from a barn where he was at work on Memorial Day, and broke his collar bone.

Since the completion of the new road down West street the road commissioners have turned their attention to other parts of the town, and wherever they have been they have left the roads in good shape.

Engineer Davis of Northampton has been in town again this week, trying to settle the location of some of our streets. It is proved that some of them legally belong in entirely different places than has been thought.

It was reported on Tuesday evening that J. H. Storrs had received a sunstroke that afternoon. The trouble, whatever it was, was not so severe as at first thought, and he was able to be on the street on Wednesday morning.

Several new street lamps have recently been put up to shed more light on our ways and by-ways. Some of the old ones are getting leaky, and it has been suggested that they be made of copper, instead of tin, as being more durable.

An alarm of fire was given at about eleven o'clock last Saturday night, which proved to be caused by the burning of the new house of Ansel Ross, on the old soap shop lot. The Oregon engine company were promptly on hand, getting a stream on the fire in a little less than fifteen minutes after the first alarm. The building was insured for $1000, and the fire was undoubtedly the work of an incendiary.

Dr. Perkins preached a sermon Sunday afternoon especially to J. W. Lawton Post G. A. R., who attended in a body. The text was from 2d Timothy 2:3—"Thou, therefore, endure hardness, as a good soldier of Jesus Christ." The sermon was deeply interesting, portraying vividly the duties of the good soldier in the army as well as that of a soldier of Jesus Christ. The exercises of the afternoon closed by singing "My Country, 'Tis of Thee."

On Monday there was the most severe shower in the north part of the town and in Hardwick that has been known for years. In Hardwick the roads were so badly cut up as to make travel in several parts of the town impossible. The damage was so great that an extra town meeting was called to see what measures should be taken for repairs. At Gilbertville the bridge across the brook coming down from Hardwick was carried away, and considerable other damage done.

It is so peculiar that five buildings should be burned on the same site, that it has given rise to many curious suggestions. One is that "this piece of ground must be red hot;" another that "there might be a little Ware soft soap left here," which has for years had the reputation of being especially combustible; and last that "there might be a friction of the insurance policy." We hope the reward offered by the selectmen may give us more light even than the burning buildings.

We are glad to announce that there is more enterprise on foot to build up the town of Ware. A company called the Prescott Gun Company has been formed, and are soon to commence the manufacture of the Prescott breach loading sporting gun, which is said to be one of the finest guns for the price to be found in the country. We understand that one or more of our citizens are interested in this company. A two-story building, 32x60, or larger, is to be erected at once on an extension of Monroe street, near the gas house, as the manufactory of the company.

We are glad to notice that the selectmen have offered a reward of $1500 for the conviction of the set of incendiaries and house breakers which we seem to have among us, divided as follows: $500 for the conviction of the party or parties who burglariously entered the house of Daniel Ward on the night of April 7; $500 for the conviction of the party or parties who set fire to the dwelling house of Ansel Ross, on the night of May 28; and $500 for the conviction of the party or parties who burglariously entered the house of I. N. Lewis on the morning of June 1st.

At a parish meeting of the East Congregational society it was voted unanimously to sell the chapel lot, with building thereon, including the gas fixtures and furnace, to the fire district for the sum of $3500, and at a meeting of the fire district an hour later it was voted to purchase the above property at the price named. Thus the fire district gets a better building than was anticipated, and the Congregational society will probably get a finer building for chapel and parlor purposes than they would have had if they had moved the old building to the new lot on Church street.

Mary Conley was in trouble again on Wednesday night, this time with her son-in-law, Nick Shea. It seems he was out of town during the afternoon, and came home under the influence of liquor and was having some words with his wife, when Mrs. Conley interfered, and was turned upon, knocked down and kicked in the head and breast. A warrant was issued for the arrest of Shea, when he ran and jumped into the river, and might have been drowned but for timely assistance. He was brought before Justice Richards Thursday morning, and was sentenced to Northampton jail for three months.

Quite an improvement is being made on Eddy street, it having been graded and graveled at the sand pit opposite the foundry. There is a prospect for quite a number of buildings to be erected in this vicinity this season. Mr. Weld is expected to build on a lot purchased of Mr. Ross; George Eddy will build a barn and perhaps a dwelling house later in the season, and Mr. Corser is to erect a dwelling house on Foundry Avenue. These, with other improvements, will make it lively in this part of the town. Our boot manufacturer says sales have been quite dull and late this Spring, but he is now having all the orders he can attend to.

Another burglary. About 2 o'clock Wednesday morning the wife of I. N. Lewis was awakened by some unusual noise at the back door. On getting up and going into the sitting-room she thought she heard the rustle of clothing, but seeing nothing wrong she sat down for a few moments before again retiring. The next thing she knew she saw a person standing within a few feet of her, when she cried out to her husband to come quick, as there was some one in the house, when the party or parties, for it is thought there were more than one, left the house and ran as rapidly as possible to the west. It was found upon examination that an entrance had been effected by boring seventeen holes, thus cutting out a hole in the panel, through which they reached and unlocked and unbolted the door. It is supposed they were after the fine new gold watch Mr. Lewis had purchased this Summer.

The exercises of Memorial Day were somewhat varied from what they have been in years past. The Ware Cornet Band in Weeks' barge, and the G. A. R. in the barge "Shamrock" and one double carriage, visited the graves of comrades in Ware Center in the morning; returning they visited the several cemeteries in the village in the forenoon. In the afternoon Music Hall was filled almost to its utmost capacity to listen to the address by Maj. Henry E. Alvord, which was a most able production. It was remarked by some that a more appropriate address could not have been given to follow that of Dr. Perkins of the afternoon before, had either known what the other was to say. The day was all that could be desired, good air, and less dust in the streets than usual. There was less drunkenness observed than is usual on public holidays. Of course there were some who must and would have something to drink, if they had to crawl on their hands and knees to the next town for it. The utility of the public pump was manifested in the most emphatic manner in supplying the thirsty ones. It has been estimated that more than three thousand drinks were taken there during the day. We do know that by actual count 115 persons drank in fifteen minutes, and soon after, with an extra number of drinking cups, 132 were supplied in twelve minutes.

Twenty-five barrels of gasoline stored on the platform of the Southern railroad freight depot in Springfield caught fire in some way and burned Wednesday afternoon. Several firemen were burned by an explosion soon after the fire started, and after it was supposed to have been entirely extinguished another explosion followed, burning a number of people who had gathered around. Some 40 people in all were burned, some of them very seriously.

The pins used in this country are made by fourteen factories, most of which are located in New England. The annual production during several years past, the number varying little from year to year, has been seven thousand millions. The raw material is from the wire mills of this country, and much of the machinery is of American invention.

The remains of William Penn are to be brought over from England and ceremoniously buried in Pennsylvania, probably in the yard of old Independence Hall at Philadelphia. The present representatives of the Penn family make no objection to the removal, and a State Commissioner has been appointed to conduct the affair with dignity.

Magazines, Etc.

Good Company, ($3 a year; Springfield, Mass.,) issues Nos. 19 and 20 together, making a double number. Lieutenant Frederick Schwatka, the commander of the Franklin Search Expedition which returned last Fall, has two of his series of articles on experiences and adventures in the Arctic world, under the title, "In the Land of the Midnight Sun." The first tells of previous Franklin expeditions, and the second begins the narrative of his own. In future articles he will continue the story. S. J. Douglass has a paper on the Eskimo race. A long instalment, about thirty pages, of a new serial story is given. It is printed anonymously under the title of "Mildred's Caprice." There are also three complete stories. As befits the season there are numerous articles about travel and adventure in a wide variety of localities. Perhaps the most important of these is a pen picture from Spain entitled "The Caliphate of Cordova," in the best style of Mrs. Lizzie W. Champney, who made a trip through that country last season. Relating to countries nearer home are "An Ascent of Long's Peak," by Mr. Sylvester C. Dunham, and "Personal Recollections of the Utes," by Ernest Ingersoll. Others are "Guayaquil;" "Western Pastoral Life," by Alfred T. Bacon; "A Fortnight in the Palace of Reeds," by Maurice Thompson; "Paris Street Cries," by Jno. Joline Ross; "An Old Maid's Dissipations Abroad," by Rachel Carew; "Antoine of Bagdad." Mr. George M. Towle summarizes the life of Carlyle. Articles on miscellaneous topics are "Economy in Charity," by D. Otis Kellogg; "The Decadence of American Shipping," by Alexander McLean; "Modern Whist," by Charles F. Johnson, Jr.; and among the poems are included one to the Poet Whittier by Marian Douglass, and a verse on May Day by Miss Dora Read Goodale.

The Longfellow Birthday Book, which has just been published at Boston, contains on the left hand pages careful selections from the prose and poetical writings of Mr. Longfellow. On each right-hand page are the names of more or less distinguished individuals whose birthdays are given upon that page. The selections were made by Miss Charlotte Fiske Bates, who is very familiar with all of Mr. Longfellow's writings; and she has succeeded in making the selections in many instances express some trait or fact in the history of the persons named upon the opposite pages, thus giving to the book a peculiar interest and value. The book contains the latest portrait of Mr. Longfellow, which is said to be one of the most satisfactory ever made. There are also twelve choice illustrations, one for each month of the year. The book is printed upon sized paper, so that the blank spaces upon the right-hand pages are available for the writing of autographs, the volume thus forming a happy combination of gift-book and album. It will be found very satisfactory in many families as a convenient record of the birthdays of relatives and friends, each being indicated in the handwriting of the person whose birthday is there stated. At the end of the book is an index of birthdays, which, when filled up, will facilitate reference to any of the names contained in the book. Altogether, it is a very delightful little volume. The price is only a dollar, and it can be procured of the local booksellers, or directly from the publishers, Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.

Two sisters at Bowerton, Mich., loved and were loved in return by the same young man, and finding no other way out of their difficulty they started for Utah with him, first exacting a solemn oath from him that he would not marry any additional wives. A couple of Oregon girls, with one lover between them, tossed up to decide which should have him, and the loser acted as bridesmaid at the wedding.

An iron steamship struck an iceberg during a fog off Newfoundland last week, staving in the forward compartment and having a narrow escape from sinking. An unusually heavy ice pack is now traveling southward, with countless icebergs of unwonted size, one being recently sighted off the highlands of St. John not less than 2000 feet in length and 500 feet in height.

The Democratic mayor of Troy, N. COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPDEN SS. PROBATE COURT.—To all persons interested in the estate of Eunice B. Durkee, late of Palmer, in said county, deceased, Greeting:

Whereas, David E. Tenney, the executor of the will of said deceased, has presented for allowance the second and final account of his administration upon the estate of said deceased,

You are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be holden at Springfield, in said county, on the first Tuesday of June next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any you have, why the same should not be allowed. And said executor is ordered to serve this citation by publishing the same once a week, in the Palmer Journal, a newspaper printed at Palmer, three weeks successively, the last publication to be two days at least before said court.

Witness, William S. Shurtleff, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this nineteenth day of May, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one.

3w9 SAMUEL B. SPOONER, Register.

NOTICE is hereby given that the subscriber has been duly appointed executrix of the will of James Whitman, late of Palmer, in the county of Hampden, deceased; and has taken upon herself that trust, by giving bonds as the law directs. All persons having demands upon the estate of said deceased are required to exhibit the same; and all persons indebted to said estate are called upon to make payment to MARY WHITMAN, Executrix.

In My Garden.

My garden is all planted o'er,
The borders have been freshly dug,
The green shoots are a pleasure for
The slug.

The fruit is forming on the stalk,
But woe is me! no care avails
When on my pear-trees proudly walk
The snails.

The mignonette and fragrant pea
Throw in the air their tender germs,
But wriggling round their roots I see
The worms.

My cherished rose-tree! Horror! That's
A sight that saddens sorry eyes;
Covered its leaves with tiny gnats
And flies.

Of slug and snail and worm and gnat
In vain I am a ruthless killer,
Still there's that horrid cat, cat, cat-
Erpillar!

DRY EARTH AS AN ABSORBENT.

If any one will observe where the cows choose to lie down in the yard or pasture, it will be ground, rather than the sod or bedding of straw. The same is true of sheep. We have taken this hint and furnished the cow-stables with dry earth bedding. Leaves and straw are poor absorbents in comparison. In the pig pens dry earth has no equal. In very cold weather we add straw or leaves, but until the weather is very cold the animals will be more comfortable with a bed of fresh soil, or of soil changed once a fortnight or week. In the chicken-house we have learned its great value as a deodorizer. Our roosts are over a sloping floor, on which we occasionally scatter dry earth. This is turned over with a shovel each week or oftener, and we can say the chicken-house is free from any offensive odor, and the bright combs and glossy feathers tell of the health of the fowls. Dry earth is a good preventive, too, of vermin on cattle, pigs and poultry. It must be procured at a dry time, and stored under shed or in the stables. It not only promotes neatness and health but saves the very elements of the manures which make them most valuable, and most of which would evaporate if not absorbed by the dry earth. We do not like it as a bedding in the horse stables, but it should be found in every stable, to sprinkle the floor with as soon as the bedding is removed in the morning. When removed from the stables, sties and coops, it should be kept under cover for Spring use, or for drilling with the wheat in the Fall.—Cincinnati Commercial.

NEVER GIVE UP.—Successes are often born of failures. When Lord Beaconsfield made his first speech before Parliament and was hissed for his failure, he gained courage and a persistency that did much to make him win. Curran, the famous Irish orator, trembled at his first speech before a small company, and became panic-stricken and dumb. Months afterward he charmed all with his eloquence. Thackeray carried his "Vanity Fair" to nearly a score of publishers before it was accepted. He used to say laughingly, that it was amusing how little he earned when in his early days he wrote carefully, and how much he received for work after he had acquired a name. "Uncle Tom's Cabin" was declined again and again, till finally it was published by John P. Jewett, at the earnest solicitation of his wife. Tom Hood's "Song of the Shirt" was thrown into the waste-basket. Will Carlton's "Over the Hill to the Poor-house" suffered the same fate. The "Fool's Errand" was refused by many a publisher. No success has ever come without repeated struggles and failures.

THE TEAZEL TOPS.—The prickly head of the teazel plant is invaluable for raising the nap on cloth. France devotes 6000 acres of land exclusively to its cultivation. French manufacturers use $1,500,000 worth of the prickly heads, and export 60,000 tons, valued at $2,500,000, yearly. Austria produces from 45,000,000 to 98,000,000 heads, whilst England, Belgium, Poland and the Crimea contribute largely to the world's supply. The prickles of the teazel have a small knob at the end, and this, mounted on an elastic stem and set with great precision on the central spindle, affords a little brush, such, it is said, as the utmost mechanical skill has never been able to rival, at all events, at the same price.

"Do you cast things here?" inquired a Yankee, the other day, as he sauntered into the office and addressed the proprietor. "Yes, we do." "You cast all kinds of things in iron, eh?" was the next query. "Certainly; don't you see it is our business?" "Ah, well cast a shadow, will you?" He was cast out.

Judge Travers of the Iowa Supreme Court decides that railroad companies are liable for injuries to animals run over on Sunday, no matter how carefully the trains are operated, because the running of trains at all on Sunday is unlawful.

Mamma—"You'll be sorry when Uncle Dick leaves us to-morrow, won't you, Tommy?" Tommy—"No, I shan't." Mamma—"Why not?" Tommy—"'Cos Uncle Dick always gives me a shilling when he goes away."

It is all in being cute. A Detroit woman buys a bonnet and $5 worth of extra trimmings, and every Saturday she changes and rearranges the latter and brings out what everybody thinks is a new bonnet.

"No kiss?" he said, pleadingly, "no kiss from my darling to-night?" "No," she said, emphatically, "no kiss. I hear that there are mumps in your family."

FROM THE HUB.—There is perhaps no tonic offered to the people that possesses as much real intrinsic value as the Hop Bitters. Just at this season of the year, when the stomach needs an appetizer, or the blood needs purifying, the cheapest and best remedy is Hop Bitters. An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, don't wait until you are prostrated by a disease that may take months for you to recover in.—Boston Globe.

TAKE
SIMMONS
Liver Regulator!
ASK the recovered dyspepties, bilious sufferers, victims of fever and ague, the mercurial diseased patient how they recovered their health, cheerful spirits and good appetite; they will tell you by taking Simmons Liver Regulator.
THE CHEAPEST, PUREST AND BEST FAMILY MEDICINE IN THE WORLD for DYSPEPSIA, CONSTIPATION, Jaundice, Bilious Attacks, SICK HEADACHE, Colic, Depression of Spirits, SOUR STOMACH, Heart Burn, &c., &c.
This unrivaled Southern remedy is warranted not to contain a single particle of Mercury, or any injurious mineral substance, but is
PURELY VEGETABLE,
containing those Southern roots and herbs, which an All-Wise Providence has placed in countries where Liver Diseases mostly prevail. It will cure all diseases caused by derangement of the Liver and Bowels.
The SYMPTOMS of Liver Complaint are a bitter or bad taste in the mouth; pain in the back, sides or joints, often mistaken for Rheumatism; SOUR STOMACH; loss of appetite; bowels alternately costive and lax; headache; loss of memory, with a painful sensation of having failed to do something which ought to have been done; debility; low spirits, a thick yellow appearance of the skin and eyes, a dry cough often mistaken for Consumption. Sometimes many of the symptoms attend the disease, at other times very few; but the LIVER, the largest organ in the body, is generally the seat of the disease, and if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and DEATH will ensue.
"I can recommend as an efficacious remedy for disease of the Liver, Heartburn and Dyspepsia, Simmons Liver Regulator.
LEWIS G. WUNDER, Philadelphia."
"We have tested its virtues personally, and know that for Dyspepsia, Biliousness and Throbbing Headache, it is the best medicine the world ever saw. We have tried forty other remedies before Simmons Liver Regulator, but none of them gave us more than temporary relief; but the Regulator not only relieved but cured us."—*Ed. Modern Mother Gooseries.

There was a young girl in Passaic
Who doted on straw'b'ry short ca-ic,
And crullers she'd munch
With a terrible crunch
Till her jaw-bone would actually a-ic.

There once was a girl in Duluth,
Who had an aversion to truth.
So when her beau kissed her
And made her lips blister,
She told her folks she had a sore tooth.

There was a young maiden in Troy,
Who squealed and looked like a toy;
When the boys said "go home!"
She said, "not alone!"
That artful young maiden in Troy.

There was a young man named Michael,
Who thought he could ride a bicycle;
But the headers, you know,
Discouraged him so
That he gave up this modern vehicle.

At a party a maiden named Leake,
Gave a wild and hysterical shriek,
When a splash of clam chowder
From her face washed the powder
And showed the big mole on her cheek.

A Troy girl lost one of her shoes—
Oh! how could she such a thing lose?—
'Twas so flat and so large
That 'twas used for a barge
On the Mohawk, up near Cohoes.

To Vassar there went from St. Louis
A dazzlingly-beautiful Jewess;
French, Latin and Greek
She learned not to speak,
But she made an accomplished gum chewess.

There was a small boy had some powder,
And in trying to make it go louder
He succeeded so well
That his friends couldn't tell
His remains from a dish of clam chowder.

There was a sweet creature named Lizzie,
Who declared that she never was dizzy;
And she leaned o'er the cliff,
"Just to see, dear George, if—"
Now in scooping her up they are busy.

JOHN'S WIFE.

Whatever possessed brother John to go up to the city and marry that little yellow-haired, blue-eyed bit of a school-girl, when he could have just had his pick of girls nearer home, was something I never could see into. There was Lida Handscombe, just dead in love with him, as anybody could see, and the best bread-maker in the whole country, besides taking prizes at the State Fair for pickles and jellies, and ever so much better looking, too, than Myra. No yellow bangs over her eyes; she just combed her hair back off her face and did it up in a hard knot that stayed. She sent John a birthday cake, and knit him a comforter, and everybody thought it would be a match, but John said he didn't like her eyes; they were handsome eyes to my idea, and could look through and through, they were that clear and bright; but did you ever know a man to take advice? "Marry that ferret," said John, "and never have any peace in my life; well, I guess not!" and with that off he goes to town and telegraphs back, "expect me and my wife." Dear! such a shock as it gave me, and our Spring cleaning not done, and the minister coming to board with us while his wife went home on a visit—it was a trial, you may be sure!

And when she did come, it was more like having a wax doll in the way than anything else, with her big wondering eyes, and silly questions, and hanging on John's arm and leaning over John's chair, with two insignificant feet in the rung at the back, and her clothes! Such fallals, just like a doll's rigging, and I just set my foot down that if she was to live with us, she must conform to our ways. I hadn't been forty years in this world for nothing. If she wanted to wear fine white laces and ruffled aprons, she had to wash them herself. I wouldn't be her slave. And such silly questions she asked, they just made me sick!

"Were there any dear little yellow chicks?" Dear little yellow chicks, indeed! They were dear enough, before we raised them and got their heads off, and had them ready for market, and if that silly child didn't sit down and cry because they were killed; said she had named every one of them, and watched them grow up. And she our John's wife! bah!

Then she did the silliest thing of all; went and bought a book called "What I Know About Farming," and used to sit out under a tree, studying it by the hour, and one night when she went down to the bars to meet John, I heard her ask:

"John, why don't you get a washing machine, and a wringer, and save your own flesh and blood. Look at the blisters on my hands!"

And the next thing it was the talk of the neighborhood that we Elliots, who had set our faces against modern improvements, had given out before that little pale-faced thing, and not only got a wringer and washer in our kitchen, but several hundred dollars' worth of farm machinery at work. John said he could afford it, but I spoke my mind, and told her what I thought of it after he went out to work. She looked kind of frightened, and pretended she was going to cry, and then she spoke up quick like, and said:

"Sister Janet, it's a triumph of mind over matter. You can wash now, and not be all tired out, and sick and nervous and—and—John can afford it."

Perhaps if I had known that she had paid for it all, and it hadn't cost John a cent, I might have been more forgiving, but I just straightened up and said:

"Mrs. Elliot, you may go on and ruin your husband with your boarding-school ideas, but as for me, I'll never touch the things. I can work, thank goodness, while I've got my health. I wasn't brought up in idleness."

She never took it to her heart a bit; the next thing I knew she was at the little parlor organ she had, singing and playing as if that was all there was in life.

And that silly old minister—men never do have a bit of sense, but you expect more of a preacher of the gospel—but he just sat and talked to her as if she was a companion for him, and they walked about the fields, and stayed down where John was working, and all around 'em souls a-perishing for the want of the bread of life; such a sinful waste of time I never saw!

"Janet, do you love the hills?" she asked one day when I was scouring the knives outside the door. She had offered to do them for me, but law, her white hands were not fit for anything so useful.

"Love the hills! Well, I'd like to know what there is to love about them. I guess if you climbed them a spell you wouldn't love 'em much."

"They're so high and grand," she said, looking up at them; "they seem so near the cool, far-off Heaven! I'd love to climb to the top and drink in the sweet, fresh air; it does me good here—here."

She laid her hand upon her heart, and stood looking off with a strange expression upon her face, and I thought maybe she was homesick, and told her to go in and cut some carpet rags and sew 'em together, and would you believe it, she up and refused.

"No," she said, "I cannot cut any carpet rags. I hate them!"

I never saw her so excited before.

"A fine temper you have," was all the answer I made her, but I never felt so insulted in all my life.

For a week or two I didn't see much of her; she was either out with John, "sketching," as she called it, dabbing away at some bits of paste-board with a lead pencil; or up in her room, where I never went. She came down singing away, with a large package in her hand, and soon John came up with the ponies, and they drove off to town, laughing like two children. I hope none of the neighbors noticed them. Anyway they never saw him conduct himself that way with me.

When they came home she was all tired out, and they had a big roll of stuff they dumped down in the entry.

"It's something for you, Janet," she said, laughing hysterical-like. "It's carpet-rags."

I unrolled it and there were twenty yards of bright ingrain carpet!

"Myra," said I, "this is wicked extravagance," for I knew her money was all paid out.

"But it isn't," she said, laughing; "I earned it myself by drawing and painting those bits of sketches. I sold them all, and can sell all I can do. That was my way of cutting carpet rags."

Well, we put the carpet down, and it did look pretty—though I didn't say so. It isn't my way to spoil anybody with flattery, and I saw John's wife was getting the upper hands too fast. The neighbors were beginning to notice her, and that foolish old minister, when his wife came back, had been over there; and she led the singing in church, and pretended she had got religion, and all the time she never scrubbed a floor, or washed a dish, or put her hand to the churn.

"John can afford to keep hired help," she said to me one day, "and I'm not very strong, and my mother died of consumption." Then she began to cry like a baby, and John came in and looked at me as if it was my doing.

I must say that she could succeed in doing all sorts of useless things—raising flowers in every nook and corner, making pets of all the animals, and painting, or playing on the organ. She was real ornamental and I suppose some folks thought she was pretty. John did for one. I don't know that she made me much work, either. She did her own washing as long as John would let her, and kept her room neat enough, though it was mostly littered up with flowers and birds and her own sketches, and at first she sang from morning till night, and she did have a real lovely voice, I'll allow that, but after awhile she didn't sing, and didn't talk much, and then John began taking her meals up to her. The first time I saw him getting a tray ready, I said:

"It's a good thing, you were ready brought up to be handy, John, seeing you've got an invalid wife."

He didn't say anything then, but a few days after he came to me and said:

"Janet, get a girl as soon as you can, and let Aunt Betsey come over and stay with Myra; she is nervous and low-spirited, and needs company."

Well, I suppose you've guessed the upshot of it all: a little daughter was born to John, and it seemed to me that a miracle was worked in the house. Perhaps I had never really loved John's wife—she was so different in her ways from me—but when I heard that baby cry I felt thrilled to my very soul, and I just threw my work apron over my head and cried for the first time in many years.

Myra didn't get strong, and the days went on and still she wasn't up, and I felt as if it was my duty to go and tell her that she mustn't favor herself that way, that she couldn't lie abed and let strangers take care of her child, and that she'd never get strong till she got out, but I made up my mind to speak in a gentler sort of way.

I had been thinking it over, and about concluded to let Myra live her own way and not try to make her over, especially since John seemed so well satisfied with her, and I went up stairs and opened the door softly and stepped inside. John was standing at one window looking out at the sunset—it was all red and gold, and the room was in a flame; he turned as I came in, and the tears were rolling down his cheeks. I never saw John cry before, since he was a grown man.

"What is it?" I whispered, going close up to him.

He made a motion with the back of his head toward the bed. I went over there. Aunt Betsey was in a rocker by the side of it reading the Bible. Myra was looking at the sunset, then at her baby's sleeping face. I'm not slow to see things, and I saw there what made my heart turn cold—it was the valley of the shadow of death!

That all happened three years ago. There is a simple rustic cross up in the graveyard with "Myra" carved on it, and little Myra and I go up there every Sunday and carry flowers to decorate it, and the dear child sits in my lap and puts her blessed little arms around my neck and whispers:

"Auntie, talk about my mamma in Heaven."

And I tell how patient and gentle she was, and how she sang and played, and how she shall do the very same thing some day—for I know, now, that flowers are as necessary to God's creation as the wood and grain, and the least little thing that makes sunshine in the world is of great value in the dark places, and, I feel sure when I look up to the hills she loved, that Myra has reached far-off Heaven before me. Perhaps—perhaps, she will intercede for me there.—M. Quad.

THE HOG.—We saw him the other day. He was in the cars. He was well dressed, but the hog was there nevertheless. Two or three persons were standing, and he had his overcoat and valise along side of him in the seat, and he was so deeply engaged in writing in a memorandum book, that he could not possibly see those persons. This was the blind hog. Sometimes the hog looks vacantly out of the window. This is the idiotic hog. Sometimes he looks you boldly in the face, and tells you the seat is engaged. That is the thorough-bred hog. Such hogs make you wish that the hog cholera was not confined to the four-legged kind.—Lambertville Record.

As a rich and pretentious man was looking at some paintings which he proposed to buy, the dealer pointed to a fine one and said, "That is a dog after Landseer." "Is it really?" exclaimed the pretender. "What is the dog after him for?"

"I WAS A STRANGER, AND YE TOOK ME NOT IN."

A court case, with a peculiarly touching finale, was recently tried in Philadelphia. Lizzie Aaronson, who had led a wayward life in New York, finally became a wife, and was taken to Philadelphia when in a critical condition, and heartlessly abandoned by her husband. Friendless and wholly unknown, realizing the terrible position in which she was placed, she wandered for days about the streets, until, finally forced by the ravenous and unnatural hunger induced by approaching maternity, she accosted a young girl (Lizzie Flick) on the sidewalk, who gave her a few cents and lodged her for the night. On the following day she encountered a woman of the town (Ida Wilson), as the commonwealth fully succeeded in showing, and in her company for days sought asylum in some hospital where the dreaded ordeal of confinement might be passed. Various asylums and charitable institutions were appealed to to receive the Aaronson woman, but for various reasons, principally on account of her condition, they turned her away. Feeling herself a burden to the Wilson woman, Miss Aaronson left her one morning, pawned a small gold ring (the only article of jewelry she had) for a quarter, and for the money hired a room, in which, alone and unattended, she gave birth to a child and threw it from the window into a back yard, where it was found by the police. The mother said it was born dead, but she was arrested and tried for infanticide. At the conclusion of the evidence, the district attorney advised the abandonment of the government's case. Judge Allison, who had presided at the trial, then called the witnesses, Ida Wilson and Lizzie Flick, upon the platform before the jury and said:

"Gentlemen, I have called these two girls to the bar of this court that you may see them, while I say a few words upon another phase of this case. This defendant, Lizzie Aaronson, was shown by the testimony of the defense to have come to this city an utter stranger, to have been a homeless wanderer on the streets, without money, without friends. In her utter loneliness and friendlessness, driven to seek charity from the passer-by, she accosted this girl here (pointing to Lizzie Flick) and, without hesitation, she shared her poverty with her, giving her a share of the money and comforts she possessed. This other young woman (pointing to Ida Wilson, who, unfortunately, has not led a correct life), however much her moral nature may have been warped, in one respect gave an exhibition of practical Christianity—of practical Christianity, I repeat, with emphasis—when she likewise gave this friendless sister shelter, that would furnish a wholesome example to most of those who are clothed with purple and fine linen. I am sorry to admit that, if this poor, friendless girl had applied to nine out of ten of those very people who compose the wealthy classes she would probably have sought in vain the shelter she received from the despised outcasts. I, therefore, regard this as the time and the place to make mention from the bench of the kindness of heart displayed by these two girls, and have, for that reason, dwelt upon their acts because of the striking contrast which they afford to the so-called charities of this city. It has been clearly shown that this defendant, in the midst of her wants, and when the critical hour of her motherhood was near, went from one of these so-called charities to the other, and at each of them sought admission, with the evident purpose of giving her child respectable birth. In this laudable desire she was thwarted at every turn in consequence of the various regulations governing the so-called benevolent institutions, under none of which, unfortunately, was she a fit candidate for admission. At last, alone, in utter squalor, nearly naked, without fire or the most ordinary comforts, amid the darkness of a bitter winter's night, inexperienced and unassisted, she gave birth to her child, whether alive or dead the Almighty and she only will ever know. I direct that you acquit the prisoner."

They are not polite or accommodating.
They are penny wise and pound foolish.
They do not know the best is the cheapest.
They hope for a fortune to drop in their laps.
They try how cheaply they can do everything.
They think most things take too much trouble.
They attend to everything but their own business.

The inhabitants of the rural districts of Ohio betray their New England origin in many ways, but in no way so unmistakably as in their tendency to exalt the importance of literary culture. Two ladies from the vicinity of Cleveland were recently discussing literature in the drawing-room of a Washington hotel. First lady—"Above all modern novelists I admire George Eliot. Do you like him?" Second lady—"Do I like him? I think he's just grand, massive, superb." First lady—"So do I. And which of his novels is your favorite?" Second lady (reflecting)—"Well, I think I prefer 'Daniel Veranda.'"—Brooklyn Eagle.

An Ethiopian witness in the court of Justice Hires at Virginia City, Nevada, being asked his business, said: "Well, boss, I s'pose I might be called a miner." "If you work at mining you are, of course, a miner." "Well, dat's wat I works at." "What kind of mining are you doing?" "De kind o' mining wat I works at is wat dey calls kalsomining."

"Yes," said the school-girl who had risen from the lowest to the highest position in her class, "I shall have a horseshoe for my symbol, as it denotes having come from the foot!"

A wealthy citizen of New York, in celebrating the fiftieth anniversary of his wedding, toasted his wife as "the healthy old lady who combines beauty and durability."

The Stopping of the Clock.

Surprising falls the instantaneous calm,
The sudden silence in my chamber small;
I, starting, lift my head in half alarm—
The clock has stopped—that's all.

The clock has stopped! Yet why have I so found
An instant feeling almost like dismay?
Why note its silence sooner than its sound?
For it has ticked all day.

So may a life beside my own go on,
And such companionship unheeded keep;
Companionship scarce recognized till gone,
And lost in sudden sleep.

And so the blessings heaven daily grants
Are in their very commonness forgot;
We little heed what answereth our wants—
Until it answers not.

A strangeness falleth on familiar ways,
As if some pulse were gone beyond recall—
Something unthought, linked with all our days—
Some clock has stopped—that's all.

MODERN COURTSHIP.

"And you really love me dearly?" he asked, as he coiled his arm around her wasp-like system. "And you will always love me so?"

"Always, Frederick; ever so."

"And you pledge me to sew but—"

"Sir!"

"You pledge me to so beautify my life that it will always be happy as now?"

"With my last breath, Frederick."

"And, darling, you will mend my soc—"

"Your what, sir?"

"You will mend my social ways and draw me upward and onward to a better existence?"

"It will be the pride of my life so to do, Frederick; I will sacrifice all for your complete happiness."

"I know that, sweetness. But suppose some accident should happen to—to—say the trou—?"

"You forget yourself, sir. To the what?"

"To the trousseau; would it defer the hour which makes you mine?"

"Never, Frederick. I am yours, mind and heart, and naught can separate us."

"But what I want to say is, that should my pant—"

"Begone, sir. What do you mean?"

"Hear me, my life. I say, if my panting bosom should grow cold in death, would your love still warm it?"

"As the sun melts the iceberg, Frederick, so would the rays of my affection thrill your heart again."

"And you will care for me ever, my soul, and I for you, for though I may never have a shir—"

"Enough! Leave me forever."

"But listen. Though I may never have a shirking disposition, I shall sometimes perhaps, in the struggle of life, forget the plain duty—"

"And I'll remind you of it, Frederick, in tender actions, and make the duties of existence so pleasant of performance that to avoid them will be pain."

And so on. That's modern courtship. Lots of abstract swash, but a manifest disinclination to contemplate such conveniences as buttons, socks, trousers and shirts.

EAR AND BRAIN.

The substance of the following statements with regard to the ear and brain is from a paper in the New York Medical Journal, by Dr. Andrews, surgeon to the Manhattan Eye and Ear Hospital, New York.

Ear diseases are much worse than those of the eye. They are a principal cause of deaf mutism. They are also among the most frequent diseases of childhood, being developed in diphtheria, whooping-cough, scarlet fever, measles, smallpox, typhoid fever, influenza and tubercular affections of the lungs.

Indeed, a simple cold in the head or sore throat rapidly spreads along the mucous membrane of the nostrils and pharynx to that of the ear. Says the late Professor Clark, of Harvard University: "So important is a proper attention to the ear during and after acute exanthemata" (diseases attended with rash), "that a physician who treats such cases and neglects to give his attention, cannot be said to perform his duty to his patient."

But the most serious fact about these diseases grows out of the very intimate connection between the ear and the brain. Most of the bony wall which contains the internal ear lies in direct contact with the membrane of the brain. Some parts of the wall are so thin as to be transparent. There are also openings through it for the passages of the nerves and blood vessels, and often parts of it are wanting through arrest of development.

Hence, purulent inflammations of the ear extend readily to the brain—the more so, the younger the child. These may cause similar inflammation of large veins, and abscesses of the brain.

Nearly one-half of all the latter are due to this cause, chronic inflammation of the ear—showing itself perhaps only in a slight headache—being vastly more dangerous than acute.

A WIFE WORTH HAVING.

She was a plucky woman, the wife of a Bradford oil speculator, who saw her husband's fortune pass away almost in the twinkling of an eye by a sudden and heavy fall in the price of illuminating fluid. Walking into a store she took off her sealskin sacque and sold it. From that place she went to the jeweler's and disposed of her diamonds and all of her silver. When her husband returned home, disconsolate and downcast, she met him at the door dressed in a neat calico wrapper. He had been a clerk before fortune smiled upon him, and she a modest school-teacher. She informed him that she had discharged all the servants, and they would live as formerly, she doing the work. She handed him $5000 as the result of her selling her jewelry, and told him to use it. Joy and hope beamed in his eyes, and found a place in his heart again. He went again to the business. In one month he had regained his former position.

A French paper relates the following experiment: A cow was milked three times a day for eleven days, and yielded 170 quarts of milk. With two milkings daily she gave only 146 quarts in the same number of days. Analyses, moreover, showed that the milk in the first case was richer in butter globules by more than one-seventh than in the second case.

"Mother," remarked a Duluth girl, "I think Harry must be going to propose to me." "Why so, my daughter?" queried the old lady, laying down her spectacles, while her face beamed like the moon in its fourteenth night. "Well, he asked me this evening if I wasn't tired of living with such a menagerie as you and dad."

A WESTERN ROMANCE.

It happened, of course, in the land of chivalry and adventure—the Far West. She was one of the loveliest and most accomplished daughters of Cheyenne, and while enjoying a ride through the fashionable promenade of that energetic city, her Arab steed suddenly developed the cussedness of a broncho and shied at the spectacle of a handsome youth leaning contemplatively against a lamp-post. The musing Apollo was clad in picturesque Spanish outfit, and at the moment was mentally debating what he would do with his last dollar. The irregular beat of the horse-hoofs roused him abruptly from his reverie, and with Castilian grace and the agility of a trained matador he sprang forward and curbed the frightened animal—not in time, however, to save the beauteous equestrienne from a fall which harmed no limb, but broke one of her pearly teeth. End of chapter one.

The hero of our narrative was deeply smitten in the cardiac region. The lovely heroine disappeared from view, and next day sought a dentist to remedy her disfigurement. The delicate pearl that flashed through "lips within whose rosy labyrinth when she smiled the soul was lost," was hopelessly crushed. Beauty in distress appealed to art; the knight of the forceps promised to search high and low for a pearl of the proper size and brilliancy. The search was made faithfully, but not until the dentist saw a young Spaniard leaning against a lamp-post did he find the coveted prize. Whether it was an incisor or a canine, an eye-tooth or a stomach-tooth that was required, the record fails to state—nor does it matter much. The youth gladly sold one of his teeth for $100, offering all his stock in trade for the same terms. The tooth was submitted to proper treatment, and the young horsewoman appeared at a ball the following evening apparently none the worse for the accident. But with a woman's curiosity, she would have given her head to have known whence came the tooth. End of chapter two.

Time passed. The Spaniard made a fortunate purchase of stock with his $100, and not only began to patronize the tailor but indulged in a bank account. One evening last week chance threw him into a select little party, where the fair rider happened to be present and he related his dental adventure. When he smiled and pointed to the vacant place in his mouth, the young lady gave a little shriek. Her secret was discovered, and now the Cheyenne and Denver papers announce that the Spaniard will get his tooth back at the altar on the 25th of the month.

WORRY.—If you find yourself disposed to give way to that mind-weaking, happiness-destroying disease of worry, try to recuperate your nervous system. Go to bed and sleep, it is a sign that your blood is sluggish; your nervous system is used up; your muscular system has had little or no employment. Then do something to tire the muscles and start the blood. Do not fall into the delusive snare of "gentle exercise;" that is admissible only for invalids. Whatsoever you do, do it with all your might. Take a tramp on the hills; saw wood; ride horseback; give fifteen minutes to an Indian club or a pair of not too heavy dumb bells; run; jump; anything to exert your body and stop the exertion of your mind, to set your muscles into exercise, and give your nerves a rest. Get into a glow and perspiration, and make yourself feel thoroughly tired. Then take a bath, get on clean clothes, eat a light meal with a good appetite, and go to bed; and, ten chances to one, you will go to sleep and wake in the morning cheerful and hopeful, prepared to laugh at your former melancholy.

Did you ever have a sort of cramped feeling in your hands, a weakness at your elbow, a slight touch of lameness in the deltoid muscle, find your clavicle and scapula working with an awful creak, the muscles and cords that brace up your spine sore, your legs a little bit uncertain and tremulous, the perspiration oozing out from every pore, and your lungs all out of "breath?" Never did? Then you have omitted to saw half a cord of wood before breakfast.

The Buffalo Commercial Advertiser gives us the song of the youthful apple peddler at the country railroad stations in Pennsylvania: "Apple! Sapple! Sapples! Two for five! Napple, Mister? Mister, rapple? Wan tanapple, mister? Six for five cents? Fre sheat nappuls; Ni seatin napples, seven forannickel! Napple, mister? Mister, wantanapple? Want smappuls, mister? Nine furannickel? Here's yourrappuls? Ten furannickel!"

The girl who makes the acquaintance of every young man she sees, without regard to who or what he is, is held in the same esteem by men as the yellow dog that will lick every hand that pats its head.

It has been well said that no man ever sank under the burden of the day. It is when tomorrow's burden is added to the burden of today that the weight is more than a man can bear.

A mother saw her little daughter draw her sleeve across her mouth, and said: "Tilly, what is your handkerchief for?" "To flirt with, mamma," was the innocent reply.

It seems suspicious for a woman whom you have known since she was a girl as a decidedly freckled specimen, to appear on the street without a freckle in sight.

The season for carrying fans is a great comfort to some women. It enables them to yawn without attracting attention to the size of their mouths.

It is a well known truism that people learn wisdom by experience. "A man," says Mr. Jones, "never wakes up his second baby to see it laugh."

"Learning," says a down easter, "is well enough; but it hardly pays to give a five thousand dollar education to a five dollar boy."

It is now believed that the oleomargarine factories put hair in their goods, thus rendering them more difficult of detection than ever.

"Know her?" "Oh, yes." "Is she a New Yorker?" "Well, yes—not a native. She's a New Yorker by vaccination."—Puck.

The Journal.

SATURDAY, JUNE 11, 1881.

GOV. FOSTER of Ohio was renominated by the Republicans of that State on Wednesday.

DURING the first three months of his administration, Postmaster General James has made a saving of nearly $750,000 in the star route and steamboat mail service, without in any way abbreviating its effectiveness.

HEAVY frosts occurred Sunday and Monday nights in several places in New England and Northern New York, doing considerable damage to vegetation, while thin ice formed in some parts of New Hampshire. Vennor will raise the very dickens with things if he keeps on in this way.

SPEAKER RANDALL, it is said, hopes to secure the organization of the next House to the Democrats, by the aid of the Greenbackers and of Judge Kelley of Pennsylvania, who is unfriendly to Garfield. He had better not count too strongly on hatching many Democratic chickens out of Republican eggs.

THE Army of the Potomac had its annual reunion at Hartford Wednesday, with addresses by Secretary of War Lincoln, Gen. Sherman, Daniel Dougherty and others. Gen. Sherman sharply criticised Jeff Davis's "Rise and Fall of the Confederacy," characterizing some of its statements as deliberate untruths.

THE Virginia Readjusters closed their State convention last week Friday, after nominating Col. Cameron of Petersburg for Governor, and J. F. Lewis, a Republican, for Lieut. Governor. Senator Mahone might have had the nomination for Governor if he had wished it. The platform declares for perfect freedom of speech, politics and religion, and a free ballot. The colored men participated in the convention with the same freedom as the white men.

There is talk of a public reception to Gen. Grant when he returns to New York, at which Mr. Conkling will make that "greatest effort of his life," which has been heralded as upon the point of delivery so many times that the promise has become historical, and the people quite skeptical as to its fulfillment. It might be worth while to have the reception, if Conkling would really fire off his big gun and so put an end to his bombastic announcements. It is the opinion of many that he has already made the greatest effort of his life in his futile attempts to secure a reelection at Albany.

THE joint special committee on the revision of the statutes met at Boston on Wednesday and chose Robert O. Southworth clerk, voting also to have an index clerk, to be chosen hereafter. Nearly every member present had an idea of his own as to the best method to be pursued in carrying on the work of the committee, but it was at length voted to appoint a committee to report a set of rules and establish a method of procedure. The members of the committee are prepared to offer amendments ad infinitum to the work of the revision commissioners, and the work will doubtless be extended well along toward the extra session of the Legislature in November.

THE administration Republicans at Albany have endeavored to concentrate their votes on a candidate for Platt's place this week, and on Thursday ran the vote for Chauncey M. Depew up to 53, making him the leading candidate. The vote for Conkling has remained about the same as at first. Intimations of bribery had been in circulation for three or four days, and on Thursday morning Assemblyman S. H. Bradley of Cattaraugus announced that he had been paid $2000 to vote for Depew, and had placed the money in the hands of Speaker Sharpe. He asked for a committee of investigation, which was promptly appointed, and the matter will be thoroughly investigated. Bradley says the money was paid to him by Senator Sessions, an anti-Conkling Republican, but the latter emphatically denies paying him any money, or saying anything about money, though he had urged him to vote for Depew. It is regarded by many as a desperate conspiracy by the Conkling men to defeat Depew, a view that is strongly sustained by many circumstances in their course the past week, and by the course of the Conkling men on the investigating committee, who made strenuous efforts to stave off the taking of testimony. Conkling is reported to have said that this is only one of about 20 cases of attempted bribery. It is to be hoped that the investigation will be a thorough one, and that the whole truth will be brought to light. Neither Conkling nor Depew would countenance bribery in their behalf, and if any of their followers are attempting it they should be shown up.

A fire at Quebec, which broke out at 11 o'clock Wednesday night in the lower town, destroyed 657 houses, leaving 1500 familes homeless, and involving a loss of about $1,500,000. Five persons are supposed to have perished in the flames.

The Massachusetts Press Association will make a Summer excursion to Mt. Desert, the Isle of Shoals, and other points in Maine and New Hampshire, leaving Boston June 20th, and returning on the 27th.

A steamer sailing from Pittsburg, Pa., can carry a cargo to Fort Benton, Montana, 4335 miles distant, without breaking bulk or passing out of American territory.

There is a discrepancy in the accounts of the board of education at Brooklyn, N. Y., and the books have been stolen, so that they cannot be examined.

Elder Henry Cummings, a prominent member of the Shaker fraternity at Enfield, N.H., has astonished his people by marrying a Shakeress.

MISHAPS AND MISDEEDS.

The folly and danger of allowing boys to carry concealed weapons was illustrated anew in Springfield Tuesday night, when Chas. D. Kidder, aged 35, a well-known traveling salesman, was shot and killed by his half-brother Dwight, aged 17. Charles had intimated that his mother would not care if their sick father should die, whereupon Dwight became very angry and took him to task several times for his remark. Tuesday evening he called Charles to the door and asked him if he was ready to take back his words. Hot words ensued, and Dwight finally pulled out his pistol and shot his brother through the heart. He afterwards went to the police station and gave himself up, and was sent to jail, to await examination next Wednesday.

Two heavy freight trains collided near Cedar Rapids, Ia., early Sunday morning, killing two men, injuring two others severely, and smashing over 30 cars, with their contents, which made a pile higher than the telegraph poles. The accident was due to the carelessness of the telegraph operator.

A gang of circus roughs pounded a policeman to death at Chesaning, Mich., Monday night, and seriously injured a number of other people, narrowly escaping a lynching themselves in consequence.

A terrific whirlwind and hail storm visited some portions of Dakota Territory Monday, doing a great deal of damage near Deadwood, where one woman was killed and several persons injured.

Two children at Leadville, Col., had their hands torn off and their eyes blown out one day last week by the explosion of a giant cartridge, which they had found and were trying to open.

A small negro boy was roasted to death Sunday by the colored Voodoo family with which he lived in St. Tammany parish, New Orleans, for stealing a loaf of bread.

Isaac W. Lucy, known as the Colorado cattle king, through his immense herds in that State, was murdered recently by an employe to whom he refused to lend $12.

A Catholic priest and his brother were smothered to death at Corcoran, Minn., last Wednesday night, by an imperfectly-burning lamp.

Too much hard cider prompted a tramp by the name of Robinson to fatally shoot Lorenzo Hardy near Londonderry, N. H., Wednesday.

Corn cakes made from dough that had stood over night in a glazed crockery dish poisoned an entire New Albany, Ind., family recently.

The steamship Glen Logan, from New York for Brazil, has been burned at sea. The passengers and crew escaped.

Dennis Doherty of Lowell fell into the canal Tuesday night, in trying to elude the police, and was drowned.

Three men were killed by a railroad accident near Beuna Vista, Col., Monday.

A Delaware negro who had committed a capital offence was refused the privilege of having persons of his own race on the jury, as the constitution of that State confines jury duty, as well as suffrage, to "free white male citizens;" and he was convicted by a white jury. The case was carried to the United States Supreme Court, which has set aside the sentence, on the ground that the Delaware constitution, though never formally amended so as to omit the word "white," must be read and administered as if that word had been stricken out, in accordance with the Federal statutes.

Rev. Mr. Goodspeed, a member of the Illinois Legislature, who had occasionally offered prayer in that body, refused the $3 a day voted for those who had officiated during the session, on the ground that a person should be paid only in accordance with the good accomplished. He had prayed that the members of the House might have wisdom, honesty of purpose, patience and grace, but he did not think his prayers had availed anything.

Ex-Alderman I. P. Dickinson of Springfield turned his wife out of doors last Saturday afternoon, and she had to seek shelter with neighbors. Mr. Dickinson is a prominent resident of Long Hill, and is said to have been long in the habit of ill-treating and abusing his wife, who is about 60 years old. Mr. Dickinson claims that she has an extremely ugly disposition, and has made a great deal of trouble for him and their children.

Florida, having established a large and growing market for her oranges, is now beginning to ship peaches to the New York market. A consignment arrived last Saturday which were shipped on the last day of May, packed in compartment boxes like the patent egg boxes, and each peach wrapped in cotton. They were apparently as fresh as when picked from the tree, and sold readily at $2 a dozen.

Although the clerical force of the census bureau has been reduced during the past few months from 1400 to 600 employes, it is found that the appropriation made by Congress for the completion of the work will not admit of the payment of salaries to the present force beyond the 15th inst., and the work is yet far from being completed. The clerks propose to continue their labors and trust to Congress for payment.

James E. Walsh of Springfield has been arrested on the charge of embezzling $175 from the Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. of New York. It is reported that a large business has been done in the city by the agents of this company, in insuring paupers, old and sick people, and fictitious persons, the policies being assigned to the agents.

An eagle whose wings measured 6 feet 4 inches from tip to tip, was shot last Saturday afternoon in Brockton, by a boy 13 years old, who had never fired a gun before.

LOCAL NOTICES.

Visit White, Hellyar & Co's. for a good assortment of India Mulls, Lawns, Nainsook Cambrics and Tarletans.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

Trinity Sunday to-morrow.

Number of dogs licensed, 111.

The band gave another out-door concert Monday evening.

W. W. Leach has been commissioned a justice of the peace.

The "Old-stand-bys" play the Nonpareil base ball club at Wilbraham this forenoon.

The ladies of the Congregational society socialized with Mrs. J. S. Loomis Wednesday evening.

Conductor Sanders's sister, Mrs. B. N. Fox, of Niantic, Ct., has a cactus with 35 blossoms in full bloom.

James Taylor, a graduate of Tufts Divinity School this week, will preach at the Universalist church to-morrow.

The carpet mill boys got away with the high school nine in last Saturday's base ball game, to the tune of 29 to 8.

John Robertson of this town has been granted a divorce from his wife Ada, on the grounds of desertion and adultery.

The pay of freight engineers on the Boston & Albany road is now equalized by a new rule, under which each engineer takes his turn in going out.

Frank Barker has been awarded the contract for building the new road recently laid out by the county commissioners at Three Rivers, for $300.

Children's Sunday will be observed at the Congregational church by a concert to-morrow evening. St. Paul's church will observe the day a week later.

A sort of meningitis is prevailing to a considerable extent among the horses in this vicinity. It unfits them for work for two or three weeks, but there have been no fatal results as far as heard from.

The Universalists had a social at the house of J. H. Smith in Blanchardville Wednesday, and in the evening the band put in an appearance and played a few pieces for the delectation of the assembled people.

Murray's circus came to town yesterday in a pouring rain, which prevented any street parade, and promised to cut the attendance down to a pretty small number. This is the first, and probably the only circus to exhibit here this year.

It is hardly warm enough yet for excursions, but it will be soon, doubtless, and it is expected that the Boston & Albany road will institute another series of its popular cheap excursions to Boston, beginning probably the latter part of this month.

The only change made in the running of trains by the summer time table on the Boston & Albany Railroad is in the time of the owl trains. The owl for New York now leaves this place at 1.23 a. m., while the one for Boston leaves at 3.45 a. m.

A preliminary meeting of persons interested in forming a chapter of the Golden Rule Alliance in this village was held at the office of E. J. Wood Wednesday evening, and a meeting for organization will be held at O. P. Allen's house next Thursday evening.

The school children will now have a good rest from study, as all the schools in town closed yesterday except the high school, which will continue in session two weeks longer, and will close with an exhibition on the 24th inst., for which preparations are now being made.

The depot platform of the Boston & Albany Railroad is being extended west as far as the dry bridge, in order that the trains down on the Ware River road, which now pull in on the main track, may come up to the station on their own track, without obliging passengers to alight in the dirt when there are a few freight cars on the train.

The selectmen have settled the River and Dublin street damages by the payment of the following sums, which include the awards made by the board last year: John M. Converse $500, John Gaffney $175, Michael Mack $50, Daniel Doyle $25, Michael Finnerty, Winifred Wilder, John Murphy and estate of Patrick Hill $20 each; total, $830.

We have had a good deal of weather this week—cold, damp, rainy and cheerless weather, which is a fine thing for grass and fish, but is bad for corn and folks. The only relief is to bring out the winter flannels again and keep up the fires, with the cheerful reflection that this kind of weather cannot keep up always, and dog days will surely come by and by.

Catherine Griffin was before the district court last week Friday on the charge of keeping liquor without a license, but the case was continued to to-day, for trial by special justice Shaw. On Saturday last Harry Robinson, Robert Keyes and John Woods were unable to pay their dollar fines for drunkenness, and were sent to jail. John Doyle was up on Monday for an assault, and was sentenced to pay costs of $4.45.

John H. Galleher, the new freight clerk at the B. & A. freight house in this village, was presented with a gold-headed cane and a copy of Webster's Unabridged last week Tuesday evening by the Sodality club of Norwich, Ct., a society of which he has been secretary for some time. Cooley's Weekly of that city says: "Mr. Galleher is a young man of good character and ability, and during his stay in Norwich has gained for himself many friends."

The moon will celebrate the coming Sabbath by a total eclipse early in the morning, and by rising full in the evening. This is the only total eclipse on the programme for this year, and will therefore be deserving of special attention. The eclipse begins at 12.26 a. m., is total from 1.29 to 2.51, and ends at 3.52. If the sky is clear a successful performance may be depended upon, and there will be plenty of room for all spectators, with no charge for reserved seats.

Engineer Kenerson of the Ware River Railroad has for some time wanted a nice kitten, and the other day a couple of his engineer friends at West Springfield took pity on him and sent him a box containing 13 nice young felines. "Ike" was so overcome with gratitude that he at once procured a large dry goods box, and filling it with a choice assortment of old straw hats, felt hats, silk hats and every other kind of hat, ancient, mediæval and modern, he forwarded it to his West Springfield friends, as a partial reward for their generosity.

Lawyer Gardner is putting in a cesspool in the rear of his house, which promises to surpass anything of the kind in this region. Being troubled by the frequent filling up of his old one, he concluded to build a new and larger one. He had gone down but a few feet when a bed of clay was struck, and he has not touched bottom yet, the workmen still digging in clay, though they are down some 25 or 30 feet. Mr. Gardner proposes to "fight it out on this line if it takes all summer," and if he don't strike gravel before that time, he will eventually have a well deep enough to irrigate the tea plants on the other side.

At the monthly session of the probate court in Springfield on Tuesday Lucretia G. Noble was appointed administratrix on the estate of L. Noble of Wilbraham. Wills approved of—Mary E. Parker of Wales, Orre Parker executor; Chauncey Wood of Monson, Joshua Tracy executor; Elizabeth S. Fosket of Wilbraham, Abner C. Burley executor. An inventory was filed on the estate of Chauncey Wood, of Monson, personal $846, real $1800. James A. Webber was appointed guardian of Esther Louise and Nettie G. Sands of Holland. An account was filed on the estate of Eunice B. Durkee of Palmer; and the petition for order of attachment on estate of Milton Stebbins of Wilbraham was granted.

Complaint is made by a number of people of the cutting down of shade trees in the highways in different parts of the town, by parties who probably want to sell or use the wood they furnish. The value of shade trees along the highway can hardly be estimated in dollars and cents, but it far exceeds any value they may possess as fire-wood, and a person who cuts them down for this purpose is sadly lacking in public spirit and a regard for the comfort of the traveling public. A heavy penalty is provided for maliciously cutting down or in any way injuring shade trees, and there is a section of the general statutes which makes it unlawful for anybody to cut down a tree in the highway, even if it is in front of his own premises, but this law must be formally adopted by a town to make it operative. It might be well for our town to do this.

Rev. B. M. Fullerton read his formal resignation as pastor of the Congregational church in this place last Sunday forenoon, and announced his desire to close his labors here as early in July as may be practicable. This decision has been generally expected, but was none the less regretted by the members of his church and congregation, who have formed a deep attachment for him during his pastorate of a little more than 13 years. In his sermon Mr. Fullerton gave a review of his pastorate, showing that the church has received during these 13 years 193 new members, and now stands the sixth on the scale among the churches in the Hampden Conference, in regard to its charities and other expenditures, whereas 13 years ago it was the twentieth. The church edifice has also been enlarged, remodeled, and furnished with an organ, and a commodious parsonage has been built. In every way the church is stronger and in better shape than when Mr. Fullerton came here. He has shown himself a capital builder, and the church in Waltham, of which he will take charge in September, cannot fail to prosper under his ministry. His resignation will be acted upon by the church and parish at a meeting next Tuesday.

The executive committee of the improvement association voted at their meeeting on Monday evening to put in a concrete walk across Main street, at the corner of Central street, to connect with the depot walk—an improvement which will be appreciated by everybody who has occasion to go to the depot in muddy weather. It was also voted to raise the stone walk on Church street. When this walk was originally laid, it was one or two feet above the street, but the latter has been filled in from time to time by the town authorities until it is on a level, and in places even higher than the walk, so that water runs from the street on to the walk and covers it at times several inches deep. The town, having raised the road, should also elevate the sidewalk, and an effort will probably be made to have the selectmen do this. The expense will be comparatively slight, but the funds of the association can be used to advantage in other directions, in matters which the town would not undertake. The association has now about $50 in the treasury, and it is hoped to increase this amount very materially by additional memberships. The committee on street signs was instructed to report at the next meeting as to the probable cost of putting up signs at the street corners, an improvement which is much needed. The next meeting of the executive committee will be held at the house of R. L. Goddard, the second Monday in July.

LUDLOW.

The petition for a writ of habeas corpus to release Alexis Waid of this town from jail on the ground that his sentence was illegal, was dismissed by the superior court at Springfield on Tuesday.

HOLLAND.

About a dozen roughs from Wales visited the house of Geo. Haradon two weeks ago last Sunday and shamefully beat the old gentleman, compelling him to draw cider, which they drank until drunk, and breaking his windows and abusing his family. He has been in a critical condition since. Mr. Haradon is an inoffensive old gentleman of about 70 years, having very little property to help himself, and should his wounds prove serious he would have to be helped by the town. The authorities are awaiting the results, and intend taking action soon in the matter, as the names of most of the fellows are now known.

WALES.

S. H. Sibley & Son offer their mill for sale.

John Grenell, an unlearned but earnest worker, gave a temperance talk in the Baptist vestry Wednesday night.

E. Shaw has taken the highway to repair, commencing at Hubbard Bros'. house, and including all east of there. We shall expect a good road, as it has fallen into the right hands.

The new bell was raised last Saturday, and church-going people rejoiced to hear it peal forth on Sabbath morning. The town clock has also been repaired, so that it strikes, which is a great convenience.

WARREN.

The presiding elder preached at the Methodist church last Sabbath evening.

A LIVER DISORDERED FOR FIFTEEN YEARS.—For fifteen years I was a great sufferer from a disordered liver, during which time I tried many of the best physicians in the country and almost all the patent nostrums recommended, all to no effect, until I used Simmons Liver Regulator; and from the time I used it to this day, which is now several years, I have been comparatively a sound man, having suffered very little since at any time from the effects of my old disease. Consequently, I heartily recommend its-use to the afflicted of liver disease. Maj. A. F. WOOLEY, Kingston, Ga.

Have you heard the news, that D. H. Brigham & Co., the Springfield clothiers, are to suspend business for several weeks, to allow their store to be remodeled and enlarged? It is a fact, but cannot be done until they have closed out about one hundred thousand dollars' worth of light Summer goods. That sale began Wednesday June 8th, and will be continued until the stock is sold. The inducement they offer is that every dollar's worth of goods is marked in plain figures, and will be retailed at just wholesale prices for net cash. And the sale is to be made in the quicket time possible to allow them to make the changes and be ready for the early Fall trade. One hundred cases of Summer hats, and one thousand trunks and traveling bags, are included in the above sale. It can be readily seen that the above sale is not a dodge to close out a lot of odds and ends at the close of a season of the year when the goods must be had. As this immense stock is to be retailed at wholesale prices, no railroad fares or traveling expenses will be paid during this special sale.

Smile Whenever You Can.

When things don't go to suit you,
And the world seems upside down,
Don't waste your time in fretting,
But drive away that frown;
Since life is oft perplexing,
'Tis much the wisest plan,
To bear all trials bravely,
And smile whene'er you can.

Why should you dread to-morrow,
And thus despoil the day?
For when you trouble borrow
You must expect to pay;
It is a truthful maxim
Which should be often preached—
Don't cross the bridge before you
Until the bridge is reached.

You might be spared much sighing
If you would bear in mind
The thought that good and evil
Are always here combined;
There must be something wanting,
And though you roll in wealth,
You miss from out your casket
The precious jewel—health.

And though you're strong and sturdy,
You have an empty purse—
And earth has many trials
Which we consider worse;
But whether joy or sorrow
Fill up your mortal span,
'Twill make your pathway brighter
To smile whene'er you can.

NO MORE WEATHER TALK.

More than a year ago those who travel by the Woodward avenue car line entered into a solemn agreement not to mention the weather to each other when they met on the car. No matter how hot or cold it was no one was to speak of it, and each one was to infer that all the others had brains enough to expect 10 degrees below in January and 85 above in August. As a result of this agreement a nuisance was abolished and thousands of citizens put in a way to enjoy themselves as well as one can in a street car.

Two weeks ago the organization was revived, and scores of new names added to the list, and up to yesterday noon the word "weather" had not been even hinted at on any car on that line. At that hour a stranger entered the car at Adelaide street, and had hardly taken a seat when he said to the man across the aisle:

"Nice little shower we've had."

He was given a freezing look in reply, but he continued:

"Curious that we don't have more thunder storms this Spring."

One of the organization here presented him with an engraving of a coffin, but after a brief glance he continued:

"Wonder if we are going to have a very dry Summer."

One more effort was made to save him, but he recklessly observed:

"I'm buying a place up here and shall use this line four times per day. Did any of you gentlemen notice how the thermometer stood?"

The car was stopped, and he was taken off and impaled on the tops of some iron pickets, no one even troubling himself to take down his dying words to his wife. The coroner has refused to hold an inquest, and the chief of police says he shall take no official notice of the incident. That's the sort of men they are up Woodward avenue, and that's the sort of end weather talkers may expect to reach. This saying it's hot or cold or balmy or breezy or close or bracing has got to be put a stop to, if the cross-bar on every lamp-post becomes a gallows. It means nothing, annoys everybody, and is deserving of violent death. Let the work of execution go on.—Detroit Free Press.

The coffee-houses established in the great English cities, as a means of keeping men away from taverns, have been as great a success in a pecuniary as they have been in a moral point of view. Most of the companies pay an annual dividend of 10 per cent on their capital. The coffee-houses supply coffee, tea and cocoa, soups, cold meats and bread and butter—all the articles being of good quality and the prices low. Newspapers are kept in abundance, and the customers are free to remain and read as long as they please. Why should not the same means for humanizing men be equally successful in this country?

The following difference between Unitarians and Trinitarians was given by a Trinity Sunday school pupil, a real occurrence. Teacher: "Tell me the difference, if you can, between Unitarians and Trinitarians." Small but observant child: "Well, I guess there isn't much difference, only Trinitarians are more pious, and Unitarians drive more Sundays."

A stock broker returning to his office the other day, after a substantial luncheon with a client, said complacently to his head clerk: "Mr. Putkin, the world looks different to a man when he has a bottle of champagne in him." "Yes, sir," replied the clerk significantly, "and he looks different to the world." —Puck.

Vennor says he doesn't intend to go lecturing. After such a Winter as he has been giving us, and considering the present abundance of eggs, Mr. Vennor is somewhat distrustful of popular gatherings.

"Waiting" is the stumbling block of progress and reform. Doing is the lever that moves the world.—Bullion.

Less time spent in idle dreaming and devoted to the duties of life would give us wealth and contentment.

FROM THE HUB.—There is perhaps no tonic offered to the people that possesses as much real intrinsic value as the Hop Bitters. Just at this season of the year, when the stomach needs an appetizer, or the blood needs purifying, the cheapest and best remedy is Hop Bitters. An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure, don't wait until you are prostrated by a disease that may take months for you to recover in.—Boston Globe.

TAKE
SIMMONS
Liver Regulator!

ASK the recovered dyspeptics, bilious sufferers, victims of fever and ague, the mercurial diseased patient how they recovered their health, cheerful spirits and good appetite; they will tell you by taking Simmons Liver Regulator.

THE CHEAPEST, PUREST AND BEST FAMILY MEDICINE IN THE WORLD for DYSPEPSIA, CONSTIPATION, Jaundice, Bilious Attacks, SICK HEADACHE, Colic, Depression of Spirits, SOUR STOMACH, Heart Burn, &c., &c.

This unrivaled Southern remedy is warranted not to contain a single particle of Mercury, or any injurious mineral substance, but is containing those Southern roots and herbs, which an All-Wise Providence has placed in countries where Liver Diseases mostly prevail. It will cure all diseases caused by derangement of the Liver and Bowels.

PURELY VEGETABLE,

The SYMPTOMS of Liver Complaint are a bitter or bad taste in the mouth; pain in the back, sides or joints, often mistaken for Rheumatism; SOUR STOMACH; loss of appetite; bowels alternately costive and lax; headache; loss of memory, with a painful sensation of having failed to do some thing which ought to have been done; debility; low spirits, a thick yellow appearance of the skin and eyes, a dry cough often mistaken for Consumption. Sometimes many of the symptoms attend the disease, at other times very few; but the LIVER, the largest organ in the body, is generally the seat of the disease, and if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and DEATH will ensue.

"I can recommend as an efficacious remedy for disease of the Liver, Heartburn and Dyspepsia, Simmons Liver Regulator.
LEWIS G. WUNDER, Philadelphia."

"We have tested its virtues personally, and know that for Dyspepsia, Biliousness and Throbbing Headache, it is the best medicine the world ever saw. We have tried forty other remedies before Simmons Liver Regulator, but none of them gave us more than temporary relief; but the Regulator not only relieved but cured us."—Ed. Telegraph and Messenger, Macon, Ga.

A Wail from the Bay State.

Latest statistical reports show that there are 66,044 more women than men in Massachusetts.

No one to love us,
None to adore;
We're sixty-six thousand
And forty-four.
Indeed, it's rather rough
There are not men enough
To bus
Us.
'Tis our hard fate
To stand
In the very worst State
In the land;
For each of us blue
Gets
In the State of Massachu-
Setts.

Are the maidens more lucky
In Kentucky?
Does this style of fate
Predominate,
To rob us of our glory
In any other State
Or Territory?
Has every girl a man
In Michigan?
Has every girl a beau
In Idaho?
We'd like to know,
To ease our woe,
By Jo!
We, the sixty-six thousand and forty-four,
With none to adore
Or listen to us coo,
Or pay our debts,
In this great State of Massachu-
Setts.

Sixty-six thousand and forty-four souls
Are sadly pining;
Each day into the past unnoticed rolls,
Nor twining
Vines we'll ever be.
Ne'er o'er the lea
The marriage bell
Doth swell
From the minister
For the spinster.
As none for us will sue,
Each one crazy gets Right here in Massachu-
Setts.

We, the sixty-six thousand and forty-four,
Whom none adore,
Have sweet blue eyes,
And cheeks like roses,
And lovely noses;
We can make pies,
And bake
Cake,
And cook food,
And chop wood.
We're up to no mean dodges—
We don't object to lodges.
If there isn't soon a change,
Around this State we'll range,
And see
If we Can't raise a storm
For reform;
And, if the mortal roar
Of sixty-six thousand and forty-four
Is not heard,
Each, like a bird,
Her course will quick pursue,
And end her fumes and frets,
And exodus from Massachu-Setts. —Andrews' American Queen.

ROMANCE OF A GLOVE.

"Does it please you, Katy?"

"Oh, it is splendid! I could not have suited myself half so well, had I been left to choose."

"But you have not seen the wine cellar yet. It is a treasure of its kind. Let's go down."

They went down the stairs together, he talking gaily, she with a troubled look on her face. After duly admiring the place, she put a timid hand on his arm and said:

"But, Arthur, dear, let's have no wine in it."

"Why?" he asked, in surprise.

"Because I have resolved, if I am ever the mistress of a house, there shall be no liquors kept in it—no 'social glasses' for friends."

"Why, Katy, you are unreasonable. I did not know you carried your temperance opinions so far as that. Of course I shall keep wine in my house, and entertain my friends with it, too."

She raised her face appealingly.

"Arthur!" she said, in a tone of voice which he knew how to interpret.

Arthur's brow grew clouded.

"But you cannot fear for me," he said, with half-offended pride.

"I must fear for you, Arthur, if you begin as he did. And I fear for others, besides—for the sons, and husbands, and fathers, who may learn at our cheerful board to love the poison that shall slay them."

They went up the steps again and sat on a sofa in the dining-room for a few moments, while Katy put on her hat and drew on her gloves.

The argument was kept up. It is unnecessary that we should repeat all that was said on both sides. It ended at last as similar discussions have ended before. Neither was willing to yield—Katy, because she felt that her whole future happiness might be involved in it; Arthur, because he thought it would be giving way to a woman's whims, and would sacrifice too much of his popularity with his friends.

He had bought this house, paid for it, and furnished it handsomely, and in a few weeks was to bring Katy as its mistress. All the afternoon they had been looking over it together, happy as two birds with a newly-made nest. But when Arthur closed the door and put the key in his pocket, in the chill, waning light of the December afternoon, and gave Katy his arm to see her home, it was all "broken up" between them, and a notice, "To Let," was put over the door of the house the very next morning.

It was the most foolish thing to do; but then lovers can always find something to quarrel about.

They parted with a cool "Good evening" at the door of Katy's lodging house. She went up to her room to cry; he went home hurt and angry, but secretly resolving to see her again, and give her a chance to say that she was in the wrong. He would wait a few days, however; it would not do to let her see that he was in a hurry to "make it up."

He did wait nearly a week, and when he called at the modest lodging house, where he had been wont to visit so often, he was told that Miss Gardiner had been gone three days.

"Gone where?" he asked, slow to believe.

"She did not tell me, sir. She said she was not coming back. Her aunt lives at Bristol."

He then took the next train for Bristol, and investigated; but neither there, nor in any other place, though he searched for months afterwards, did he find sign or trace of Katy Gardiner.

* * * *

All this happened more than a year before I saw Katy; but we three "factory girls," who lodged at Mrs. Howell's with her, of course knew nothing about it. She came to the factory and applied for work. The superintendent thought her too delicate for such labor, but she persisted; and, in fact, she improved in health, spirits and looks after she became used to the work and simple fare of the factory girls.

She was a stranger to us all, and it seemed likely she would remain so. But one day Mary Bascom's dress caught in a part of the machinery, and before any one else could think what to do, Katy had sprung to her side, and pulled her away by main strength from the terrible danger that threatened her.—After that, Mary, and Lizzie Payne and I, who were her dearest friends, were sworn allies of Katy's.

We all lodged together, then, in the big "Factory boarding-house." But Katy took it into her head that we should have so much nicer times in a private lodging to ourselves; and when she took anything into her head she generally carried it through. In less than a week she had found the very place she wanted, arranged matters with the superintendent, and had us sheltered under Mr. Howell's vine and fig tree. We four girls were the proud possessors of a tolerably large, double-bedded apartment, with a queer little dressing-room attached—"and the liberty of the parlor to receive callers in"—a proviso at which we all laughed.

This was "home" to us after the labor of the day. Indeed and in truth, Katy made the place so charming that we forgot we were "factory girls" when we got to it. She improvised cunning little things out of trifles that are usually thrown away as useless, and the flowers growing in broken pots in our window were a glory to behold. She always had a fresh book or periodical on our table; and better than this, she brought to us the larger cultivation, and the purer taste, which taught us to use opportunities within our reach.

"What made you take to our style of life, Katy?" asked Lizzie one evening, as we all sat in the east window, watching the out-coming of the stars, and telling girlish dreams.

"Destiny, my child," answered Katy, stooping to replace the little boot she had thrown off to rest her foot.

"But you might have been an anthoress, or a painter, or a—a book-keeper, or—"

Lizzie's knowledge of this world was rather limited; Katy broke in upon her.

"There, that will do. I was not born a genius, and I hate arithmetic."

"But you did not always have to work for a living, Katy?" said May. "You are a lady, I know."

Katy laughed a queer, short laugh.

"Yes," she said, "and that's why I don't know how to get my living in any way but this. So behold me a healthy and honest factory girl."

She rose, made a little bow, and a flourish with her small hands, and we all laughed, although she had said nothing funny.

"Milly," said she, "please light the lamp, and get the magazine, while I hunt up my thimble and thread. Ladies, I find myself under the necessity of mending my gloves this evening. Oh, poverty! where is thy sting? In a shabby glove, I do believe, for nothing hurts me like that, unless it be a decaying boot."

Katy's gloves were a marvel to us. She never wore any but of good quality, and always the same color—a brownish, neutral tint that harmonized with almost any dress—but just now a new pair would seem to be the one thing needful, from the appearance of the ones she brought out.

She sat and patiently mended the little rents, while I read aloud; and when she had finished, the gloves looked almost new.

The next day was Saturday, and we had a half holiday. Katy and I went to make some trifling purchases, and on our way home stopped at the big boarding-house to see one of the girls who was ill. When we came out, Katy ran across the street to get a magazine from the news store, and came hurrying up to overtake me before I turned the corner. She had the magazine open, and one of her hands was ungloved; but it was not until we reached home that she found she had lost a glove. It was too late then to go and look for it. We went and searched the next morning, but could not find it.

Katy mourned for it.

"It was my only pair, girls," said she, tragically, "and it is a loss that cannot be repaired."

* * * *

What people call a "panic" had occurred in financial circles in the Spring after Arthur Craig had lost his Katy, and almost without a day's warning he found himself a poor man. He left his affairs in the hands of his creditors—having satisfied himself that they could gather enough from the wreck to save themselves—and set his face to London.

He had been educated for a physician, though fortune made a merchant of him.—Learning from a friend that there was an opening for a doctor in Fenwick, he came thither and began to practice.

Dr. Sewell had gone off on a visit, leaving his patients in charge of the new doctor; and so it came about that on that Saturday evening he was on his way to visit Maggie Lloyd, the sick girl at the lodging house, when, just after turning the corner near the news store, he saw a brown glove lying on the pavement. He was about to pass it by, but a man's instinct to pick up anything of value that seems to have no owner, made him put it into his pocket. He forgot all about it the next minute.

But when he had made his call and returned to his consulting room, in taking a paper from his pocket the glove fell out, and he picked it up and looked at it with idle curiosity.

It was old, but well preserved. It had been mended often, but so neatly as to make him regard mending as one of the fine arts. It had a strangely familiar look to him. Little and brown, and shapely, it lay on his knee, bearing the very form of the hand that had worn it.

And as he gazed at it, there came to him the memory of an hour, many months past, when he had sat by Katy's side on the green sofa in the dining-room of "their house," (alas!) and watched her put her small hands into a pair of brown gloves so much like this one.

Ever since that never-to-be-forgotten day, the vision of his lost love sitting there in the fading light, slowly drawing on her glove, her sweet eyes filling as they talked—quarreled, we should say, perhaps—had gone with him as an abiding memory of her, until he had come to know each shade of the picture—the color of the dress, the ribbon at the throat, and the shaded plume in her hat.

He looked at the little glove a long time. He had thought it might belong to one of the factory girls, as he found it near the lodging house. But it did not look like a "factory hand's" glove. He would ask Maggie Lloyd, at any rate; so he put it carefully in his pocket until he should make his calls the next morning.

He had suffered the glove to become so associated with the memory of a past that was sacred to him, that he felt his cheek burn and his hand tremble, as he drew it forth to show it to Maggie, who was sitting in the comfort of convalescence, in an arm-chair by the window, watching the handsome young doctor write the prescription for her benefit.

"By the way, Miss Maggie, do you know whose glove this is?"

Maggie knew it at once. It was Miss Gardiner's glove.

"Miss Gardiner's!"

The name made his heart beat again.

"Is she one of the factory hands?"

"Yes; but she lodges with Mrs. Howell, quite out of the town, almost; she was here to see me yesterday."

"Oh, I see!" said he, not the most relevantly. "And can you tell me how to find Mrs. Howell's house? I suppose I could go by and restore this glove to its owner."

Maggie thought this unnecessary trouble; but she gave the required direction, and he went out, saying to himself, "It can't be my Katy, of course; but the glove shall go back to its owner."

* * * *

Mary and Lizzie went to church that Sunday morning. Katy declared she couldn't go, having but one glove. I stayed at home with her and offered to keep Mrs. Howell's children for her, and so persuaded that worthy woman to attend worship with the girls.

And this is how it came about, that while we were having a frolic on the carpet with the children in Mrs. Howell's room, we heard a ring at the door, and Bridget having taken herself off somewhere, there was no help for it, but for one of us to answer the summons.

"You go, Katy," whispered I, in dismay; "I cannot appear."

Katy glanced serenely at her own frizzy head in the looking-glass, gave a pull at her overskirt and a touch to her collar, and opened the door.

Immediately afterwards I was shocked by hearing her utter a genuine feminine scream, and seeing her drop on the floor; and that man, a perfect stranger to me, gathered her up in his arms, and began raving over her in a manner that astonished me. He called her "his darling," and "his own Katy," and actually kissed her before I could reach her.

I was surprised at myself afterwards that I hadn't ordered the gentleman out; but it never occurred to me at the time, and when Katy "came to," and sat upon the sofa and heard his speeches, she seemed so well pleased that I left them and took the children up to our room, feeling bewildered all over.

What shall I say further? Only that Katy lives in the pretty house in the town known as Doctor Craig's residence, where we three "factory girls" have a home whenever we want it. And there are no liquors found on her sideboard nor at her table.

One day I heard Arthur say, "You were a silly child, Katy, to run away from me. I should have given up the point at last, I know."

"But there would have been the splendid cellar and the ten thousand a year," answered she. "It would have been such a temptation. We are safer as it is, dear."

A MODERN FABLE.

One day a bird of rare plumage and song sat on the limb of a tree overlooking a Pond, when a Catfish arose to the surface and said:

"You may be able to fly through the air, but you can't swim. You are not half so big a Gunboat as you pretend to be."

This salutation nettled the Bird, and he spunked up and replied:—

"I am a better man than you are any day in the week, and if you were up here on this limb I'd prove it or break my wings trying to!"

"Pooh! If you were down here in the pond, I'd take the brag out of you in about a York minute!" sneered the Catfish.

After some further 'sass' it was agreed that they should go to the Cat and have a test to see which excelled. It so happened that the Cat was out to see if there was any chance to pick up a bone at some one else's expense, and the Bird quickly brought her to the banks of the Pond.

"You see," began the Cat, as she stroked her whiskers and looked wise, "this Bird can not swim and the Catfish cannot fly. Therefore, you must meet on neutral ground. Each thinks his cause is right, and you come to me to decide. The Catfish will swim to the bank and the Bird will alight on his back. One will try to pull the other down, and the other will try to pull the other one up, and may the best man win."

The programme was carried out, each being certain of victory; but while they were struggling, the Cat raked in both for the benefit of her stomach.

"When men can't agree," mused the satisfied Cat, as she walked homewards, "they can always go to law and the law will settle the dispute, if it has to eat the cause of it."

Moral.—In the first place, peg away at what you can do best. In the second place, let other people have the same privilege. Brag is a good dog, but the umpire rakes in all the profits.—Detroit Free Press.

RECEIPT FOR MAKING A LIVE TOWN.

1. Sell your building lots at reasonable prices.
2. If you can afford to do so, donate a building lot for some large business enterprise and thereby enhance the value of your town property.
3. Induce business men to locate in your town.
4. Patronize the business men of your own town.
5. Always sum up your expenses when you visit places outside of your town to buy goods.
6. Speak well of public enterprise.
7. If anything should be undertaken that may be of benefit to the town do not speak ill of it to others because you may happen to be a little prejudiced.
8. Speak well to strangers of your town and people.
9. If you have surplus money don't invest it in some far away speculation, but give yourself and your town the benefit of it by establishing some profitable factory.
10. Encourage your newspaper by subscribing for, advertising in, and paying for it.

Soft hearts often harden, but soft heads never change.

Be True.

Thou must be true to thyself,
If thou the truth wouldst teach;
Thy soul must overflow, if thou
Another's soul would reach;
It needs the overflow of the heart
To give the lips full speech.

Think truly, and thy thoughts
Shall the world's famine feed;
Speak truly, and each word of thine
Shall be a fruitful seed;
Live truly, and thy life shall be

QUAINT PROVERBS.

Silence is a cheap virtue.
Short pleasures, long lament.
Simple diet, healthy children.
Sloth is the mother of poverty.
Sincerity is the parent of truth.
Sin and sorrow are inseparable.
Silent waters are seldom shallow.
Silence is the sanctuary of truth.

WHAT SHALL WE HAVE FOR BREAKFAST?

The German "early morsel" consists of a cup of coffee, bread, eggs, perhaps, and a comb of golden honey, or some like dainty. On this fare the fine brain of Germany has done its subtle thinking for generations—the poet his imagining, the warrior his planning, the philosopher his speculating, the statesman his contriving, the musician his ethereal weaving, the theologian his destroying and his upbuilding. Nay, there was an earlier nation of poets, orators, philosophers, warriors, statesmen, dramatists, painters, architects, sculptors—a nation from which we still borrow the best we know of art and eloquence—which wrought its eternal labors on a still simpler diet. The old Greeks made their breakfast of bread dipped in wine, to which, in self-indulgent moods, they added ripe fruit. Dinner, to be sure, was an affair of time and substance. But there were slaves to cook it, and slaves to serve it; the labors of the day were done, and the simplicity-loving Greek might permit himself a little elegant gluttony without self-reproach.

Might not we profit by the example of the older and the younger nation? A simple and light breakfast would go far to redeem us from the reproach of being a nation of dyspeptics. It would greatly lessen the toils of the housekeeper, who could teach the most unintelligent maid to prepare good coffee, and bread, and the wholesome graham puffs variously called, or who could herself make upon the table the best of breakfast tea. Eggs at some seasons are scarce and dear. But the matutinal egg would be far cheaper than the long array of half-spoiled breakfast dishes with which the conscientious housekeeper struggles after "variety." These simple viands, with oatmeal and milk, offer all the chemical elements required for nutrition, and may be unfailingly good. This morning sobriety leaves the head clear, the spirits light, the body stimulated, not clogged. It tends to cultivate a simple and refined taste. —Harper's Bazar.

A worthy Teuton was talking about weather forecasts. "Look here," said he, "I dell you vat it is. You better don't dake no shtock in dem weather bredictions. Dose people don't know nodding. Dey can't tell no better as I can." "But, my dear sir," said a person present, "they foretold the storm which we have just encountered." "Vell, dot ish so," said the Teuton, contemplatively; "but I dell you vat it is. Dot shtorm would have come yust the same if it had not been bredicted."

She was decorating her room with pictures, and she perched his photo up on the topmost nail; then she sat down to admire her work, and remarked quietly: "Now everything is lovely and the goose hangs high!"

We don't see why the revised edition won't suit a big percentage of folks. It has just as handsome bindings, looks as well on a center table and is just as good to press leaves with.

The man who revenges every wrong done him has no time for anything else. If you would make your life a success you can afford to let the dogs bark as you go by.

We admire modesty. A very modest young lady of Boston declined to wear the fashionable clocked hose until assured the clocks had no hands.

THEODORE PARKER ON MARRIAGE.

Young people marry their opposites in temperament and general character, and such marriages are generally good ones. They do it instinctively. The young man does not say, "My black eyes require to be wed with blue, and my over-vehemence requires to be a little modified with somewhat of dullness and reserve." When these opposites come together to be wed they do not know it, but each thinks the other just like himself. Old people never marry their opposites; they marry their similars and from calculation. Each of these two arrangements is very proper. In their long journey these opposites will fall out by the way a great many times, and charm the other back again, and by and by they will be agreed as to the place they will go to and the road they will go by, and both become reconciled. The man will be noble and larger for being associated with so much humanity unlike himself, and she will be a nobler woman for having a manhood beside her that seeks to correct her deficiencies and supply her with what she lacks, if the diversity be not too great, and if there be real generosity and love in their hearts to begin with. The old bridegroom, having a much shorter journey to make, must associate himself with one like himself. A perfect and complete marriage is, perhaps, as rare as perfect personal beauty. Men and women are married fractionally, now a small fraction, then a large fraction. Very few are married totally, and they only, I think, after some forty or fifty years of gradual approach and experiment. Such a large and sweet fruit is a complete marriage, that it needs a very long summer to ripen in, and then a long winter to mellow and season. But a real happy marriage of love and judgment between a noble man and woman is one of the things so very handsome that, if the sun were as the Greek poets fabled, a god, he might stop the world in order to feast his eyes with such a spectacle.

HONORING A MOTHER'S FEELINGS.

A burglar entered the house in which a mother was sitting up with a sick child.

"Sir," she said in a whisper, as soon as she could compose herself to speak, "there is nothing of value in this house except that child's life, at least to me, but you may find otherwise. Here, take the keys, search everywhere, take what you want, but speedily and without noise, I implore you."

She handed him the keys, placed her fingers upon her lips, and pointed to the door.

The burglar moved quietly away, then turned and said in a low voice:

"Is he very sick?"

"His life hangs on the continuance of this sleep."

"Then he will recover for all the noise I'll make," the robber answered, laying down the keys and noiselessly taking his departure, but absolutely nothing else.—Utica Herald.

Mamma finds her two boys of five and seven at a forbidden closet, helping themselves to cake. To Willy, the elder: "Oh, you naughty boy, I shall have to punish you." "Why don't you punish Sammy, too, mother?" "Because he's a little boy and doesn't know any better, but you do!" Next day Sammy makes an expedition to the cake-box on his own account. Mamma's consternation is met with the remark, "You said, mamma, I'm a little boy, and don't know any better."

A girl should be taught to detest two things thoroughly—Idleness and aimlessness. These two enemies have given birth to ennui, which is pain. If she be a child of fortune, instruct her even more carefully than if she were poor to work in some definite manner, for pleasure's own sake. More than all, train her hands and stir her brain with the constant assurance that she will find her keenest and sweetest satisfaction in that which she is to accomplish in life.

We are inclined to smile when a man tells us he cannot take his local paper because he wants a city paper. He might as well say he cannot have bread because he intends to have sponge cake. Meanwhile he has to ask his neighbor about the local news and notices, and the local paper goes on building up the place and increasing the value of his property.

A Wisconsin girl's innate modesty caused her to ask a clerk in a store for a pair of limbings when she wanted leggings. The struggle for the cake now lies between her and the Missouri girl who tells strangers that during the war the enemy threw up bust works on her father's farm.

A young man who visited a Sunday school was asked at the close of the lessons to address the children, which he did, commencing: "My dear young friends, mutability is stamped on all sublunary objects." The children were not prepared to deny the accuracy of the statement.

When people have good times and keep a bright, pleasant fireside, and are always glad to see their friends, there will always be friends to come.

When David Davis dies the fences of the United States will wear the usual badge of mourning for six weeks.—Commercial Advertiser.

"What is love?" asks an exchange. Love, my friend is thinking that you and the girl can be an eternal picnic to each other.

A joke and a boil are much alike in one respect. We all think they are very funny things when they are on somebody else.

This world, with all its poverty, does not need almsgiving so much as it needs pure hearts and honest lives.

The Journal.

SATURDAY, JUNE 18, 1881.

WILLIAM A. WHEELER had 38 votes at Albany Thursday to 32 for Conkling, while Depew had 54 to Platt's 37. It would seem to be about time for the ex-senators to take the hint and withdraw from a contest in which they have no chance of success, and can win no glory.

DWIGHT KIDDER, Jr., the Springfield boy who shot his brother last week in a fit of anger, has had his bail reduced from $10,000 to $6,000 by Judge Wells of the police court. Is this intended as a gentle hint to the boy's friends to spirit him away before his case comes to trial? It looks so.

A PRETENDER is said to have arisen in Russia, who claims that he is the elder brother of the present Czar, and so entitled to the throne. He is reported to have a considerable following, and may prove quite a thorn in the Czar's flesh, who has about enough of them already to destroy his peace of mind.

CORPORATIONS are generally considered to have no souls, but some of them seem to have a conscience, at least. The Central Vermont and Passumpsic railroads refuse to run Sunday excursion trains for either picnic or religious purposes, a decision which will meet with the approbation of all people who have a regard for the respectful observance of the Sabbath.

SILAS M. WAITE, the Brattleboro bank defaulter, was arraigned at Windsor on Wednesday, and pleaded guilty to two counts of the indictment against him, charging him with making false returns of the bank's condition. He was then sentenced to six years in the Rutland county jail. Waite made a statement in court, in which he claimed that he had never defrauded any one, but was suffering for the sins of others.

HARDLY have the Ute Indians entered upon their new reservation, after last year's settlement, when a railroad company establishes a station on their lands, and settlers have rushed in and started a settlement, mainly of saloons and other resorts, supremely indifferent to the rights of the Indians to the land. Secretary Kirkwood has ordered the removal of the intruders and their buildings, and they should be thoroughly cleaned out, without regard to the manner of their departure.

EX-GOV. TALBOT in a recent interview in New York reported everything lovely in the camp of the Massachusetts Republicans, who, he said, heartily support President Garfield, have no quarrels, and propose to renominate and elect Gov. Long. This is all true, but it is rumored that Gov. Long is thinking some of stepping down and out. We don't believe, however, that the Republicans of this State will excuse him just yet, and he probably will not decline a pretty unanimous call.

IN pursuance of the Democratic plan to secure the organization of the next House at Washington, if possible, Clerk Adams is said to have placed Mr. Cannon's name on the roll as delegate from Utah, in place of Mr. Campbell, who holds the Governor's certificate, and whose title to it has been affirmed by the United States courts. If the clerk of the House can make and unmake members after this fashion at his own sweet will, there will be no difficulty about securing as large a Democratic majority as may be desired.

COL. HIGGINSON on Monday resigned his position as a member of the Legislative committee now sitting at the State House to revise the revised statutes, giving two reasons for his action—one, a lack of time, on account of other engagements, and the other, that he believes the committee too large to do its work rapidly and efficiently. This voluntary retirement from a "soft" place is a rare occurrence, and it is safe to say that his example will not be imitated by other members of the committee, while there are a good many of our legislators who will feel provoked that he did not resign in season to give them a chance to be put in his place.

THERE has been a lively struggle in New Hampshire to determine whether the present Legislature should elect a U. S. Senator for the term beginning March 4, 1883, or leave it to the next Legislature, which will not meet until June, 1883. The State Supreme Court was appealed to, and decided that the present Legislature should attend to the duty, but a majority of the House were in favor of postponement, and so the election will go over for two years. The delay is considered unfavorable for Senator Rollins's prospects of a re-election, while it may result in a break in the Republican party, a good deal of bitterness having been developed in the strife.

GEN. GRANT spoke his mind freely to a Chicago reporter last Sunday on the Conkling matter, and eulogized the ex-Senator very highly. "I am with Conkling and Platt," he said, and he repeated his previous statement that the President had insulted Conkling, and the Senate had slighted him. He expressed his approval of "senatorial courtesy" in its broadest sense, saying: "When the President makes an appointment in any State and it fails to elicit the approval of the two senators from that State, the matter ends there and the nomination is rejected. If the Republican senators from any State object to any nomination the rest of the party is expected to support them in the matter without exception." If he was not so evidently sincere, this might be taken as a pleasant bit of sarcasm, in view of Grant's record on this point. He never hesitated a moment about riding in the roughest of rough-shod manners over the wishes of senators with whom he was not en rapport, when he occupied the White House. Gen. Grant used to have a wide reputation as the "American sphinx," rarely opening his mouth, and then only briefly and sensibly. Many of his best friends are seriously regretting that he was ever persuaded to open it any further.

LOCAL NOTICES.

W. R. Milligan's shoe store is the place to buy a pair of light shoes for Summer wear.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

These are the longest days of the year.

Some fine October weather this week.

The frame of A. H. Willis's new house is up and inclosed.

The Weeks House stable sheds have been enlarged and newly shingled.

Louis E. Chandler is off on a two-weeks' vacation trip to Mooers, N. Y.

Rev. Henry C. Haskell preached at the Congregational church last Sabbath.

The acts and resolves are now ready for distribution at the town clerk's office.

H. P. and J. S. Holden arrived home from their western trip last Saturday night.

Henry Tisch's house on Thorndike street has been adorned with a fresh coat of paint by the painters.

Rev. Mr. Hastings of Belchertown preached at the Baptist church last Sunday, in exchange with Rev. Mr. Russell.

Rev. Lester Williams of West Springfield will supply the Baptist pulpits at Three Rivers and Palmer to-morrow.

The rale ould giniwine Summer begins next Tuesday, according to the almanac. That is just what we want.

S. W. French and H. H. Paine were drawn as jurors at the civil term of the superior court now in session in Springfield.

Thomas Kenyon of England gave a temperance address at the Congregational church last Sunday afternoon to a small audience.

A slight frost was reported in one or two localities outside the village Thursday morning, but it was not heavy enough to do any harm.

Barr's ice crean, with cake, will be served by the ladies of the Baptist society at their social in the church vestry next Wednesday evening.

The high school closes next week Friday, but the graduating exercises will not be held until the following Monday afternoon, when they will take place at Wales Hall.

A man drove through Main street the other day nicely wrapped in a buffalo robe, and nobody seemed to think he looked uncomfortable, even though it was the middle of June.

The Hampden county bar met this week to consider the question of a petition for the expulsion of A. R. Barker, but postponed action until after his trial on the charge of fraud.

To-morrow will be observed as children's Sunday at the Universalist church. Rev. C. H. Eaton will preach in the morning, and in the evening there will be a concert by the Sunday school.

This is the "month of roses," but the cold rains of the past two or three weeks have put them back somewhat. A few days of warm sunshine, however, will bring them out in all their beauty.

A new six-inch iron penstock is being put in at the carpet mill, in place of the old wooden one. The mill had to shut down a while Wednesday afternoon, on account of muddy water.

Lawyer Strong has made an addition of 15 feet to his barn opposite the park, to accommodate his increasing crops, and is clapboarding the whole, making substantially a new barn of it.

The assessors have completed their rounds, and are now footing up their figures, preparatory to making the assessments. The rate of taxation will probably be somewhat higher than it was last year.

Did you see the eclipse Sunday morning? The clouds kindly cleared the way for an unobstructed view of the performance, which passed off without any hitch, according to the programme previously announced.

Our village is to lose another of its faithful and successful teachers, in the person of Miss Lavinia M. Newell, who has had charge of the primary school for several years, but has now resigned, and will move to Boston.

A party of Mr. and Mrs. C. T. Brainerd's friends met at their house Tuesday evening, to help them celebrate the 10th anniversary of their wedding, presenting them with an elegant silver ice pitcher and goblet, and other gifts.

The ladies of the Methodist society at Four Corners are preparing for their annual strawberry festival, which will be held at the town hall next Wednesday evening. Free teams will be run from the different villages, as usual.

Judge Robinson has constructed a silo at his farm east of the village, and is now filling it with rye, which he cuts up by horse power. He contemplates making another one for his fodder corn, and C. T. Brainerd also proposes to build one.

The ladies of the Congregational society had their annual strawberry festival Wednesday evening, at the house of J. B. Shaw. The band were present and furnished some excellent music, and the net proceeds of the evening were about $30.

J. W. Weeks takes his barge to Belchertown next Tuesday, to assist at the reunion of the 10th Mass. regiment to be held there that day. He will carry up a party of about thirty if the day is fair, and will have as "nobby" a turn-out as can be found, we venture to say.

The face of Dame Nature has been washed as "clean as a whistle" by the recent rains. The hills and valleys around us never looked brighter or more attractive than at the present time, and even the voices of the birds seem fresher and sweeter for the clouds and rains we have had.

Preparations are being made for the building of the addition to the school house in this village, which it is intended to have ready for occupancy Sept. 1st. D. A. Hoag has the contract for the work, which will cost, with the necessary changes in the old building, about $3000.

We received a call on Wednesday from G. L. Goodwill, of Adams county, Iowa, on his way to Ware for a visit with his son-in-law, Daniel Sandford. Mr. Goodwill is a native of Monson, but moved to Iowa 25 years ago. He will remain east through the summer, visiting his old friends in this section.

During the term just closed, the following scholars in the village were not absent nor tardy: Primary school—Charles Kempton, Ezra Kempton, Bridget Ann Murphy, Charles Studley, Edwin Shanks, Lizzie Wassum, Emma Duplissis. Second intermediate—Mary Thompson, Alfred Millard, Bertie Hunt, Frank Roach.

Hampden chapter of Royal Arch Masons installed these officers Wednesday evening: H. P. J. B. Shaw; K., H. H. Sanders; S., A. A. Barker; treasurer, A. H. Willis; secretary, C.W. Cross; C. H., George Robinson; P. S., A. Pinney; R. A. C., S. H. Hellyar; M. 3 V., O. P. Allen; M. 2 V., F. G. Sedgwick; M. 1 V., J. B. Leedham; chaplain, E. L. Davis; tyler, S. W. Shumway.

Less than a hundred people ventured out to the circus last week Friday afternoon, on account of the storm, and in the evening there were only about 200 present. The covering of the menagerie tent was torn in two by the high wind in the forenoon, and the tent was taken down, that part of the show being dispensed with. It was not much of a loss, as there were only about half a dozen cages. The ring show was very fair.

Palmer now has what seems to be a live village improvement association, which certainly need not die for want of work. They have commenced by looking after the signboards and obsolete sidewalks. Any one who has had occasion to spend an hour or more at the depot, will hope that their efforts to secure an improvement and beautifying of the unsightly railroad square may be abundantly successful.—North Brookfield Journal.

Mizpah chapter of the Golden Rule Alliance was instituted in this village Thursday evening by Supreme Deputy T. C. Russell, and the following officers installed: Judge, E. J. Wood; associate judge, H. S. Ward; advocate, Dr. J. K. Warren; past judge, O. P. Allen; scribe, Mrs. O. P. Allen; collector, George F. Brown; treasurer, H. G. Loomis; chaplain, S. Edgerton; guide, Jerome Calkins; warden, Mrs. Hannah Edgerton; sentry, Mrs. Alice Ward; examining surgeon, Dr. J. K. Warren.

George Robinson—not our respected judge, but another sort of a man altogether—hired a team at Marcy's stable some two years ago to go to Ware, but went in another direction and disappeared, the team being subsequently found in a Springfield stable. Robinson went off into York State, and got into Sing Sing for forgery. He was released recently, and Sheriff Palmer, hearing that he was in Springfield, went in and found him, and brought him out here Wednesday, but rather than go to trial Robinson settled up by paying $42, and was released.

Mary Wallace conducted herself in such a lewd manner with some of the circus men last week Friday that Sheriff Palmer took her to task for it, whereupon she became exceedingly loud and coarse in her remarks, and was locked up, though not until she had made a stout resistance with teeth and nails. She was brought before the district court Saturday morning and sentenced to the woman's prison at Sherborn for a year, but was so indecent in her comments that the judge reconsidered his sentence, and made it fifteen months. She then quieted down, and will have ample time now in which to quietly meditate upon the error of her ways.

Principal Whiting of the high school has arranged for an entertainment at Wales Hall on Monday evening, June 27th, to consist of readings by Prof. George N. Cross of North Andover, with music, etc. Mr. Cross is an old classmate of Mr. Whiting's, and an elocutionist of great power. The object of the entertainment is to procure funds for the purchase of a piano for the high school, there being now an opportunity to obtain one on very favorable terms. This is a commendable object, and one which should enlist the sympathy and pecuniary assistance of all, to say nothing of the merits of the entertainment itself, which will be such as to deserve a generous attendance.

Thirty-six women from various parts of the State were present at the meeting of auxiliary visitors at the State Primary School last week Friday, and listened to an interesting paper by Mrs. Sarah B. Earle of Worcester, on the subject of safe amusements for girls placed out from this and the Lancaster schools. This was followed by a discussion, and Mrs. Virginia T. Smith, city missionary at Hartford, gave some valuable hints from her experience, showing the necessity of a constant friendly watchfulness over such girls. After the meeting the visitors made a tour of the institution, and were much pleased with the excellent condition of the children and the buildings, thanks to the thoughtful care of the superintendent, Col. Tufts. There are now about 400 children in the institution. Since the beginning of the present year 113 have been placed in families.

The grand bazar to be held in aid of St. Thomas' church will be opened at Wales Hall next Monday evening by a cantata entitled "Grandpa's Birthday," by the children of the Sunday school, under the direction of Miss Carberry of Worcester. There will also be a farce, and vocal music by members of the choir of the church and other talent from Springfield, Worcester and Monson. The pastor, Rev. T. J. Sullivan, has been untiring in his efforts to make this concert a success, it being the first of the kind ever given by the children, and everybody will be welcome. The bazar will continue four nights, and in addition to the above there will be dancing every night, with good music, and the usual variety of articles to be disposed of by lottery, among which are a gold watch, barrel of flour, ton of coal, easy chair, etc., and the canvassers have already commenced their duties and are always on hand to give you an opportunity to "take a chance."

At the meeting of the Congregational church Tuesday evening a committee was appointed to wait upon the pastor, Rev. Mr. Fullerton, to see if he could be induced to withdraw his resignation, but were informed that he felt it his duty to adhere to his determination to accept his call to Waltham. It was accordingly voted to so far accede to his request for a dismissal as to submit the matter to a council, and a committee, consisting of Dea. Cowles, Dea. Foster and J. K. Knox, was appointed to unite with the pastor and a committee of the parish in calling a council. The following resolution was offered and unanimously adopted by the church:

WHEREAS, After prayerful consideration, our beloved pastor, Rev. Bradford M. Fullerton, has felt it his duty to place in the hands of this Second Congregational Church of Palmer, Mass., his resignation of the trust reposed in him for more than thirteen years, to accept a call from the Congregational church of Waltham, this State; and, whereas, we, as members of the Second Congregational church of Palmer, Mass., are called upon to consider and pass upon said resignation, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is with profound sorrow we are called upon to sever the relations of pastor and people by the acceptance of the resignation of our dearly beloved brother; and be it

Resolved, That while we greatly deplore the loss from our midst of one whom we have learned both to love and reverence, the prayers of this people will go up continually for his prosperity in his new field of labor, and we trust that he and his will ever cherish the pleasantest recollections of this, their first love.

The parish had a meeting yesterday, to act upon the resignation.

BRIMFIELD.

Rev. D. R. Atkins is a delegate from the Brookfield association to the meeting of the Massachusets general association of Congregational churches, to be held in Springfield next week.

As Dana Buxton was driving with his father on Tuesday evening one of the reins parted, and the horse made a sudden turn into a neighboring yard, capsizing the buggy and throwing but the occupants. Fortunately neither of them were seriously injured.

THREE RIVERS.

C. A. Root proposes to close up his livery business in this place, and will sell his entire stock of horses, carriages, etc., at auction next Wednesday, at 10 o'clock a. m.

In the second intermediate school in this village the following scholars have not been absent during the past term:—Katie Twiss, Richard Twiss, Joseph Willitt, Etta Ruggles, Nettie Milliken. In the first intermediate:—Thomas Martin, Armedas Boudreau. In the primary school: James Sullivan, James Schofield, Mamie Hayes and Rosanna Mahoney.

BELCHERTOWN.

The reunion of the 10th regiment in this place next Tuesday, with Myron P. Walker, its drummer boy, as host, promises to be the finest celebration the town has ever witnessed. The procession forms at 10 o'clock, headed by the Belchertown band. Colts band of Hartford will give a concert on the common in the afternoon, followed by the banquet, and from 4 to 5 Gov. Long will give a reception to the soldiers and citizens at Mr. Walker's house. Col. Beals of Boston has charge of the decorations, and a big turn-out is expected. The New London Northern Railroad will sell tickets from Palmer and Amherst at half fare.

THORNDIKE.

Rev. J. W. Tuck, formerly of this place, has resigned his pastorate of the Westfield Congregational church in Middletown, Ct., where he has been settled for several years.

In the first primary school in this place the following scholars were not absent during the term just closed:—Beatrice Andrews, Katy Lynch, Nellie McCormick, Josie Mannix, Mary Sullivan, Salina Shabot, Vilbon Firkey, Peter Laplante, Henry Shabot, Patsey Sugrue, Patrick Welch. In the second primary school, these scholars were neither absent nor tardy: Willie E. Andrews, Walter P. Bishop, George A. Clark, George W. Clark, Michael Flynn, Freddie Goodreau, George A. Hutchinson, Eugene Sughrue, Bessie M. Edwards, Mary E. Fleming, Mary Gerald.

WARREN.

Town meeting comes to-day.

The firemen gave a festival at the town hall Thursday evening.

Rev. Mr. Sanderson is to preach to the old people a week from next Sabbath.

A good number of people attended the conference of churches at North Brookfield Tuesday and Wednesday.

Mr. Twichell, formerly principal of our high school, is to be married to Mrs. Fannie Homer next Wednesday afternoon.

The Congregational church are to observe next Sabbath as children's day, and in the evening will have a Sabbath school concert.

The Methodists observed children's day last Sabbath, with a sermon by Rev. Mr. Sanderson. The church was handsomely decorated with flowers and singing birds.

The schools in town are to close next week. Most of the teachers are to come back next term. Miss Hill of the intermediate school in the village takes the grammar school, as Mr. Carpenter, the present teacher, is to enter college next Fall. Miss Mary Burbank is to assist in the high school. She is a teacher who stands very high in her profession, and the people are fortunate to secure her services.

BONDVILLE.

John Carmody has bought a house of Thomas Griffin near the M. E. church.

Henry Canterbury is improving the looks of his house by building a piazza on the front side.

E. P. Ball, the engineer who will take charge of the company's new work this season, has moved into the village, and occupies the house formerly owned by W. E. Duncan.

At a meeting of the band the following officers were chosen: Wm. O'Regan, president; J. F. Hayes, vice president; George Aldrich, treasurer; Mitchell Johnson, leader.

The ladies' society will give their annual strawberry and ice cream festival next Wednesday evening, at the vestry of the M. E. church. By special request, the comic operetta "Penelope," which was rendered last Winter, will be repeated.

Canterbury Bros. seem to have about all they can handle at present. They have nearly finished the parsonage, have commenced work on two houses at Three Rivers, and are about starting on the three two-tenement houses for the Boston Duck Co. G. W. Canterbury, the senior partner, will build him a cottage, and also one for J. F. Hayes, as soon as he can get to it.

McClallan & Co. have got nicely started on the canal, and have about forty men at work here, and another force in the quarry where they are getting out some very nice stone. They have the bank wall between the dam and the new bridge nearly finished. It is almost impossible for them to find boarding places for their help, and they think they will be obliged to build a temporary boarding house.

MONSON.

Schools close next week Friday.

Mr. and Mrs. F. E. Morris have returned from their western trip.

Hon. S. F. Cushman is making extensive improvements on his Main street residence.

Theodore Reynolds is on his annual wool buying pilgrimage, with headquarters at Owasso, Mich.

The grounds about the Congregational church are to be further improved by flower beds and shrubs.

Charles F. Jordan has gone to Poughkeepsie, N. Y., to take a full course at Eastman's business college.

Joseph Williams proposes to build a new house immediately, in place of the one recently destroyed by fire.

A local Waltonian came in the other night with a string of 78 trout. He just went around getting samples, you know.

Hamilton White is moving his tin shop to the east side of his dwelling house, and will put up a nice cottage in its place.

A new telephone line is in operation, with the following subscribers: Dr. Geo. E. Fuller, Monson House, Charles R. Dudley, Green's Hotel, and G. W. Burdick.

George E. Grout has bought the dwelling house of Amasa King, on Main street, and will remove thither his jewelry business. Flynt & Co. will occupy the store now occupied by Mr. Grout. Mr. King is to live with his son, George M. King, on High street.

Messrs. Josselyn & Newton have leased Evergreen Park (State Line) for the season, and are now ready to accommodate boating, fishing, dancing and picnic parties in a satisfactory manner. Last Friday evening they had a fish fry, clam bake, and dancing party. On July 4th the attractions will be numerous and popular.

Main street having become very low, and the surface completely worn out, an experiment is being tried by subsoiling a portion in front of the Methodist church, removing about 18 inches of the top, filling with stone and coarse gravel, and then replacing the surface. Should the experiment prove successful, the entire street will be served in the same manner.

Marvin Bradway, for many years foreman of one of the departments in the straw goods manufactory of Merrick, Fay & Co., severs his connection with that firm July 1st, and will engage in the furniture business, for which it would seem that this town might afford an excellent opening. He proposes to build a shop and warehouse on Bridge streat, near his residence.

The operetta "Cobwebs," now in preparation by the school children of this place, under the direction of Miss E. J. Winslow of Springfield, promises to be a very pleasing and successful affair. Miss Winslow has had large experience in this kind of work, and infuses her own enthusiasm into the large chorus of children who, in appropriate costumes, are to take the different parts of insects, fairies, etc. The operetta will be given in about two weeks.

The 77th exhibition of Monson Academy took place Tuesday at Central Hall. Eleven speakers were presented in selections of varied merit, not all adapted to the speakers, and rather coolly received by the audience. The Harmony Orchestra furnished excellent music. In the evening the usual reunion took place at Academy hall. On Monday the examinations on the work of the term were held, and were very successful. The new principal, Prof. Cummings, has introduced the best of the improved methods in teaching the classics, and his students who are fitting for college bore the examination well. The testimony of gentlemen from abroad is emphatic in praise of the school under its present teachers. The English department is larger than the classical at present, and is well taught. There were examinations in arithmetic, algebra, natural history, English literature, and French. In Algebra and English literature especially there were fine classes that showed good progress.

The trustees, or part of them, held their annual meeting Monday evening, adjourning for one week. The full corps of teachers for next year is not yet decided on, except that Prof. Cummings will continue as principal, and probably Miss Eaton as assistant in the ladies' department. Arrangements are in progress to secure board, at reasonable rates, for those from abroad, and the prospects for the fall term are excellent.

WARE AND VICINITY.

Mrs. A. Rugg has a cactus that has had 95 buds and blossoms on it at one time.

Twenty-eight of our business men, old and young, played a game of old-fashioned round ball on Thursday afternoon.

The Otis company's counting room building has had some neat hoods placed over the several entrances, and received a coat of paint, greatly improving its appearance.

The walls of the new bank building are rapidly going up. If it is to make as fine an appearance as is at present indicated, it would be nice for the old and new to change places, bringing the new to the front.

The Ware branch of the Irish land league are to hold a picnic at Coney's grove the Fourth of July, with the usual amusements of dancing, racing, swinging, etc. The dancing platform and the tables are to be covered for protection in case of showers.

King Solomon's R. A. Chapter have invited the members of chapters from neighboring towns to their meeting on the 23d inst., when after the work, they will have a supper at the Hampshire house. This will be the last meeting probably until some time in September.

The valuation of Ware this year is a little over $2,000,000, an increase of about $200,000 from last year. The rate of taxation is $16 per thousand. Some of the largest taxpayers are: C. H. Stevens, $1728; William Hyde, $1875; Miss S. Sage, $800; Lewis N. Gilbert, $512.

No more books are to be given out from the library after to-day until after the dedication of the new building, which is probably to take place about the first of July, and all books are requested to be returned by June 25. Rev. A. E. P. Perkins, D. D., is to deliver the address at the dedication.

At the annual meeting of the Ware savings bank the following officers were elected: President, William Hyde; vice presidents, C. A. Stevens, L. N. Gilbert, William Mixter; trustees, Nathan Richardson, D. P. Billings, Calvin Hitchcock, C. D. Gilbert, Wm. Hyde, Otis Lane; committee on investments, W. S. Hyde, William Mixter, Nathan Richardson, Calvin Hitchcock.

The graduating exercises of the class of '81 of the high school are to take place at the East Congregational church on Wednesday evening, June 29, at 7.45 o'clock, with the following programme: Salutatory, Belle B. Naylor; declamation, W. D. Rich; essay, "What shall we do with our girls?" Ida M. Bond; dissertation, "Beaconsfield," A. E. Snow; Dissertation, "Spiders," W. B. Eddy; essay, "Ancient History," Clara M. Coney; debate, "Resolved, That the Sciences should supersede the Classics," aff., Fred. Haight, neg., M. T. Higgins; declamation, H. E. Thurman; classical essay, withs ibylline utterances, Katie Canavan; history, with valedictory address, Ida R. Naylor. The exercises will be interspersed with music, and followed by the presentation of diplomas.

MISHAPS AND MISDEEDS.

The nephew of ex-Secretary Robeson of New Jersey was killed by lightning at Hunnewell, Kan., last Sunday. A farmer while crossing a bridge near Peoria, Ill., was killed the same day. Three ladies while riding during a thunder storm in Montague county, Tex., Thursday evening week, were struck by lightning and killed.

Charles Putnam of Dalton, 26 years old, invited Agnes Revoid, aged 14, to ride with him to Adams last Sunday afternoon. On the way Putnam, according to the girl's story, drove into the woods and outraged her twice, then proceeding on his journey. He was arrested, and claims that it is a blackmailing game.

Three negroes in Sevier county, Ark., robbed and murdered an old man a few days ago, while helping him over a swollen creek. The murder was discovered and the murderers promptly lynched.

A man at Bennington, Vt., went out on the roof of his portico early Sunday morning to see the eclipse, but fell asleep and rolled off to the ground, 20 feet below, receiving dangerous injuries.

Twelve men were badly scalded by a boiler explosion at Pottsville, Pa., last week Friday, three of them fatally. The explosion was caused by careless neglect of a leakage.

A woman, her two children and a brother-in-law were killed in attempting to cross the railroad track at Raymond, Ill., in front of an approaching train, Sunday night.

A negro in jail at Greensboro, N. C., for raping a white woman, was taken out by a party of men during the eclipse of the moon Sunday morning, and hanged.

The boiler of a wrecking steamer exploded last Sunday off the signal station at Cape Henry, Va., killing the fireman and terribly scalding two others.

A little girl 10 years old walked off an express train near Royalton, Vt., a few nights ago, while asleep, and was fatally injured.

Two men at Rutland, Vt., fell 40 feet from a breaking scaffold last week Friday, and were fatally injured.

J. Riel's 8-years-old boy was drowned in the canal at Chicopee Falls last week Friday.

It is said that the check given by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company in payment for the Philadelphia, Wilmington and Baltimore road, $14,949,052, was the largest ever drawn in this country.

STORMS AND CYCLONES.

Some of the Western States have been visited by storms of great violence during the past week, which have destroyed vast amounts of property, while some 60 or 70 lives have been lost. In Minnesota last Saturday much of the grain throughout the State was prostrated and some of it destroyed by the heavy rain. Some buildings were blown down, others forced out of plumb, and trees uprooted, and three persons were killed by falling buildings. Five inches of rain fell in an hour at Blue Earth City. In Missouri many buildings were blown down, and it is estimated that over sixty people, and hundreds of horses and cattle, were killed. Twelve lives were lost in Andrews county, and nearly fifty at Flat Springs and King City.

Central and Western Iowa were visited Sunday afternoon and evening by one of the most destructive storms ever known in that region. Hail stones are reported to have fallen as large as door knobs, weighing over a pound each, and to have drifted in places two or three feet deep. Calves, hogs and poultry were killed by them, and cattle bruised severely. Thousands of panes of glass were broken in many towns, and at Peoria the stones even crushed through weather boards and plastering, while the growing crops were in many places obliterated. A number of buildings were destroyed and a few lives lost. Sad havoc was also made in Kansas the same day, horses and cattle near Olivet being hurled through the air and killed, buildings destroyed and several persons killed and injured. Five lives were lost in Solomon valley Thursday week by another storm, which also wrecked a number of buildings; and on Friday the town of Americus, Kansas, was almost totally destroyed by a tornado.

The recent heavy rains have caused the Ohio river to inundate the country for a distance of ninety miles, destroying about half a million dollars' worth of property.

The salesmen were let off on payment of $500 by two of them and $250 by the other one, but the shipping clerk, J. C. Easterbrook, could not raise his $500, and has been locked up.

A bad break occurred in the Erie Canal near Albion, N.Y., Sunday morning, carrying off bridges, fences, etc., and nearly emptying the canal; loss, about $30,000.

July Magazines.

Harper's Magazine for July is an unusually interesting number. Mrs. Champney continues a charming description of Oporto and the Oporto vineyards, with beautiful illustrations. Mrs. Annie Howells Frechette describes the life of Lord Lorne and the Princess Louise at Rideau Hall—giving all those details in which the public has a legitimate interest. This article is illustrated with excellent portraits of the Marquis and his royal consort, and with interior views of Rideau Hall never before published. T. B. Aldrich contributes the first part of an article entitled "A Day in Africa:" a description of one day's adventures in Tangier, with fine illustrations. Samuel Adams Drake's "White Mountains" series, illustrated by W. H. Gibson, is continued. E. Mason contributes a paper on "Old Dutch Masters"—including Douw, Metzu, and Mieris, with portraits, and engravings from their paintings. Asa H. Waters gives an interesting biographical sketch of Thomas Blanchard, the inventor of the eccentric lathe, with a portrait. A patriotic poem by Julia C. R. Dorr, entitled "The Parson's Daughter," is finely illustrated; and Mr. Abbey is represented by another of his characteristic full-page illustrations of Herrick's poems. George H. Holden contributes a sketch entitled "Hawthorne among his Friends," containing a characteristic and hitherto unpublished letter written by Hawthorne to his friend William B. Pike. Among the especially timely articles are "Railroads in Mexico," by F. E. Prendergast; and "A Bicycle Era," by Edward Howland. Dr. S. Austen Pearce contributes a curious musical paper, entitled "The Music of the Spheres." The serial novels by Miss Woolson and Thomas Hardy are continued; and short stories are contributed by Edward Everett Hale and Arthur Hastings. Among the poems of the number are two especially noticeable—"First Appearance at the Odeon," by the late James T. Fields; and "My June Boy," by Christine Chaplin Brush. The editorial departments are, as usual, full of entertaining and instructive matter for all classes of readers.

Good Company ($3.00 a year; Springfield, Mass.) for May has a long installment of "In the Land of the Midnight Sun," by Lieutenant Frederick Schwatka, commander of the Franklin Search Expedition, in which he begins the account of the great Arctic sledge journey, the longest both in distance and time ever attempted. It was absent from its base eleven months and a half and traversed a distance of over 3,200 miles. "Recollections of My Childhood in Old Japan" is by a native of that country, a young lady now pursuing her education in the United States. It is perhaps a more detailed account of life in a Japanese family under the old regime than has been before published. The fiction includes stories by Mrs. Rebecca Harding Davis and Miss Katharine Carrington, and an installment of "Mildred's Caprice," the new serial story begun in the last number. Mrs. Gen. Lew Wallace has "Among the Pueblos," a subject on which her residence in the southwest renders her competent authority. Octave Thanet under the form of a colloquy discusses "Creeds" with characteristic thoroughness. Mrs. Lizzie W Champney writes of "The Alhambra and its Master-Magician." One of the poems has for its subject Old Abe, the famous war-eagle of a Wisconsin regiment, that died recently. Other articles and poems round out the number.

Recent political events give especial timeliness to the consideration of the growth of the machine, and the most effective way to "smash" it. It is announced that the July number of Scribner will contain the first of a series of important papers entitled "The People's Problem," discussing the subject in a new and vigorous way. The writer, Mr. Albert Stickney, is a well-known lawyer of New York City, and though his remedies may be found radical, they have the advantage of being those of one who has given thorough study to the subject in its historical and moral aspects.

A remarkable revival is in progress at Indianapolis, Ind. Rev. Thomas Harrison, the boy evangelist, began work in the city eleven weeks ago, and on Monday the number of conversions was reported at 2200. The larger churches are crowded to their utmost capacity, and hundreds are unable to gain admittance. Sixteen churches are now open for revival work, and the use of all the theatres has been tendered for Sunday services.

The village of Ludington, Mich., situated on Lake Michigan, was visited by a most destructive conflagration Saturday night, which nearly wiped out the entire business portion of the town. Loss, $200,000. The village is doubly afflicted, an epidemic of diphtheria having recently carried off 120 children, out of a population of 4000.

Illinois has a new law relating to deadly weapons. It prohibits the sale, gift, loan, or barter to a minor of any weapon capable of concealment on the person, and requires dealers in such weapons to keep a complete registry of their sales for public inspection. The estimated revenues of the post office department for the next fiscal year were $1,376,642,55 less than the appropriation; but the star route exposure has already effected a saving of one million per year, and it is expected more than enough will be saved to cover the entire deficiency.

A Pittsburg, Pa., paper states that at least 20 iron furnaces in the Lehigh and Schuylkill Valleys alone, which were in active operation a fortnight ago, will have gone out of blast within a few days, and that the present condition of the iron trade warrants grave apprehensions.

FOSKET & HOLBROOK.

TO THE HONORABLE THE JUDGE OF THE PROBATE COURT IN AND FOR THE COUNTY OF HAMPDEN.

Respectfully represents your petitioner, David E. Tenney of Palmer, in said county, that on the third day of March, A. D. 1872, Eunice B. Durkee of said Palmer, made her last will and testament, and on the first day of January, A. D. 1875, made a codicil thereto—that said Eunice B. Durkee departed this life on the 30th day of March, A. D. 1879, and on the first Tuesday of April following the said will and codicil were admitted to probate by said court, and letters testamentary issued to your petitioner, the executor therein named.

That among the provisions of said last will and testament are the following, as by reference to a certified copy of said will in said court to be produced will more fully appear, to wit:

"Seventh—I will and bequeath to my sister, Nabby Ellis, the rest of my household effects, to be divided as I shall designate to her."

"Eighth—I will to the Foreign Missions of the Baptist Missionary Union and to the Emancipated of the Baptist Home Mission Society formed in New York in 1832, all the remainder and residue of my esthate, to be equally divided between the two missions."

That after the death of said testatrix there were found with said will, in the handwriting of said testatrix, and one bearing her signature, two certain papers, copies of which are hereto annexed, marked "A" and "B." That within about one year from the date of said letters testamentary and before any of the effects named in said will to be by her distributed, as herein set forth, were delivered to her, she, the said Nabby Ellis, died, and no administration has ever been taken on her estate, and said effects, amounting according to the inventory of the estate of said testatrix to about $89.30, still remain in the hands of your petitioner.

That your petitioner is not acquainted with any society and can learn of none bearing the precise name of either of those named in the eighth clause of said will hereinbefore set forth, but is informed and believes that the society therein called the Baptist Home Mission Society was intended by said testatrix to be the American Baptist Home Mission Society, a society formed in New York in the year 1832, and the society therein called the Baptist Missionary Union was intended by said testatrix to be the American Baptist Missionary Union. That the heirs-at-law of said testatrix at the time of her decease were Nabby Ellis of Ware, Mass., a sister of said testatrix since deceased, E. B. Ellis of Blandford, A. Parkhurst Ellis of Hardwick, both in this Commonwealth, John G. Ellis of Melrose, Minnesota, and Susan S. Town of Rindge, New Hampshire, children of Lucy Ellis, a deceased sister. That the heirs-at-law of said Nabby Ellis are A. Goodrich Ellis and Mary E. Pierce, both of said Ware, Abby B. Anderson of Warren, Mass., and Thomas D. Ellis of Bridgeport, Connecticut.

That the property in the hands of your petitioner, other than said $89.30, to be distributed under said will, amounts to $1617.87, as shown by the final account of your petitioner now on file in said court.

That at least two of the heirs-at-law of said Nabby Ellis now interested in said estate claim that said residuary legacy is void on the ground that the legatees therein named have no legal existence, and one of them has further claimed that said papers, copies of which are hereto annexed, marked "A" and "B," should have no legal effect in the distribution of that portion of the testatrix estate which is bequeathed in the seventh clause of said will, hereinbefore set forth, on the ground that the same were not duly executed as a part of said will. That your petitioner is in doubt as to who is legally entitled to receive the money and other effects now in his hands.

Wherefore he prays your honor that all persons interested in said estate may be cited to appear before said court at the term thereof named in such citation, and that after due hearing in the premises your honor will determine to whom the estate now remaining in his hands belongs, and decree a distribution thereof among such persons or corporations as are entitled thereto, appoint all necessary trustees, and make such other orders and decrees as your honor may deem meet and proper.
DAVID E. TENNEY.
By his Attorney, C. L. GARDNER.
Dated June 15th, 1881.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPDEN SS. PROBATE COURT.—On the foregoing petition all persons and corporations interested are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be holden at Springfield in said county of Hampden, on the first Tuesday of July next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any they have, against the same. And the petitioner is ordered to serve this citation by delivering a copy of said petition and of this order to each person and corporation interested that can be found within the State, fourteen days at least before said court; and if any one cannot be so found, by also publishing the same in the Palmer Journal, a newspaper printed at Palmer, once in each week for three weeks at least before said court, and by mailing a copy thereof to the principal office of each such corporation and to the place of residence last known to the petitioner of each such person not found within the State, fourteen days at least before said court.

Witness, William S. Shurtleff, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this sixteenth day of June, in the year eighteen hundred and eighty-one.

A STORM AT THE SIGNAL STATION, MT. WASHINGTON.

Noticing that the sides of the summit were strewed with boards, beams, and debris of all sorts, my guide explained that what I saw was the result of the great January gale, which had demolished the large shed used as an engine-house, scattering the loose fragments far and wide. I begged him to give me his recollection of it.

"During the forenoon preceding the gale we observed nothing very unusual; but the clouds kept sinking and sinking until the summit was quite above them. Late in the afternoon my comrade, Sergeant M——, came to where I was lying abed sick, and said, "There is going to be the devil to pay, so I guess I'll make everything snug."

"By nine in the evening the wind had increased to one hundred miles an hour, with heavy sleet. At midnight the velocity of the storm was one hundred and twenty miles, and the exposed thermometer recorded twenty-four degrees below zero. With the stove red, we could hardly get it above freezing inside the house. Water froze within three feet of the fire— in fact, where you are now sitting.

"At this time the noise outside was deafening. About one o'clock the wind rose to one hundred and fifty miles. It was now blowing a hurricane. The wind, gathering up all the loose ice of the mountain, dashed it against the house with one continued roar. I lay wondering how long the building would stand this, when all at once came a crash. M—— shouted to me to get up; but I had tumbled out in a hurry on hearing the glass go. You see, I was dressed, to keep myself warm in bed.

"Our united efforts were hardly equal to closing the storm shutters from the inside, but we finally succeeded, though the lights went out when the wind came in, and we worked in the dark."

He rose to show me how the shutters, of thick oak, were first secured by an iron bar, and secondly by strong wooden buttons firmly screwed in the window-frame.

"We had scarcely done this," resumed Doyle, "and were shivering over the fire, when a heavy gust of wind again burst open the shutters, as easily as if they had never been fastened at all. We sprang to our feet. After a hard tussle we again secured the windows, by nailing a cleat to the floor, against which one end of a board was fixed, using the other end as a lever. You understand?" I nodded. "Well, even then it was all we could do to force the shutters back into place. But we did it. We had to do it.

"The rest of the night was passed in momentary expectation that the building would be blown into Tuckerman's, and we with it. At four o'clock in the morning the wind registered one hundred and eighty-six miles. It had shifted then from east to northeast. From this time it steadily fell to ten miles, at nine o'clock. This was the biggest blow ever experienced on the mountain."

"Suppose the house had gone, and the hotel stood fast, could you have effected an entrance into the hotel?" I asked.

"We could not have faced the gale."

"Not for a hundred feet? not in a matter of life and death?"

"Impossible. The wind would have lifted us from our feet like bags of wool. We would have been dashed against the rocks, and smashed like egg-shells," was the quiet reply.

"And so for some hours you expected to be swept into eternity?"

"We did what we could. Each wrapped himself in blankets and quilts, binding these tightly around him with ropes, to which were attached bars of iron, so that if the house went by the board we might stand a chance —a slim chance—of anchoring somewhere, somehow."

Somewhere, indeed!

When, on the following morning, I busied myself getting ready to go down the mountain, I heard a profound sigh, followed by some half-audible words, proceeding from the adjoining room. These words rang in my ears all that day:

"Ah, this horrible solitude!"—Harper's for July.

Dust has already begun to accumulate on the revised edition of the Bible. It must expect to share the fate of its predecessor.

Our good deeds rarely cause much gossip among our fellow-citizens, but our evil ones leap immediately into notoriety.

It is not until we have passed through the furnace that we are made to know how much dross was in our composition.

The phrase "survival of the fittest" is but a positive rendering of the negative proposition, "The devil take the hindmost."

Hypocrisy is a homage which vice pays to virtue.

HAUNTED ME.—A workingman says: "Debt, poverty and suffering haunted me for years, caused by a sick family and large bills for doctoring, which did no good. I was completely discouraged, until one year ago, by the advice of my pastor, I procured Hop Bitters and commenced their use, and in one month we were all well, and none of us have been sick a day since; and I want to say to all poor men, you can keep your families well a year with Hop Bitters for less than one doctor's visit will cost."—Christian Advocate.

TAKE
SIMMONS Liver Regulator!

ASK the recovered dyspeptics, bilious sufferers, victims of fever and ague, the mercurial diseased patient how they recovered their health, cheerful spirits and good appetite; they will tell you by taking Simmons Liver Regulator.

THE CHEAPEST, PUREST AND BEST FAMILY MEDICINE IN THE WORLD for DYSPEPSIA, CONSTIPATION, Jaundice, Bilious Attacks, SICK HEADACHE, Colic, Depression of Spirits, SOUR STOMACH, Heart Burn, &c., &c.

This unrivaled Southern remedy is warranted not to contain a single particle of Mercury, or any injurious mineral substance, but is

PURELY VEGETABLE,

containing those Southern roots and herbs, which an All-Wise Providence has placed in countries where Liver Diseases mostly prevail. It will cure all diseases caused by derangement of the Liver and Bowels.

The SYMPTOMS of Liver Complaint are a bitter or bad taste in the mouth; pain in the back, sides or joints, often mistaken for Rheumatism; SOUR STOMACH; loss of appetite; bowels alternately costive and lax; headache; loss of memory, with a painful sensation of having failed to do something which ought to have been done; debility; low spirits, a thick yellow appearance of the skin and eyes, a dry cough often mistaken for Consumption. Sometimes many of the symptoms attend the disease, at other times very few; but the LIVER, the largest organ in the body, is generally the seat of the disease, and if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and DEATH will ensue.

"I can recommend as an efficacious remedy for disease of the Liver, Heartburn and Dyspepsia, Simmons Liver Regulator.
LEWIS G. WUNDER, Philadelphia."

"We have tested its virtues personally, and know that for Dyspepsia, Biliousness and Throbbing Headache, it is the best medicine the world ever saw. We have tried forty other remedies before Simmons Liver Regulator, but none of them gave us more than temporary relief; but the Regulator not only relieved but cured us."—Ed. Telegraph and Messenger, Macon, Ga.

The Idyl of the Baggage Man.

With many a curve the trunks I pitch,
With many a shout and sally;
At station, siding, crossing, switch,
On mountain grade or valley.
I heave, I push, I sling, I toss,
With vigorous endeavor,
And men may smile, and men grow cross,
But I sling my trunks forever.

The paper trunk from country town
I balances and dandles;
I turn it once or twice around
And pull out both the handles,
And grumble over traveling bags,
And monstrous sample cases:
But I can smash the maker's brags
Like plaster Paris vases!
They holler, holler as I go,
But they can stop me never,
For they will learn just what I know,
A trunk won't last for ever!

And in and out I wind about,
And here I smash a kiester;
I turn a grip sack inside out
Three times a day at least sir.
I tug, I jerk, I swear, I sweat,
I toss the light valises,
And what's too big to throw, you bet,
I'll fire it 'round in pieces.
They murmur, murmur, everywhere,
But I will heed them never,
For women weep and strong men swear,
I'll claw their trunks forever!

I've cowed the preacher with my wrath,
I scorn the judge's ermine;
And clearing out a rugged path,
I've spilled both brief and sermon;
And books and socks and cards and strings
Too numerous to mention;
And babies' clothes and women's things,
Beyond my comprehension.
I've spilled, I've scattered, and I've slung,
As far as space could sever,
And scatter, scatter, old or young,
I'll scatter things forever.

—Burlington Hawkeye.

WIFE OR SLAVE.

"Ten o'clock, and the lunch-basket not ready to take to the field! As usual!" grunted Farmer Brewster, as he threw himself into a rocking-chair in the kitchen and fanned himself with his straw hat. "A quarter of an hour wasted, very likely, waiting here. Right in the midst of as fine a hay day as any man would wish to see. Now, my mother used to have her lunch ready to the minute whenever we came for it, and I don't see why—"

His jeremiad was checked by the appearance of his wife, who came out of the pantry, tugging along the great lunch basket, almost too heavy for her strength.

Farmer Brewster was a young man, in spite of his grumbling. Only 23 years old, tall, straight, healthy, with blue eyes, rosy cheeks, fair, curly hair and handsome face when it was not darkened as now by a scowl of discontent. An only son, he had inherited a large and handsome farm, clear of mortgage and debt, which supplied all the wants of his household most liberally and gave him a nice little sum of money to deposit in the bank each year. There was no reason why he should be mean, and yet miserly habits were gradually growing upon him far faster than he knew. Nor was there need of grumbling over the household arrangements, since the wife of his choice was a farmer's daughter who knew well how to work, and who had taken delight in setting her home in faultless order when first she came as a bride to the pleasant Brewster place.

The same order reigned still, from garret to cellar of the square old house; but Mrs. Brewster went through her tasks mechanically now, or with a nervous haste and hurry that made them almost unendurable sometimes.

The constant drop of water will wear away a stone; and the constant fault-finding in which her husband saw fit to indulge had nearly worn the patience, the hope and the endurance out of the young wife's heart.

The comfort and happiness of that home hung on a thread, which frayed more and more, hour by hour, under the pain of unmerited blame.

Yet George Brewster saw nothing of this until the morning of which I write.

"There is the lunch and it is exactly five minutes past 10," said Mrs. Brewster, setting the basket down with some emphasis at his feet. "I was delayed that much with the butter. It had to be seen to before the sun got too high."

"My mother always churned before breakfast," observed George, rising slowly to his feet.

His wife said nothing, but the color rose hotly in her cheeks till the lost bloom of her girlhood seemed to have come back again, and she raised her eyes to his with a look that startled him. Very handsome eyes they were—dark, soft, velvety—with a world of love and tenderness in their depth. Yet now they met his own coldly and sternly, with such an expression that he exclaimed:

"Good gracious! Letty. You look as if you hated me!"

"I'm afraid I do," was the astounding reply.

And with a swift glance at the clock, Letty hurried down cellar with a knife and pan to make preparations for dinner for six hungry haymakers.

"Afraid she hates me! my wife! she that was Letty Glover!" muttered he to himself in his bewilderment. "Why, what on earth—! She must be going crazy or something or other."

"Letty!" he called at the cellar door.

"It is ten minutes past 10," she answered from the depths of the cellar. "If I don't see about dinner now it won't be on the table at 12 to the minute, as your mother used to have it. I can't come."

"Well, if this doesn't beat all!" said he to the Maltese and white cat who ascended from the cellar and rubbed herself against his legs.

A shout from the hay-field roused him to a recollection of the day's business.

He went out and dispensed the treasures of his basket among the hungry men, who praised Letty's excellent cooking with every mouthful they swallowed.

"It is enough to make an old bachelor like me sit down and cry to eat such raspberry shortcake as that," said Solomon Wyse, wiping the crumbs of the feast from his lips before he drank hard cider from the jug. "Tell you what it is, George, you drew a prize when you went courting."

"So he did! And here's her good health," chimed in another mower, as he took up the jug.

George assented vaguely.

They were talking of his wife—his wife, who was afraid she hated him.

Never had the two hours between lunch and dinner dragged so slowly.

As he rode round and round the field with the sharp rattle of the mowing-machine he guided in his care, his mind was continually busy with Letty's looks and her words, and his eyes turned often toward the cream-colored farm-house, behind whose spruce green blinds his wife was busy preparing dinner.

"I used to think how happy I should be if I ever persuaded her to come here," he thought. "It is two years—why I declare, it is two years this very day that we were married! I wonder if she remembers it! But it is not very likely, when she says she is afraid she hates me!"

Did she remember? Ah, in that very remembrance lay the sting.

All that morning, while she got breakfast at five o'clock, and washed the dishes, swept the rooms, made beds, churned butter, and prepared a hearty lunch for six men, her heart turned back to that other morning, 24 months ago, when the bright-eyed country maiden rose at four o'clock to complete her preparations for her wedding day.

How good, how kind, how handsome her George was then. How his eyes followed her; how his love blessed her. Was it all her fault that the beauty and bloom of life had departed in those two short years? Looking back, she could see no day in which she had not at least tried to do her duty. And looking in her glass she saw how the light and glow of youth had passed from her face while accomplishing the task uncheered by the approval of the man she loved.

"George has kept his color and his good looks because his work lies out of doors," she mused, "but I have worked in this old kitchen until I look old enough to be his mother. His mother"—she paused with a bitter laugh—"I almost wish I was his mother, then he would be suited with what I did."

Noon came. The 12 o'clock whistle sounded sharp and clear from the factory in the village a mile away; and before the whistle ceased a little figure stepped out on the side porch of the Brewster house and blew a horn.

"There's a woman for you," said Solomon Wyse, admiringly. "Dinner to the minute—and won't it be a good one?"

The dinner was indeed a success. Every dainty of the season and the farm was there, skillfully cooked and neatly served on a table in the cool dining-room—a table covered with a snowy cloth fresh from its fold, and glass and china. In the center of the table stood a great china bowl full of red roses that perfumed the room. Her cheeks were red, her eyes shone dark and bright, and her words and smiles were ready—for every one—save George. As he sat, grave and silent, at the foot of the table, he looked at her wonderingly. She wore a dress of silver gray alpaca that had been a traveling dress when they were married. A large white apron with a bib shielded the glories of the costume. But why did she put it on? Sure she could not think of "going visiting" with six haymakers to get tea for and the milk of eight cows to attend to afterwards. The question burned upon his tongue as he lingered a moment behind the other men. But he finally went out without asking it. The wife who was afraid she hated him seemed almost like a stranger, although she looked so much on this occasion like the girl he had married two years ago. As George neared the door of the wood-shed where the men lounged away the rest of their nooning, he heard his name mentioned by Solomon Wyse, in tones of anger. Involuntarily he stayed his steps.

"Yes, I knew George from a baby up, and I always said he would make a likely man. But I vow it is a shame to see how he treats that pretty, little creature! Such a lunch this morning, and such a dinner this noon, and such a nice, cool room, with the red roses and all the rest of it; and she just as pretty as a picture with her red cheeks and bright eyes and her wavy hair, and dressed as neat as a pink, too! And he sitting there as glum as a cross old man of 90. I was ashamed of him."

"I've heard that he does nothing but find fault with her all day long," said a second voice. "My wife says, if I threw my mother into her teeth, as George does his in Letty's, she would run away from me before she was a day older."

"And serve you right," chimes in a third. "I'll tell you what my wife says. She says it is confounded mean and small of George not to keep a woman here to help his wife. And when I saw the dinner to-day that the pretty little thing had got for us all alone, I thought so too. Hang me if I had not half a mind to stop here this afternoon and help her wash up that great pile of dishes, and let the haying go to thunder! It's enough to kill the woman to have all that work to do. And George is rich! What on earth is he thinking about? But he will be sorry for this a year or two hence, when we have to come here on a different errand."

"To carry her out in a coffin," said Solomon Wyse. "Yes, I suppose it will come to that, if some of us don't talk seriously to George. She does not look at all strong now, and her hand trembled when she changed my plate. It is a burning shame, and if none of you will talk to George about it, I will."

They moved off to the hay-field, talking as they went. But when George Brewster joined them Solomon Wyse deemed it prudent to defer the proposed "talking to," for his brow was as black as night, and he had no more to say to his neighbors now than to his wife at the dinner-table.

This, then, was the way in which they spoke about him behind his back; these men who labored beside him, and took their wages from his hand, and pretended to be his friends. And his wife was afraid she hated him. To whom could he turn for comfort—from whom expect friendship, if she who should have been the nearest was an enemy in disguise? Lost in a moody reverie, he paid little attention to his work.

And at last, at three o'clock in the afternoon, there was a sudden uproar in the hay-field—a trampling of hoofs, a rush of terrified men, a confusion of voices, and among them all George Brewster lying on the ground beneath the mowing-machine, his right arm and right leg broken by the wheels, his head cut and bleeding with his heavy fall.

Meanwhile Letty, in the cream-colored house, had not been idle. Tying on a great calico apron in place of her white one, she had quietly washed and put away the dinner dishes and reduced the dining-room to order. Tea was easily arranged, since it was to consist of cold dishes, with glasses of milk for the men. She threw a table-cloth over the whole as soon as it was finished, and went up stairs into the spare chamber to pack her trunk.

Yes, Letty had made up her mind at last. She was going away. Life had degenerated into slavery, unbrightened, as she fancied, by a ray of love.

"And slavery will support one anywhere," thought Letty, as with trembling hands she locked and strapped her trunk and fastened her few lines to George upon the lid.

At the porch door she paused for one last look around the house that might have been so happy. She did not intend to glance toward the hay-field. Yet in spite of her resolution, her eyes turned that way to single out the tall figure that guided the rattling, clicking mowing-machine.

"I wonder if he will miss me a little—just at first?" she mused. "He can get a divorce, I suppose, if I desert him, and then he will marry again. I hope he will be kinder to the next wife than he has been to me!"

With tears that rose at the thought of her successor blinding her eyes, Letty failed to see the figure that she sought.

"I am foolish to look at him again. I have never been more than a housekeeper to him from the first," she thought, stumbling blindly on toward the gate and opening it, to find herself in the centre of an excited group.

"There, don't ye take on like that!" said Solomon Wyse, who came first and saw the tears upon her cheeks before she could wipe them away. "Were you coming to meet us? We were in hopes you did not see anything of it. It is a bad accident, but George is so strong and healthy that he will be up and around again almost before you know it. We have sent Ben Hill off on one of the colts for the doctor, and if you will only tell us where to carry him—"

"Carry him?" repeated Letty.

Solomon stepped aside. She saw behind him a litter roughly made of hay-rakes and covered over with coats, and on that litter George was lying, pale and bleeding, with his eyes closed.

"Oh, Mr. Wyse, is he dead?" she asked, turning even paler than George.

"Not a bit of it! Worth twelve dozen dead men yet! Only a bit of a break in one arm and one leg, and a little knock on the head when he fell. The horses did not kick, and he will be all right as soon as the doctor sees him. Shall we take him up stairs, or where?"

"Bring him in here," said Letty, recovering herself. She led the way into the bed-room on the ground floor, and helped to shift the maimed figure from the litter to the bed. Her soul was dying within her for fear, yet not a word passed her lips.

When the doctor came he found a capable nurse, dressed in a dark print, who listened intelligently to his directions and promised to carry them out faithfully.

And so it happened that as George Brewster returned to life the first words that fell upon his ears were uttered by the doctor outside the window, as he mounted into his gig:

"Yes, he will do, Mr. Wyse; he will pull through nice, if his wife nurses him. And she can do so nicely, if some of you will send some one to take charge of the house. She is a woman in a thousand. I hope George knows how to value her."

The doctor drove away.

Letty, bending over the bed absorbed in the invalid, had not heard him.

But she plainly heard the faint voice of George calling her by name.

"What is it, dear?"

"The doctor is right. You are a woman of a thousand! I always knew it, Letty, if I never said it. So I tell you of it now before I die," he added, going off into another faint.

It was all that Letty's sore heart needed. Beside the bed of suffering she spent two of the happiest months of her life. The first act of George Brewster on his recovery was to secure help for his wife, so that she now has plenty of time to get back her lost color and plumpness. They are now one in heart, as one in name and home. And Solomon Wyse has never seen occasion to administer the "talking to."

"Somehow or other," drawls Solomon, "getting run over by that mowing-machine was the making of George Brewster."

And Letty and George think so, too.

A MODERN PARABLE.

And it came to pass as a certain man journeyed from the cradle to the grave he fell among saloon-keepers, who robbed him of his money, ruined his good name, destroyed his reason, and then kicked him out worse than dead.

A moderate drinker came that way, and when he saw him he said: "He is but a dog; they served him right; let him die; he is a curse to his family."

And also a license voter came that way, and when he saw him he said: "The brute! put a ball and chain on his leg, and work him on the street."

And a fanatic teetotaler came that way, and when he saw him he had compassion on him and raised him up, assisted him to his home and ministered to his wants, and to the wants of his family; got him to sign the pledge, and started him on his journey in comfort and happiness.

Who, think you, was the greater friend of humanity, the saloon-keeper, the moderate drinker, the license voter or the fanatic teetotaler?

LITTLE THINGS.

Look most to your spending. No matter what comes in, if more goes out you will always be poor. The art is not in making money but in keeping it. Little expenses, like mice in a large barn, when they are many, make great waste. Hair by hair heads get bald; straw by straw the thatch goes off the cottage, and drop by drop the rain comes in the chamber. A barrel is soon empty if the tap leaks but a minute. When you mean to save begin with your mouth; many thieves pass down red lane. The ale jug is great waste. In all other things keep within compass. Never stretch your legs further than the blankets will reach, or you will soon be cold. In clothes choose suitable and lasting stuff, and not tawdry fineries. To be warm is the main thing; never mind the looks. A fool may make money, but it needs a wise man to spend it. Remember it is easier to build two chimneys than to keep one going. If you give all to back and board there is nothing left for the savings bank. Fare hard and work hard while you are young, and you will have a chance to rest when you are old.

"How do you like the Episcopalian service?" asked Jones. "Never heard it," replied Fogg. "I dropped in at one of the churches last Sunday. It was quite early, and so I began reading the service. I didn't read very far, though, before I found out that it would never do for me. So I came out." "Why, what was the trouble?" "Too many collections." "Too many collections?" "Yes. On almost every page it said 'collect.' One collection is all I can afford to respond to. Must be awfully expensive to be an Episcopalian."

At a boarding house table, a lady and gentleman accidentally touched each other's feet under the table. "Secret telegraphy," said she, looking up. "Communion of soles," said he.

In a Hammock.

Swing high, swing low, with motion slow,
A leafy arch above me spread;
Long threads of sunlight come and go,
Chasing the shadows to and fro
Along my skirts with airy tread;
Across my face the zephyrs blow,
Tossing my hair; while soft and low,
A linnet warbles overhead.

Swing high, swing low, a maiden's song
In drowsy snatches comes and goes.
O robin, hush! your voice is strong,
Its weary click-clack is no song—
Then bring it quickly to a close!
The honey-bees—a busy throng—
Among the blossoms drone along;
They'll swiftly lull me to repose.

Swing high, swing low. I'm in a boat;
I'm drifting, drifting out to sea,
Bird songs and bees are far remote;
The waters ripple as I float;
The landscape fades and slips from me.
The black-backed gull, with snowy throat,
Sends out his loud, resounding note—
I'm slowly drifting out to sea.

Swing high, swing low. Oh, let me glide
Forever in this aimless way!
Beyond the realm of time and tide,
Beyond the ills that aye abide
With dwellers in these walls of clay;
O'er unknown seas expanding wide,
To lands unknown, oh, let me glide
From toil and care away, away!

DRESSING FOR THE CHILDREN.

"I am glad of a rainy day once in a while," said Mrs. Lake, "especially when I have some work I want to finish off, as we have to-day, Lucia. There will be no one calling to-day, surely, so what is the use of your stopping to dress? Your husband is away for the week, and we can just take our ease in these morning-dresses, and keep on with our sewing."

"The boys will be home at three o'clock," said her friend, taking down her wavy hair and proceeding to dress it in her accustomed graceful fashion. I will just remark that it was not done up in "bangs" or "frizzes," or snarls of any sort, but was arranged in rich, classic style, which gave her the appearance of the noble, beautiful matron she was.

"Dressing for your boys!" exclaimed the other. "No wonder folks talk of the extravagance of the times, when mothers make such a parade just to meet their schoolboys at the tea-table," and practical Cousin Eunice snipped off a thread in a very energetic manner.

"It pays," said the mother quietly, as she took a fresh pair of cuffs and slipped them into a pair of sleeve buttons Freddie had given her on her birthday. He had saved up his pennies to buy those garnet buttons, and he liked to see her wear them, as she did almost every afternoon, although she had prettier ones.

Cousin Eunice could dress up richly on occasions, but for the bosom of her family she had a set of "old gears," as William said, which, if they were useful, were not ornamental. The children did not admire mother as they might in those dresses, though she was quite a good-looking woman in good clothes.

"But, Lucia, you can't afford to put on that pretty cambric suit which it took such a time to iron. What is the use of mussing it this rainy day?"

"I am not going out in the rain, and the duller it is out of doors, the more cheerful I like to have it in the house. The boys always like this dress, and I like to see them pleased. Indeed, I think I care much more for the opinion of the folks under my own roof than I do for those away. I would rather be admired by my own boys than by an indifferent company in somebody's parlor. And, Eunice, I think all these things help to keep our hold on our boys when they grow older. When they are just passing out of childhood into youth, I feel that they need a mother almost as much as when in the cradle. Indeed, another might give the baby food and clothing; but boys at the latter age need a great mother-love and care to keep them from going wrong. Everything that draws them nearer to a mother, and makes them respect her more, is worthy of attention. My boys never think of a walk in the street of an evening, but sometimes spend an hour at a friend's house, or ask a few boys here. Mother is always importuned to join in any games or plays, and very often takes a hand with them. Oh, it would be dreadful to me to feel that my boys were slipping away from mother's influence, and I hope never to know it, even when my head is gray."—Arthur's Home Magazine.

VAGARIES OF RIVERS.—All rivers, small or large, agree in one character—they like to lean a little on one side. They cannot bear to have their channels deepest in the middle, but will always, if they can, have one bank to sun themselves upon, and another to get cool under; one shingly shore to play over, where they may be shallow and foolish and child-like, and another steep shore under which they can pause and purify themselves, and get their strength of waves fully together for due occasions. Rivers in this way are just like wise men, who keep one side of their lives for play and another for work, and can be brilliant and chattering and transparent when they are at ease, and yet take deep counsel on the other side, when they set themselves to the main purpose.—Ruskin.

It was a Boston girl who asked: "Why is it that two souls, mated in the impenetrable mystery of their nativity, float by each other on the ocean currents of existence, without being instinctively drawn together, blended and beautified in the assimilated alembic of eternal love!" That is an easy one. It is because butter is forty-five cents a pound, and a good sealskin sacque costs as high as $500. The necessaries of life must experience a fall in price before two souls will readily blend in the assimilated alembic, and so forth.—Norristown Herald.

A good-looking old German with long hair sat down, or rather up, in the barber's chair, and was asked whether he would have his hair shingled. He replied: "Mein Kott, no! I vant some hair cut off. Vy woot you put zum shinkles on it pecause?"

The following advertisement appeared in a New York daily recently, and was answered by about five hundred young men: "Wanted, experienced hands on ladies' waists."

An Irishman drinks whiskey; a Frenchman, wine; an Englishman, ale; a Dutchman, beer; and an American anything he can get.

The reason that more umbrellas than watermelons are stolen is thought to be because the thief doesn't have to plug the umbrella. It is always ripe.

When he comes to see her, they generally "settle" it on that piece of furniture unless there is a rocking-chair big enough for two.

ANOTHER FEMALE MANIA.

The newest mania among fashionable women, married or unmarried alike, is to make their bed rooms beautiful. The lately acquired taste for decoration is taking that turn just now to the utter neglect of parlors and other apartments. Pillow shams and bed spreads are laboriously and expensively covered with needlework and lace; dressing cases are furnished with elaborated mats and ingenious receptacles for toilet articles; bottles and boxes of the finest material and workmanship hold her ladyship's cologne, perfumery and powder; more or less excellent pictures hang on the walls, or the walls are wholly covered with lace. In short, the rage for sleeping in beautiful rooms has possessed every woman. Even her toilet crockery must be of no ordinary ware. She washes her hands in a ceramic bowl, colors her lips and eyebrows out of a crackled Japanese saucer, and uses a copy of a Pompeiian handglass to see her back hair. The ideal bed of the day has a canopy over it, and this is made as fine and as beautiful as the money and taste of the woman will permit. The frameworks are made of metal, commonly burnished brass or nickel. Chintz and cretonne are ordinarily used for the curtains; but satin, velvet and the better laces enter into combination. Unmarried women affect white and the most delicate colors for these canopies, and put white doves atop, as emblems of purity—so that the midnight marauder may comprehend the situation at a glance. A novel device is a rack, handsomely constructed of black walnut or ebony, with hooks for hanging a woman's underwear handily. The chemise, the corset, the stockings, the shoes, all have their places, so that a woman may be as orderly as she likes in undressing, and without the old trouble of using all the chairs in the room. Some of the bedrooms of the period are really marvels of exquisite taste—too sweet and dainty by far to deserve the rude occupancy of husbands. However, the best of these apartments belong to maidens, who show them with coyness and pride to their male friends. The dazed fellows stand palpitating on the threshold, gazing in at the vision of innocent somnolency and swearing on the spot to marry the tenant of that beautiful bed or die.

WHY THE NEW REVISION WILL BE ACCEPTED.

Of course the translation will receive criticism. It asks it and can endure it. We have sometimes been thought too much in haste to accept it without hesitation in advance. We have been willing to do it, and the reason is simple. We do not set ourselves up against the most competent scholars of the world. Their conclusions will have to be accepted at last. Now the twenty-five English and the thirteen American revisers were, in the first place, picked out as the best men known in the English-speaking world, the most competent to form and express a wise opinion of the translation of the Greek Testament. They have now devoted their most patient study to the subject for five years. They have, with the utmost patience, studied every word and weighed every consideration that will occur to the more hasty critics of their work. The result is that of their united wisdom. Put now against the judgment of all the rest of the English-speaking world the judgment of these forty men, and the opinion of these forty men is worth more than that of a thousand fools. Is this the surrender of private judgment? Not at all. It is the mere recognition of the trust that we must all put in competency. We hold that it is now the duty of every wise preacher immediately to introduce the New Version into his Sabbath ministrations and of the private Christian to use it for his devotions.—The Independent.

WHEN MEN ARE AT THEIR BEST.

Dr. Beard states that from an analysis of the lives of a thousand representative men in all the great branches of the human family, he made the discovery that the golden decade was between forty and fifty; the brazen between twenty and thirty; the iron between fifty and sixty. The superiority of youth and middle life over old age in original work appears all the greater when we consider the fact that all the positions of honor and prestige—professorships and public stations—are in the hands of the old. Reputation, like money and position, is mainly confined to the old. Men are not widely known until long after they have done the work that gave them their fame. Portraits of great men are delusions; statues are false! They are taken when men have become famous, which, on the average, is at least twenty-five years after they did the work which gave them their fame. Original work requires enthusiasm. If all the original work done by men under forty-five was annihilated, they would be reduced to barbarism. Men are at their best at that time when enthusiasm and experience are almost evenly balanced. This period, on the average, is from thirty-eight to forty. After this the law is that experience increases, but enthusiasm decreases. Of course there are exceptions.—Christian Intelligencer.

Correspondents are notified that the sentence, "This sad event has cast a gloom over the entire community," is kept standing in this office, so that it will be unnecessary to include it in reports concerning the demise of agriculturists who fall from mowers or carelessly feed themselves into threshing machines. —Chicago Tribune.

Several little Sabbath school pupils were riding together in a carriage. Happening to pass a peach tree, little Nellie asked, with a serious face: "Auntie, how did God make peaches?" To which, as quick as thought, little rosy Em replied: "Just like He made light. He said: 'Let there be peaches,' and there was peaches!"

A Scotch preacher, who found his congregation going to sleep one Sunday, before he had fairly begun, suddenly stopped and exclaimed, "Brethren, it's nae fair; gie a mon half a chance. Wait till I get alang, and then if I'm nae worth listening to, gang to sleep, but dinna gang before I get commenced. Gie a mon a chance."

A gentleman, calling on a farmer, observed: "Mr. Jones, your clock is not quite right, is it?" "Well, you see, sir" said Mr. Jones, "nobody don't understand much about that clock but me. When the hands of that clock stands at twelve, then it strikes two, and then I know it's twenty minutes to seven."

Said the hostess, "Henry' why don't you sit down with the young ladies? Is it diffidence?" Said Henry, "No, madam, it's a bile."

The Journal.

SATURDAY, JUNE 25, 1881.

PRESIDENT GARFIELD arrived at Long Branch last Saturday, and is spending a few days there with Mrs. Garfield, who is rapidly recovering from her recent illness. Gen. Grant is also at Long Branch.

WARDEN CHAMBERLAIN, of the State Prison, has resigned, and will be succeeded by David M. Earle of Worcester, a leading deputy sheriff of Worcester county for the past ten years. Mr. Earle is said to be a man of energy, determination and executive ability, all of which traits he will need in his new position.

JEFF DAVIS is "catching it" all around for the distortion of facts which abound in his so-called history of the Confederacy. He attacked some of his best generals, and seems to have no regard for friend or foe, or even for the truth. It would seem that the years which have elapsed since the war should have softened some of his bitterness; but the old rebel is as rebellious as ever, and allows his prejudices to warp his judgment to such an extent that his book has little value as a history.

THE 79th annual meeting of the General Association of Congregational churches of this State has been held in Springfield this week, beginning on Tuesday. On Wednesday Rev. A. H. Plumb of Boston read a timely and thoughtful paper on "Our Church Work—Its Deficiencies." The Hampden county associations presented a memorial asking the association to join with other religious bodies throughout the State in petitioning the Governor to appoint the annual fast day on Good Friday.

THE national temperance convention at Saratoga adopted some pretty radical resolutions on Wednesday, asking Congress to prohibit the manufacture or sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia, territories and all military and naval stations; to prohibit the importation of liquors from foreign countries; to propose to the States an amendment to the United States constitution forever prohibiting the manufacture and sale of brewed, fermented or distilled alcoholic beverages throughout the land; making total abstinence a necessary prerequisite to holding public office; and to pass at once the long pending measure authorizing the President to appoint a commission to inquire into the relations of the liquor traffic to the general public welfare. The members evidently believe in aiming high, even if they fall far short of the mark. Other resolutions were also adopted recommending the introduction into schools of text books teaching total abstinence from a scientific standpoint; favoring distinctive temperance work in all church organizations, and urging the introduction of four temperance lessons in the regular series of Sunday school lessons, and that the scholars be organized for distinctive temperance effort.

Another bubble has burst. The Globe Company of Boston, which has been advertising extensively that it would pay 10 per cent dividends, is in trouble, and its manager has been arrested. The stockholders have received two or three dividends, and that is probably all they will have to show for the money they invested. They ought to have known that responsible business enterprises do not have to pay 10 per cent in these days for the money they need. This company seems to have been a swindle from the start, pretending to own numerous valuable patents for locomotive spark arresters, etc., to which it had no claim.

Henry H. Faxon, the tireless temperance worker, has published a valuable pamphlet of 34 pages, containing all the laws bearing on the sale of liquors, and the licensing of innholders and common victualers, together with a digest of decisions of the Supreme Court on these matters. Mr. Faxon says that if the people will insist that these laws be enforced 50 per cent. of the rum shops will be shut up He further adds that the duty of the temperance people is to attend the caucuses and secure the election of honest temperance men, and then the laws will be enforced.

In the desert mountain ranges of California and Arizona no rain falls. The area is covered with cactus plants of every variety, and they are juicy. Millions of land tortoises feed on these plants, and the Indians make soup of them. Inside of each is an anatomical tank that holds about a pint of water. Many are cut open to get at this tank. The water is palatable. Thus meat and drink are supplied, and the dry cactus makes excellent fuel.

A shocking case of inhumanity has come to light at Troy, N. Y. A Mrs. Bigelow, who has lived with Henry Daniels some years as his mistress, and borne him several children, also has a 14-years-old son by another man. This child it is said was injured in 1872, and Daniels has kept him for over two years in a terribly filthy room about five feet by eight in size, and filled with a horrible stench. Daniels has been arrested.

Prof. Dolbear of Tufts College, one of the original inventors of the telephone, whose rights were bought by the Western Union Telegraph Company, has now invented an entirely new telephone, through which it is claimed conversation can be heard over any length of wire.

There was a bloody riot in Marseilles last Saturday, occasioned by the Italian residents hissing the French troops returning from the Tunisian expedition. Other collisions followed between the French and Italians, in which several persons were killed.

Commissioner of Pensions Bentley has resigned, and W. W. Dudley, a one-legged veteran from Indiana, has been appointed as his successor.

LOCAL NOTICES.

Look at this record: Notwithstanding the cold season, 15 Monitor Oil Stoves have already been put to service from our store within six weeks.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

The Congregational church has been having a house cleaning this week.

Rev. F. Bisbee of Spencer will occupy the pulpit at the Universalist church on Sunday.

Mrs. C. H. Rice of Athol will open a bird store in Commercial Block next Monday, for a few days.

"A thing of beauty is a joy forever"—as for instance the surroundings of our Main street hay scales.

W. C. Dewey went to Worcester the other morning and returned on his bicycle, making the trip in six hours.

Miss Lillian Edgerton started on Thursday for Troy, N. Y., where she will spend several weeks in visiting old friends.

Rev. T. C. Russell and family started Thursday on a carriage drive to Leominster and Haverhill, to be gone a week.

Rev. Lester Williams of West Springfield will again preach in the Baptist churches in this place and Three Rivers to-morrow.

Parties from New York have been in town the past week looking over the ground with a view to putting in gas works to supply the village.

The members of the Hampden District Medical society were the guests of Superintendent Tufts at the State Primary School on Thursday.

Men are now at work putting in the new vault in the bank building, and the banks are doing their business for the present in A. H. Willis's insurance office.

About twenty Masons went to Ware Thursday night in Weeks's barge, to be present at the initiation of half a dozen new members into the mysteries of the Royal Arch degrees.

The ladies of the Methodist society cleared $60 at their strawberry festival in the town house Wednesday evening, the occasion being one of the pleasantest they have ever enjoyed.

The assessors have figured up the total valuation of the town, which amounts to $2,557,497, an increase of $108,122 over last year, while the rate of taxation also jumps up from $11.80 to $14.

During the past term tho following scholars were perfect in attendance at the grammar school: Arthur Holden, Willie Brakenridge. Intermediate: Alice Brown, Norman Chandler, John Delahanty, Matilda Lacouline.

Deputy Sheriff Northrop went to Monson last week, and with Constable Underwood made a raid on the Monson House, capturing about four cases of lager. There will be a hearing in the case before the district court the second Monday in July.

Thomas Mullen, whose failure as proprietor of the satinet mill at Silver Street occurred about two months ago, was found dead on the street at Woonsocket, R. I., last Sunday night. Over-indulgence in rum is supposed to have caused his death.

The party of twenty or more citizens whom Landlord Weeks took to Belchertown Tuesday, in his barge, were loud in their praises of the day's enjoyment, from beginning to end, the ride up and back being one of the pleasantest parts of the day's experiences.

Fourth of July will be along in nine days more. The day seems likely to pass unnoticed hereabouts, only as the boys give vent to their patriotic emotions in the accustomed manner, with fire crackers, torpedoes, and other implements more or less noisy.

J. L. Ayer, at one time the Brimfield correspondent of the JOURNAL, was in town Wednesday with his bicycle, and in the uniform of the Boston "Solus" club, of which he is captain. He is now taking a daily spin of 50 or 60 miles on his machine, just for exercise.

Judge Robinson on Monday fined Catharine Griffin of Bondville $100 and costs, and sentenced her to one month's imprisonment in the house of correction, for illegal keeping of liquor. Catharine is an old offender, but she thought her sentence too severe, and appealed.

The Congregational parish last Friday appointed C. L. Gardner, J. S. Holden and J.N. Lacey a committee to unite with the pastor and church committee in calling a council to consider the pastor's resignation. The council is called to meet at the church on Wednesday, July 6.

Lawyer Gardner, to whose sizable new cesspool we alluded a couple of weeks ago, stopped digging at the depth of 30 feet, where water was struck. He is now walling it up, making it four feet in diameter, and it is calculated that the depth is sufficient to answer for all time.

The Eastern Hampden Medical society met with Dr. Fuller of Monson last week Wednesday, and listened to an essay on "Quackery" by Dr. Woods of Springfield. The society will meet next Saturday by invitation with the Miller's River Medical Association, at Dr. Towne's, in Enfield.

The New London Northern road will run a special train to Amherst next week during commencement, leaving Palmer about 2 p.m., on arrival of express from the west, and returning in season to connect with the evening trains west. Some other changes may also be made in the time table of the road.

A mass temperance meeting is to be held at the Baptist church Sunday evening, at 7 o'clock, with addresses by Mr. Merrill, principal of the Ware high school and agent of the Grand Lodge I. O. of G. T., assisted by several brethren of the order. All are invited to be present, and bring Gospel Hymns.

J. P. Murphy started to go to Springfield on the owl train last Sunday morning, but changed his mind just as the train started, and stepped off. In doing so he in some way made a misstep and fell under the wheels, which passed over his right foot, crushing it so badly that the leg had to be amputated below the knee.

The new fence along the front of the agricultural society's park is now completed. An improvement has been made in the gates, which now slide instead of swing, and the exhibition building is open to the street no longer, but the fence extends across its front, with a small gate through which pedestrians can enter.

The Baptist Sunday school is considering the question of an excursion to Mt. Tobey next month. The new lessee of the mountain, J. N. White, expects to have the hotel of 13 rooms ready for guests July 1st. He is improving the roads and putting everything in shape to make the mountain more popular than ever, and a large increase of patronage is expected this year.

Principal Whiting, who for the past three years has had charge of the high school in this place, has accepted a call to take charge of the Amherst high school beginning with the Fall term. Mr. Whiting is a faithful, conscientious and successful teacher, and the good influence of his work in the school here will remain long after his departure, which will be generally regretted.

The carpet mill nine went over to Wilbraham Saturday to play the Nonpareils, but when they got there they found the Wesleyans waiting for them, and the result was they got "waxed" to the tune of 8 to 3. On Thursday the Monsons played 8 innings with Josie Weeks's nine in this place, the score standing 7 to 7 when they stopped on account of dissatisfaction with the umpire. To-day Julian Tuthill's nine and the State Primary School boys have a game.

The bazar in aid of St. Thomas's church has had a very successful run at Wales Hall this week. On Monday evening the children of the Sunday school presented the operetta "Grandpa's Birthday" in a manner that reflected much credit upon themselves and Miss Carberry, their instructor, and the rest of the programme was carried out to the entire satisfaction of all. The drawing of the articles was postponed to Friday evening, in order to give the people from out of town who were present Thursday evening a chance to "trip the light fantastic."

People are beginning to make plans for their summer vacations, and a few days of hot weather will now start them off in flocks. The coast and adjacent islands have special attractions for many who live inland, and of these resorts none are better known or more popular than Oak Bluffs, the "Cottage City" of America, where many improvements have been made the past year, new cottages built, and hotels erected and enlarged. Nantucket, the island resort which has also grown so rapidly into popular favor in the past few years, has among other improvements a new narrow gauge railroad running to Siasconset, about 12 miles, much of the way along the southeast shore, affording fine opportunities for witnessing the surf. Now is just the season for blue-fishing, and large hauls are made at both these places, while the sport is "immense." Both these points are reached conveniently by the Old Colony Railroad, which now has excursion tickets on sale via South Framingham, and parties leaving here at 7.48 or 11.37 a.m. will arrive at Oak Bluffs at 3.50 or 7.15 p.m.; or, leaving at 7.48 a.m., reach Nantucket at 6.15 p.m.

Editor Journal:—"Children and Flowers" was the motto to greet us as we entered St. Paul's church last Sunday evening. What appropriate companions are they, we thought, as we looked upon the happy group of innocent children assembled once more to enjoy the anniversary of the coming of the beautiful flowers. What more fitting place for flowers, "the smiles of God," than for these little willing hands to place them upon God's altar? Happy, happy childhood! would that your lives could ever be beautiful like the fragrant flowers you have placed at the altar. The evening was calm, the sky cloudless; it seemed as though God had made the time so lovely, just for the dear children, and the concert will long be remembered as a beautiful mental picture. The flowers will wither and their fragrance vanish; the children will pass on to womanhood and manhood, but the memory will endure, and we shall ever look with pleasure upon this scene. We shall see their happy faces and hear the music of their sweet voices in years to come. We may listen to the trained and melodious voices of professionals, but nothing can charm us more than the voices of these guileless children. God grant that their lives, like the flowers, may ever be beautiful, sinless and pure. E.
Stafford Springs, Ct., June 21, 1881.

The high school closed yesterday for the Smmer vacation, and the exhibition exercises will be held at Wales Hall next Monday afternoon, at 3 o'clock, with the following programme: Chorus; declamation, Edward Lacey; piano solo, Effie Shaw; essay, "Odd People," May Robinson; recitation, Cora Brown; piano solo, Anna Fisherdick; reading, Della Holbrook; violin solo, Minnie Baker; piano solo, Della Holbrook; declamation, Julian H. Tuthill; recitation, Effie Shaw; solo, Cora Brown; essay, "The Expressive Feature," Mary Dewey; recitation, Minnie Baker; duet, Mary Dewey and Emma Mulvihill; chorus. In the evening, as was announced last week, Prof. George N. Cross, of North Andover will give a reading of choice selections at Wales Hall, the proceeds of which will go toward the purchase of a piano for the school room. Mr. Cross is very highly recommended as an elocutionist, where he has appeared. The Lawrence American says: "Mr. Cross possesses a voice of wide range, a freshness of style, and an abundance of dramatic power, and his rostrum appearance is such as to command admiration." His renderings will be interspersed with singing by Misses Carrie Lacey and Lizzie Feeney, and a piano solo by Miss Jessie Parks, and an accomplished violinist is expected to give a few selections. The entertainment will be such as to merit a full house, and its object ought to call out an attendance which shall leave no seat unoccupied in the hall.

THREE RIVERS.

Dr. Ruggles picked 58 bushels of strawberries from his vines Monday, and expects to dispose of fully 200 bushels this week. Some of them are remarkably large and luscious fellows, as we happen to know from experience.

LUDLOW.

Rev. E. J. Smith of North Leominster exchanged pulpits with Rev. S. V. McDuffee last Sabbath. Rev. Mr. McDuffee is to preach at Jenksville next Sunday afternoon. There are six to unite with Rev. Mr. McDuffee's church the first Sunday in July, on profession of faith.

WALES.

Farmers complain that the hay crop is very thin and will not yield as well as expected.

C. Carpenter, of Fiskdale, has opened a drug store in Haradon's block.

The Baptists held a very pleasant festival Wednesday evening in their vestry.

A young man from Monson while taking his lady to ride last Sunday became so engaged as to allow his horse to stray off the bank, and tipped over, badly smashing one of J. Hubbard's best carriages.

BONDVILLE.

Names of scholars who have been neither tardy nor absent in the schools in this village during the recent term: Grammar—Clara Collis, Martha Fillmore, Gertie Smith, Maurice Moriarty; intermediate—Mary Bagley, Hannah Conner, Nora Doyle, Maggie Laulers, Abbie Moynahan, Rose McNabb, Maggie McKellegett, Thomas Moynahan, Otie Sedgwick, Scottie Merrifield; second primary—Armida Bachard, Nellie Keyes, Nellie Lynch, Katie McKeleget, Viola Packard, Filiose Beauyard, Frankie Lamb; first primary—Lizzie Bagley, Dennis Lynch, Patsey Moriarty.

WARREN.

The Methodists are to have a picnic on the Fourth of July.

The skating rink is open Wednesday and Saturday evenings.

The Universalists give a Sabbath school concert next Sabbath evening.

Rev. Mr. Chaffee, from Orange, will preach at the Universalist church Sunday to the children.

The town meeting passed off very quietly, a motion being made to have the school house built on the spot selected for it.

The high school closed Friday. The committee have secured the services of Mr. Pratt, principal of the Westfield high school, as superintendent of the Warren school.

The floral display at the Congregational church last Sabbath was very fine. The flowers were taken to the cemetery the next day, and laid upon the graves of those who had died during the year from the society.

INDIAN ORCHARD.

This has been a week of jubilee with St. Aloysius church.

George Savage is soon to build himself a house on Oak street.

Postmaster C. J. Eaton is fast recovering from his long illness, and is out driving on pleasant days. Peter Roberts, who has been in the employ of Mr. Eaton for about 16 years, closes his term of service July 1, and will celebrate the Fourth for the first time during those years.

One of our young men went up to Eaton's Ludlow pond to fish the other night. He used a throw-line and threw it as far as he could, but did not hear it splash. After waiting patiently half an hour for a bite, he drew it in to find it fast on a stump in the cow pasture the other side of the "pond."

The wrangling over the successor to Postmaster Eaton is now at rest, Dr. E. D. Chapman having been appointed, and he assumes the duties as postmaster July 1. The office will occupy a corner of his drug store, opposite his $700 soda fountain, so that the boys can kill two birds with one stone, as it were.

The Orchard, like every other place, has an annual series of hen stories, and they are on the go now. A young man heard several telling them the other night, and stepped up to them and said: "My uncle once set a hen on a pint of rain water and she hatched out a small frog pond." This was a sad blow, and no more stories have been told by them since.

The Chapman Valve Mfg. Co. are at work on their new foundry, which is to be of brick. The walls are to be 28 feet high above the foundation; the moulding floor will be 50 x 60 feet; the core room 23 x 46 feet, with a large double oven; the heating shed will be 15 x 18 feet, with two large fire boxes. The building will also contain other modern improvements, including underground ash pits.

BELCHERTOWN.

A more perfect day for the reunion of the 10th regiment than was Tuesday, the day chosen, could not have been desired; the pretty village was never before so trim and handsome in its adornings, and the drummer boy, Myron P. Walker, right royally entertained his old comrades and the invited guests, while all the citizens heartily seconded his efforts, and did themselves proud in carrying out the programme of the day. At an early hour the people began to come in from the surrounding country, and by the time the procession was ready to start the streets were alive with a moving mass of humanity. The train with the regiment and invited guests arrived about 12.30, and the march then began, headed by the local band. About 300 Grand Army men followed, and then came the regiment, 250 men, headed by Col. Parsons, and led by Colt's band of Hartford. Then came the Governor and other invited guests, and a long line of carriages, including Weeks's large barge from Palmer, carrying the 40 young women who acted as waiters, and who made a very pretty picture, in their caps trimmed with red, white and blue, and aprons made from flags. The barge was labeled "Our Drummer Boy's Home Guard." Three hundred school children joined the procession near the top of the hill, and as they marched past the Governor later, in front of Mr. Walker's house, the girls almost overwhelmed him with their bouquets.

The business meeting of the regiment was given up for want of time, and while Colt's band gave a concert on the park the guests paid their respects to the drummer boy's wife and mother, and inspected his elegant house. Then came the collation, the regiment and guests sitting in a large tent on the common, while the Grand Army boys took their dinner in the town hall. After the dinner Col. Parsons introduced Gov. Long, who made a neat little speech, paying a glowing tribute of praise to the regiment and to its drummer boy. Other remarks were made by Gen. Briggs, Col. Shurtleff, and by Mr. Walker, who alluded feelingly to the sacred memories of the past. He then made some of the old army calls with his drum, and the meeting broke up with rousing cheers. The Grand Army men escorted the regiment to the depot to take the special train at 5 o'clock for Springfield, and the exercises of the day, long and pleasantly to be remembered, were brought to a close.

MONSON.

James B. McCormack was in town this week, looking as hearty as one could wish.

Rev. C. H. Eaton of New York will preach at Central Hall next Sunday, at 5 o'clock p. m. The public are invited.

W. J. McElwain, connected with the dry-goods firm of Taylor & Thomas of Boston, is now traveling through northern Indiana.

Capt. Geo. H. Newton will join his whaling party next week, and start at once with his whale for a trip through the western cities, commencing July 4th at Jackson, Mich.

The public schools, with the exception of Nos. 3 and 13, closed yesterday. The examination of candidates for the high school will be held to-day (Saturday) at school house No. 1, at one o'clock p. m.

The assessors have nearly completed their work, and will place their list in the hands of the collector in a few days. Tax-payers will do well to remember the 5 per cent. discount on all taxes paid before August 1. The rate this year is $13.75, against $14.75 last year.

Children's day was observed by the Methodist society last Sunday, by a concert in the afternoon. The church was profusely, but tastefully decorated with flowers, and the speaking and singing by the children were enjoyed by a large audience. Four singing birds rivaled the singers in praising God.

The postmaster-general has designated the Monson post-office as an international money order office, and on and after July 1st money orders may be obtained there, payable in the following countries: Great Britain and Ireland, Germany, Italy, France and Algeria, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, the Netherlands, Luxemburg, and the dominion of Canada.

A large number of our people are out of town now, either on vacations or business. John Brockbank is sauntering round over Colorado, G. W. Farrington and wife spending the summer in Illinois, E. D. Cushman and Theo. Reynolds buying wool in Michigan, C. F. Jordan and C. W. Darling attending school in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and Prof. Cummings is at Groton, N. H. Several parties go to Saratoga next week, and others are looking with longing eyes to the mountains or seaside.

Miss Winslow will present "Cobwebs" at Central Hall next Wednesday evening, with a large chorus of children from the public schools, who have been rehearsing very diligently for a number of weeks. Miss Winslow's experience in this and kindred entertainments would insure a success under almost any circumstances. She informs us that the children are taking a great interest in the operetta, and have developed a degree of talent not always found in places of this size. Seats may be secured at Phipps' and Grout's stores.

WARE AND VICINITY.

J. M. Buffington has opened a fruit and vegetable market in the basement of Storrs' new block.

Nelson, youngest son of James M. Pratt, lost a part of two fingers of his right hand in the gear of a rolling machine at the boot shop.

The Gilbertville Catholic society are to hold a picnic, at the grove in Gilbertville, July 4th, the proceeds to go towards paying the debt on the church.

John Follen, driver of Grant's express, was thrown from the cart and received two kicks from the horse, Thursday evening, escaping with so little injury that it is expected he will be out again in a few days.

As an evidence of the magnitude of small things in the aggregate, it is said that the buttons used on the shirt fronts by the Otis company the past year, placed side by side, would reach further than from Ware to Springfield.

Herbert Goodwin, on his way home late Monday evening, ran against a plank bridge which had been set upon its edge, and left in that position by the repairers of the street, without any warning lights, when it toppled over, falling upon him in such a manner as to break both bones of his left leg below the knee.

A. P. Freed's clothing store was entered by burglars sometime Monday night or Tuesday morning, by prying up the window of the basement in the rear and forcing the bolt of the door leading to the store above. The object seemed to be the money, but they fortunately got but $1.40. They also took several coats, a lot of sleeve buttons, scarf pins, etc., total value estimated at $75. The party evidently left in a hurry, as they left two coats on the ground at the back of the building, as well as the bar with which they effected their entrance. It was found that they had raised the window of the basement of Green's stove store, but did not enter. This was probably done as a blind, to try and make some one think that they were unacquainted with the premises, and made a mistake, opening the wrong window first.

A NEW PROJECT.

Embalming a Whale in the Woods of Northern Michigan—Interesting Items Concerning a Great Natural Curiosity.

Correspondence of the JOURNAL.

CAMP BALEEN, Terry Station, Bay Co., Mich., June 18th, 1881.

Having received the JOURNAL while in camp here, I thought the readers in your locality might be interested in the "inland whalers" and their project, knowing that our captain commanding formerly furnished items of interest for you and your readers' edification. Our camp is located on the Mackinaw division of the Michigan Central R. R., about 12 miles north of Bay City. The country is sparsely settled, and the heavy wooded acres hereabout would indicate that it will be many years before the land can be cleared up for civilization. We are on a side track, or, more properly, switch, which was made for logging, the past winter, with our 100 by 40 foot pavilion erected over the "monster," who lies in state on a 62-foot flat car, making quite an imposing sight for the natives. In the rear of the pavilion is the office and baggage car, conveniently arranged and comfortably furnished, carpeted, with bunks and many little fixtures which gives it a home-like appearance, especially here where accommodations are scarce and luxuries scarcely known.

The embalming process is a wonder, and especially the idea of embalming a whale; and the Michiganders can hardly believe that it is being done, and in fact doubt whether we have a real whale or not. Some of the settlers mistrust there is something going on that is not altogether to their interest; that the men in charge are going to do some dreadful thing by and by. The squaws shake their heads and say "no good," and the mosquitoes and sand flies act as though they intended to probe the matter. Professor Stephen Mummery of Detroit, formerly taxidermist and embalmer for the Royal British Museum of London, assisted by his son Walter, of Canada, and a working corps of 8 able-bodied men, has been at work early and late (having a night and a day gang) applying the mysterious compounds and chemicals that are surely and safely preserving, embalming and hardening the "Monarch Supreme of the Ocean." The work is now fully three-quarters done; the mammal is being brought out and fully developed to his original size and shape, and will make a much more presentable appearance than ever before. The process does not in the least affect the color or natural appearance, everything being retained as life-like as when at home in the Arctic.

The manager and pilot, Fred. J. Engelhardt, is busy getting up new "whalers' logs," devices for the printers and electrotypers, preparatory to starting out on our second voyage. It is intended to "ship ahoy," "all aboard," and pull up anchor about the 29th inst., and make Jackson our first port, remaining there over the 4th of July, excursion trains having been arranged from all the country round. Our next place will be Grand Rapids, then other cities in Michigan, Wisconsin, and so on to St. Paul and Minneapolis, returning to Chicago for the exposition in September, and visiting the State fairs in other portions of the country. We expect our captain, G. H. Newton, now on a furlough somewhere in your locality, will join us at Jackson and give general order No. 1, on voyage No. 2, and he will be heartily welcomed by his old crew. Should you newspaper men in your excursion chance to come within hailing distance of our pavilion Baleen, we shall cheerfully welcome you to the exhibit, pronounced by scientists and the thousands who have visited it to be one of the greatest (if not the greatest), natural history curiosities ever exhibited inland.

BOLLINGER.

The New York newspaper advertising agency of Dauchy & Co., with which the JOURNAL has for many years had pleasant business relations, is, we are glad to see, in so prosperous a condition as to have outgrown its old quarters on Fulton street, and the firm have recently removed to 27 Park Place, corner of Church street. The Tribune says of their new rooms:

They occupy an entire floor, extending through the block to Nos. 24 and 26 Murray street, a space of about 50 by 200 feet. Their offices are complete in every detail. About 50 feet of the Park Place front is partitioned off for the counting room and private office, which are handsomely and substantially fitted up. Beyond the counting room the walls on both sides are covered from floor to ceiling with pigeon-holes for files of newspapers, and on one side of the room are a number of alcoves, extending 10 or 12 feet, covered on both sides with pigeon-holes, furnishing places for about 8,000 files. The intermediate space is filled with desks and tables used by the examining and recording clerks. The Murray street front is given up to the shipping department, Messrs. Dauchy & Co. being also manufacturers and dealers in printers' supplies of every kind.

If it is necessary to look farther than Mr. Long for a gubernatorial candidate next Fall, there is a man up near Springfield who will attract no little attention. Mr. George D. Robinson is considered the foremost member of the Massachusetts delegation in Congress, and he has won a reputation for ability, energy and integrity that would serve a good purpose at the state house. Mr. Robinson is said to be waiting for Senator Dawes' seat six years hence, but it would seem that he would stand a better chance of realizing that ambition if he were to top off three very successful terms in Congress with a vigorous season of reform and general shaking up of things at Boston. But wherever he is, Mr. Robinson will not be lost sight of; let the Boston managers make a note of this.—Athol Transcript.

Cadet Whittaker, the West Point negro whose singular case has occupied so much public attention for many months past, will, in all probability, be acquitted. The tribunal was evenly divided, four standing for conviction and four for acquittal—thus, while Whittaker is discharged by this tie vote, the fact remains that his innocence of the several charges is not established. One officer was absent, who would probably have voted in favor of acquittal.

Secretary Windom has issued a circular permitting holders of registered five per cent of '81, who accidentally failed to send their bonds to Washington in season for continuance in May, to send them in up to July 1, if they so elect.

Two big breeches now disfigure the Republican party in New York and New Hampshire.—Spencer Sun.

You wouldn't have the party appear without any breeches, would you, especially in such coolish weather?

July Magazines.

Scribner for July contains a paper of special and timely interest, "The People's Problem," in which the writer takes the ground that the time has come for the people of this country to exercise their right to "alter the government." Besides a wealth of literary and illustrated matter, there are also in this number the concluding chapters of two brilliant novelettes, "Madame Delphine," by George W. Cable (begun in May), and "A Fearful Responsibility," by W. D. Howells (begun in June). The May, June and July numbers, containing these two complete novelettes, are offered for $1.00. On the 25th of June will be published the July number of St. Nicholas, containing many brilliant features for vacation time, including chapters of two capital serials for boys by Rossiter Johnson and W. O. Stoddard; "How to Stock and Keep a Fresh-Water Aquarium;" a full-page portrait of Dengremont, the boy violinist; "Stories of Art and Artists," with some exquisite reproductions, etc.

The name of the corporation formerly known as Scribner & Co., (publishers of Scribner's Monthly, St. Nicholas, "The Spiritual Songs Series" of hymn and tune books, "Songs for the Sanctuary," etc.,) has now been changed to The Century Co. The title of Scribner's Monthly will become The Century with the next volume. St. Nicholas is slightly changed as to its sub-title, being now St. Nicholas, an Illustrated Magazine for Young Folks. The July numbers of these magazines are the first to bear the new corporate imprint. Price of Scribner's Monthly, $4 a year; 35 cents a number. St. Nicholas $3 a year; 25 cts. a number.

The July Atlantic is a particularly strong and interesting number. "The Greek play at Harvard," which has attracted so much attention, is described by Mr. Charles Eliot Norton, one of the the most competent and accomplished of American scholars. The Boston Woman's Bank, which caused no little talk a few months ago, is the subject of two articles, one exceedingly pungent and amusing, by Gail Hamilton, who entitles her paper "The Gentlemen's Contribution to the Ladies' Deposit;" The other, entitled "Sympathetic Banking," is a remarkably clear and vigorous account of this astounding financial performance, by Henry A. Clapp, a Boston lawyer, who evidently knows the whole thing by heart. These two articles cannot fail to be read with much interest. John Fiske has an essay of curious value on "What is Mythology?" H. H. contributes her delightful Norway sketches in a paper "Four Days with Sanna." Miss Sarah Orne Jewett, author of the charming "Deephaven" stories, contributes a similar sketch, "Andrew's Fortune," which is wonderfully true to New England country life. John C. Dodge, in a very interesting article, points out the defects of "Trial by Jury in the United States." "Mischief in the Middle Ages," by Elizabeth Robins, is so engaging an article on so engaging a subject, that everybody will read it. Mr. Whittier contributes a thoroughly characteristic and therefore excellent poem "In Memory" of Mr. Fields; and Edgar Fawcett has a poem on "Wounds." The Contributors' Club is full of pleasing little essays; a descriptive sketch of the books of the month renders a very useful though unpretending service. This is evidently a "star" number of the Atlantic. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.

The increased annual sales of G. O. Taylor Old Bourbon whiskey is a good guarantee that it is all the proprietors, Chester H. Graves & Sons, represent it to be. Absolutely pure. Druggists and grocers have it everywhere.

In spite of all competition, the Opera House Clothing Company of Springfield continue to take the lead in boys' clothing. Their $1.50, $2 and $3 suits are indeed remarkable bargains. The same holds true in all departments of their immense store.

IMPORTANT.—Forbes & Wallace, Springfield offer printed lawn suits at $1.25, which would be good value at $3; cambric suits at $1.50; silk suits at $12, by far the best value in the city; gingham suits at $2.50; children's gingham suits at $1; children's linen suits at $1; children's P. K. suits, $1; ladies' mohair and linen dusters. A good Shetland shawl for 50 cts.

Forbes & Wallace, Springfield, offer 350 fine French flowers at $1, former price $3; 300 boys and girls' hats at 25 cts., former price 37½c.; 500 boys' and girls' hats 25c., former price 37½c.; 350 misses' hats at 50c., former price 75c.; 100 dozen Fayal hats at 50c., all shapes; 250 plumes in all colors, $1.75; 300 plumes in all colors, $1.50; 275 plumes in all colors, $2; 200 plumes in all colors $2.50; 200 elegant ones from 3.75 to $7.50; 500 tuscan bonnets, 50c; 500 tuscan bonnets, 75c.

Before life is imperilled, deal judiciously with the symptoms. Remember that the slight disorder of to-day may become an obstinate, incurable disease to-morrow. As a preventive medicine, take Simmons Liver Regulator, which, by its mild and beneficial action on the liver, stomach and spleen, is eminently calculated to assist nature in her efforts to re-establish a healthy condition. It will also remove the cause of disease without any of that prostration which follows the use of drastic purgatives, or any of the injurious effects of mineral poisons.

Back-ache is almost immediately relieved by wearing one of Carter's Smart Weed and Belladonna Back-ache Plasters. Try one and be free from pain. Price 25 cents. 2w13

A smooth complexion can be had by every lady who will use Parker's Ginger Tonic. For promptly regulating the liver and kidneys and purifying the blood there is nothing like it, and this is the reason why it so quickly removes pimples and gives a rosy bloom to the cheek. See notice. 1m10

PREJUDICE KILLS.—"Eleven years our daughter suffered on a bed of misery under the care of several of the best (and some of the worst) physicians, who gave her disease various names but no relief, and now she is restored to us in good health by as simple a remedy as Hop Bitters, that we had poohed at for two years before using it. We earnestly hope and pray that no one else will let their sick suffer as we did, on account of prejudice against so good a medicine as Hop Bitters."—The parents.—Telegram.

HOP BITTERS NEVER FAIL.

If you are a man of business, weakened by the strain of your duties, avoid stimulants, and use Hop Bitters.

If you are a man of letters, toiling over midnight work, to restore brain nerve waste, use Hop Bitters.

If you are young, and suffering from any indiscretion or dissipation; if you are married or single, old or young, suffering from poor health or languishing on a bed of sickness, rely on Hop Bitters.

Whoever you are, whenever you fell that your system needs cleansing, toning or stimulating, without intoxicating, take Hop Bitters.

Thousands die annually from some form of Kidney disease that might have been prevented by a timely use of Hop Bitters.

Have you dyspepsia, kidney, or urinary complaint, disease of the stomach, bowels, blood, liver or nerves? You will be cured if you use Hop Bitters.

If you are simply week and low-spirited, try it! It may save your life. It has saved hundreds.

GEORGE ROBINSON.

Corner Central and Pleasant Sts., Palmer.

TO THE HONORABLE THE JUDGE OF THE PROBATE COURT IN AND FOR THE COUNTY OF HAMPDEN.

Respectfully represents your petitioner, David E. Tenney of Palmer, in said county, that on the third day of March, A. D. 1872, Eunice B. Durkee of said Palmer, made her last will and testament, and on the first day of January, A. D. 1875, made a codicil thereto—that said Eunice B. Durkee departed this life on the 30th day of March, A. D. 1879, and on the first Tuesday of April following the said will and codicil were admitted to probate by said court, and letters testamentary issued to your petitioner, the executor therein named.

That among the provisions of said last will and testament are the following, as by reference to a certified copy of said will in said court to be produced will more fully appear, to wit:

"Seventh—I will and bequeath to my sister, Nabby Ellis, the rest of my household effects, to be divided as I shall designate to her."

"Eighth—I will to the Foreign Missions of the Baptist Missionary Union and to the Emancipated of the Baptist Home Mission Society formed in New York in 1832, all the remainder and residue of my esthate, to be equally divided between the two missions."

That after the death of said testatrix there were found with said will, in the handwriting of said testatrix, and one bearing her signature, two certain papers, copies of which are hereto annexed, marked "A" and "B." That within about one year from the date of said letters testamentary and before any of the effects named in said will to be by her distributed, as herein set forth, were delivered to her, she, the said Nabby Ellis, died, and no administration has ever been taken on her estate, and said effects, amounting according to the inventory of the estate of said testatrix to about $89.30, still remain in the hands of your petitioner.

That your petitioner is not acquainted with any society and can learn of none bearing the precise name of either of those named in the eighth clause of said will hereinbefore set forth, but is informed and believes that the society therein called the Baptist Home Mission Society was intended by said testatrix to be the American Baptist Home Mission Society, a society formed in New York in the year 1832, and the society therein called the Baptist Missionary Union was intended by said testatrix to be the American Baptist Missionary Union. That the heirs-at-law of said testatrix at the time of her decease were Nabby Ellis of Ware, Mass., a sister of said testatrix since deceased, E. B. Ellis of Blandford, A. Parkhurst Ellis of Hardwick, both in this Commonwealth, John G. Ellis of Melrose, Minnesota, and Susan S. Town of Rindge, New Hampshire, children of Lucy Ellis, a deceased sister. That the heirs-at-law of said Nabby Ellis are A. Goodrich Ellis and Mary E. Pierce, both of said Ware, Abby B. Anderson of Warren, Mass., and Thomas D. Ellis of Bridgeport, Connecticut.

That the property in the hands of your petitioner, other than said $89.30, to be distributed under said will, amounts to $1617.87, as shown by the final account of your petitioner now on file in said court.

That at least two of the heirs-at-law of said Nabby Ellis now interested in said estate claim that said residuary legacy is void on the ground that the legatees therein named have no legal existence, and one of them has further claimed that said papers, copies of which are hereto annexed, marked "A" and "B," should have no legal effect in the distribution of that portion of the testatrix estate which is bequeathed in the seventh clause of said will, hereinbefore set forth, on the ground that the same were not duly executed as a part of said will. That your petitioner is in doubt as to who is legally entitled to receive the money and other effects now in his hands.

Wherefore he prays your honor that all persons interested in said estate may be cited to appear before said court at the term thereof named in such citation, and that after due hearing in the premises your honor will determine to whom the estate now remaining in his hands belongs, and decree a distribution thereof among such persons or corporations as are entitled thereto, appoint all necessary trustees, and make such other orders and decrees as your honor may deem meet and proper. DAVID E. TENNEY.
By his Attorney, C. L. GARDNER.
Dated June 15th, 1881.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPDEN SS. PROBATE COURT.—On the foregoing petition all persons and corporations interested are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be holden at Springfield in said county of Hampden, on the first Tuesday of July next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any they have, against the same. And the petitioner is ordered to serve this citation by delivering a copy of said petition and of this order to each person and corporation interested that can be found within the State, fourteen days at least before said court; and if any one cannot be so found, by also publishing the same in the Palmer Journal, a newspaper printed at Palmer, once in each week for three weeks at least before said court, and by mailing a copy thereof to the principal office of each such corporation and to the place of residence last known to the petitioner of each such person not found within the State, fourteen days at least before said court.

Witness, William S. Shurtleff, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this sixteenth day of June, in the year eighteen hundred and eighty-one.

The Newspaper Man.

Little they know or even think,
Of the work there is in shedding ink
By the busy wielders of pencil and pen,
Generally known as newspaper men.
"Jottings," "In General," "Spice of Life,"
"Variations," and rumors rife,
Weekly notes and special news,
All sorts of paragraphs to amuse;
Market reports and marine disasters,
Puffs of pills and patent plasters;
Now at the theater in white cravat,
Claw hammer coat and open hat;
Taken to the prize ring, where you write
Sickening details of a bloody fight—
Back to the city, just in time
To report the sermon of some divine;
Steamboat collision, smash-up of trains,
Election returns to bother your brains;
Agent dramatic with long-winded story,
To write up his "star" to theatrical glory;
Deaths and marriages, murders, rows,
Balls and parties, minstrel shows,
Stock speculations, bubbles of air,
Tossed about by bull and bear;
Praising the limb in the dancer's pose,
And next the calves in the cattle shows;
Pencil in hand at the racing course,
Taking the time of a trotting horse;
Jotting down each stroke and catch
Made in a famous base ball match;
Now of a street row taking a note,
And then of a row of a pleasure boat—
These are a few of the many things
At which the tireless pencil swings.

CURRANTS, ROSES, ETC.

We are constantly being asked what shall be done to destroy the aphis on roses, snowballs, and many other plants, as well as the currant worm on the currant bushes. We use hellebore for all these things. We formerly used whale oil soap on roses, but it was so nasty we sought for something better that would answer the same purpose. For two years past, we have used only the hellebore, and have had the best of results. We take from two to three tablespoonfuls to a pail of water, and mix it up well, and then apply to the plant with a syringe or small hand pump. We often apply it in the form of powder to the currant bushes, putting it on early in the morning while the dew is on the leaves. It is but little work to keep the rose and other bushes clean, if the work is only attended to in season. Let cultivators of roses who have heretofore used whale oil soap try, this season, the hellebore, and they will never go back to the use of the former.—Congregationalist.

HEN LICE.—The warm weather will hatch out these pests in swarms, particulaly if the winter quarters have not been very clean. Take a day and attend thoroughly to your hen house. If you are too busy to attend to it yourself, hire it done; it will pay. Whitewash every board, roost and nest thoroughly. It need not be done by a scientific kalsominer. A boy of twelve, with an old whitewash brush, can do the work well enough if he has plenty of lime to throw around. Put carbolic acid in the slaked lime, brush the perches with kerosene, sprinkle plenty of sluphur over the clean straw that you have put in the nests, and you will lose fewer fowls with "cholera" during the hot weather.

How doth the busy little wife improve spring's shining hours, and chuck the carpets out o' doors as around the house-she scours. How skillfully she sets the tack upon its head so neat, and wonders whether "hub" will run the derned thing in his feet.

A young woman of Galesburg, Ill., has undertaken alone to reform the men of that town. She enters saloons, gambling houses, and worse resorts at night, often surprising her male acquaintances, with whom she then pleads and prays.

The lumber resources of Washington Territory are very great. The average size of the full-grown fir is six feet in diameter, while many of the trees are 300 feet high, and one tree alone has produced 20,000 feet of lumber.

King Kalakaua of the Sandwich Islands is making the tour of the world, and proposes to do the job in something under eighty days, if possible. At last accounts he was in Asia, on his way home via Paris and New York.

Charles Burleigh of Fitchburg has contracted to build an air locomotive, more powerful than any steam locomotive, for use in the underground railroad in New York. It will be 54 feet long.

You don't know how it pains me to punish you," said the teacher. "I guess there's the most pain at my end of the stick," replied the boy, feelingly. "'T any rate, I'd be willing to swap."

The steamship Rodgers, which will go in search of the missing steam yacht Jeannette, will have a supply of provisions on board sufficient to supply thirty-five men for five years.

Father, addressing his little boy, who has brought home a bad mark from school, "Now, Johnnie, what shall I do with this stick?" "Go for a walk, papa."

The essence of true nobility is neglect of self. Let the thought of self pass in, and the beauty of a great action is gone, like the bloom from a soiled flower.

In digging a trench for the water works in Plymouth, N. H., a vein of lead of extra purity and of good quantity was revealed.

Root of evil: "You are not fond of money for itself?" Oh, no," said Johnssonburg; "I am found of it for myself."

HAUNTED ME.—A workingman says: "Debt poverty and suffering haunted me for years, caused by a sick family and large bills for doctoring, which did no good. I was completely discouraged, until one year ago, by the advice of my pastor, I procured Hop Bitters and commenced their use, and in one month we were all well, and none of us have been sick a day since; and I want to say to all poor men, you can keep your families well a year with Hop Bitters for less than one doctor's visit will cost."—Christian Advocate.

TAKE
SIMMONS
Liver Regulator!

ASK the recovered dyspeptics, bilious sufferers, victims of fever and ague, the mercurial diseased patient how they recovered their health, cheerful spirits and good appetite; they will tell you by taking Simmons Liver Regulator.

THE CHEAPEST, PUREST AND BEST FAMILY MEDICINE IN THE WORLD for DYSPEPSIA, CONSTIPATION, Jaundice, Bilious Attacks, SICK HEADACHE, Colic, Depression of Spirits, SOUR STOMACH, Heart Burn, &c., &c.

This unrivaled Southern remedy is warranted not to contain a single particle of Mercury, or any injurious mineral substance, but is

PURELY VEGETABLE,

containing those Southern roots and herbs, which an All-Wise Providence has placed in countries where Liver Diseases mostly prevail. It will cure all diseases caused by derangement of the Liver and Bowels.

The SYMPTOMS of Liver Complaint are a bitter or bad taste in the mouth; pain in the back, sides or joints, often mistaken for Rheumatism; SOUR STOMACH; loss of appetite; bowels alternately costive and lax; headache; loss of memory, with a painful sensation of having failed to do something which ought to have been done; debility; low spirits, a thick yellow appearance of the skin and eyes, a dry cough often mistaken for Consumption. Sometimes many of the symptoms attend the disease, at other times very few; but the LIVER, the largest organ in the body, is generally the seat of the disease, and if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and DEATH will ensue.

"I can recommend as an efficacious remedy for disease of the Liver, Heartburn and Dyspepsia, Simmons Liver Regulator.
LEWIS G. WUNDER, Philadelphia."

"We have tested its virtues personally, and know that for Dyspepsia, Biliousness and Throbbing Headache, it is the best medicine the world ever saw. We have tried forty other remedies before Simmons Liver Regulator, but none of them gave us more than temporary relief; but the Regulator not only relieved but cured us."—*Ed. MANTELS AND GRATES.—We have a choice selection of Mantels and Grates, Stucco Center Pieces, etc., etc. We would call special attention to our Shaking, Dumping, and Dustless open Parlor Fire-place. By the peculiar construction of the backs and sides, which are of cast iron lined with soap-stone, is found a dust flue which carries off the dust while shaking the fire, preventing the escape of the dust or ashes into the room. Mason work attended to.

PHYSICIANS

HAVE SIGNED OR ENDORSED THE FOLLOWING REMARKABLE DOCUMENT:

Messrs. SEABURY & JOHNSON, Manufacturing Chemists, 21 Platt St., New York:

Gentlemen.—For the past few years we have sold various brands of Porous Plasters.—Physicians and the public prefer BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTER to all others. We consider them one of the very few reliable household remedies worthy of confidence. They are superior to all other Porous Plasters or Liniments for external use.

BENSON'S CAPCINE PLASTER is a genuine Pharmaceutical product, of the highest order of merit, and so recognized by physicians and druggists.

When other remedies fail, get a Benson's Capcine Plaster.

You will be disappointed if you use cheap Plasters, Liniments, Pads or Electrical Magnetic toys. 4 2w5

Original.

In re Rose-Bug.

Whence comest thou? with gray-brown wing
And gait ungainly,
With feet that stick to everything—
Our clothing, mainly.

Where hast thou spent thy early youth?
In tropics, maybe.
Who ever saw in very truth
A rose-bug baby?

June cometh, with its sunny hours,
We joy to greet it;
Thou comest with the "Queen of Flowers,"
But come to eat it.

At Summer picnics, see thy star
In the ascendant,
For we are sure to find thee there
A glad attendant.

Thou takest a walk across the cake,
Or, growing bolder,
Thou dost a demonstration make
On Phillis's shoulder.

While Corydon 'twixt hope and fear
His suit is pleading,
Thou sittest, perched upon his ear,
Love's woes unheeding.

Thou hast not one redeeming trait,
No manner gracious,
No "modest worth" to elevate,
O, bug tenacious.

All Summer 'gainst thy wiles we fight,
And when we've passed one,
One rose-bug hail we with delight—
It is the last one.

BURIED IN THE FLAME.

It is very true, Kathleen," said Edgar Fitzgerald, with a quiet laugh, as out of his large blue eyes, in which there slept the spirit of good nature, he shot rays of fun into the dark, flashing ones of his companion. "It is very true," he repeated, "I wasn't born with a silver spoon in my mouth, as the saying is, but notwithstanding, acushla, I was blessed from the moment I saw the bright sun with a reasonable share of good luck. When I came into this beautiful world, Kathleen—made all the more pleasant by your presence, mavourneen—the cats didn't mew nor the dogs bark—a sure sign, the old lady said who attended on my advent, that my days would pass in peace, and that the love of my heart'd be safe in that of the girl who was born to be my helpmeet, a true friend through all my life."

"Ah!" said the beautiful Kathleen, with a smile and a toss of her small, splendidly poised head, "and have you found her yet, Mr. Fitzgerald?"

"By my faith, I have," said Edgar, smiling. "She's all that my dreams ever painted me in the form of a woman. I love her, Kathleen. Ah, if you only knew how deep down in my heart she has buried herself!"

"Then no angel with his trumpet calling to judgment will ever resurrect her?"

"I hope not, Kathleen, I hope not! Why should the darling come out of her home into a cold world!"

"To get a little air and exercise."

"Well answered, young lady. But I'm afraid should the skittish, timid, nervous creature ever get away, there'd be no catching her again."

"Then she's a prisoner, Mr. Fitzgerald?"

"She is, and again she is not, Kathleen. You ought to know."

"I! How should I?"

"Misery! She wants me to answer what's impossible for a man."

"But how can a woman go and bury herself in a man's heart, and then be and not be at liberty to do as she pleases?"

"Women are born logicians now," exclaimed Fitzgerald, with a quizzical look. I always thought when a pretty sheleen loved a man that she didn't care about ranging the commons and trying to worry poor chaps for whom she didn't care a ha'porth."

"And whom do you love, and who do you imagine loves you?"

Fitzgerald laughed, and stood up. He was a splendid specimen of young manhood, and the girl's eyes had a warm, soft fire in them as she looked upon him.

"And you want me to answer your perplexing double question?" he asked.

"I shouldn't have asked it if I didn't think you mannerly enough to answer me," she returned.

"Then I'll answer you by repeating one name twice. It's Kathleen—Kathleen!"

The girl turned away her head and suppressed a sigh.

She did indeed love Fitzgerald—more ardently, more devotedly than he supposed. But there was one whom she loved as dearly in another sense as her young admirer. That one was her father. There had been a feud between the Fitzgeralds and the Fawcetts for generations, and until now the wooing of a son of the one the daughter of the other had never happened. Kathleen felt that a great gulf, an impassable abyss, was between them which neither could cross.

"Kathleen," abruptly spoke Fitzgerald, "don't let us bandy words. You know that I love you with all my heart and soul; that I would lay down my life if it would please you in any way. You know that. Now, girl, why not speak plain. Tell me you hate me, if you dare—love me, if you can."

"Edgar," she whispered, going to his side, and placing one of her little hands on one of his shoulders, "you know that it cannot be. What if I did say that I loved you? It would profit you nothing. Do you think our love for each other would wash out forever the bitter hatred—foolish as it is—that for centuries has divided our people? Love? We who are born sworn enemies, love? No, Edgar. I will tell you I do love you. No one else has my heart but you. But what avails it? Get my father's consent and I will leap into your arms. He would shoot you down as he would a mad dog if he thought you cared for me!"

"I know, I know, darling, all—all that. But I'll pray and hope. There's something tells me, Kathleen, that our souls will yet be united."

He stooped and kissed the beautiful girl.

"I'll wait and pray, too, Edgar," she replied, and then went away in the direction of her home, thinking, dreaming, shuddering.

* * * * * * * * *

Edgar Fitzgerald passionately loved the dark-eyed Kathleen, but the bitter feud which had so long made the ancestors of both generations uncompromising enemies, placed them, as the girl thought and often said, so far apart that there seemed no hope of peace being declared between the families. Thus the young man mused as he lay in his bed, the windows of the room in which it was looking out upon the homestead of the Fawcetts—a quarter of a mile distant—the old moss and ivy-covered stone house in which Kathleen, the only daughter of the family, slept, and mayhap, in her dreams, wandering through grassy, flower-carpeted dells with the man of all the world she cared most for.

And while Edgar rested on his couch wide awake, pondering on the crosses of love, his chamber was suddenly illuminated with a glaring, red light.

Leaping from his cot he ran to the window. A single glance informed him that the homestead of the enemies of his family was in flames.

"My God!" he cried, as he tumbled into his clothing and rushed out of the building, "Kathleen is in peril. I will save her, though I die for it."

With the speed of the antelope he ran across the intervening space. He was the first to arrive.

"Ha!" he muttered, "these insane people will think I have applied the torch to their house. Fools! fools!"

A window opened in the second story, and the young Kathleen looked out.

She recognized the presence of her lover.

"Edgar," she cried in a low, quiet voice, "do not fear for me. The fire is below. Go to the window that looks out on the garden, and break through it. It reaches to a large pantry. Open the door opposite that window and you will there find my father. He is a heavy sleeper. Remove him before the smoke or the flames reach him. God bless you, darling. When you have him clear from danger call me!"

The building was old, and the old timber in it dry as tinder. Before Edgar Fitzgerald could reach the window indicated by the intrepid Kathleen the flames, with a loud roar, swept up the lower corridor and were licking at the panels of the door behind which Mr. Fawcett was reposing, of course unconscious of danger.

Edgar leaped through the window. On opening the entrance opposite he ran to the bed in which the old gentleman was. Not stopping to awaken him, Edgar raised him in his strong arms and retreated as he had entered.

He was not a moment too soon. As he retired long forks of flame had eaten their way through the closed door on the corridor, and were already dancing with the curtains that inclosed the old-fashioned bedstead.

Fitzgerald ran to a summer-house in the garden, and there placed his charge on a long bench. There he slept as soundly as if he had not been removed from his comfortable mattress of down.

"Now for Kathleen," muttered the lover. "Perhaps she's in danger. My God, I hear the flames in the lower hall! Ha! I see they have run up the stairs where Kathleen is!"

The thought and sight maddened him.

He rushed to the front of the old building.

There he found a number of the Fawcett faction. These, on seeing him, began to cry out that he must have, in revenge, fired the house.

"Fools!" he hoarsely shouted, "do not stand there lowering at me. Help me to save the people within, and then do with me as you will. Kathleen! Kathleen!"

There was no response to his cry.

"My God!" he groaned, "she will perish—perhaps has already been destroyed! Help! Help me, men!"

His quick eye caught a ladder lying near the barn.

He ran to it, and dragging it he brought it to the front of the house, and by main strength succeeded in raising it against the window from which his idol had addressed him.

In a moment he had mounted the ladder.

On gaining the window he leaped into the room in which Kathleen slept.

When he had disappeared one or two of the Fawcett faction ran toward the ladder, crying:

"Let's throw this down, and let the villain perish in the flames of his own making."

But three or four of the peasant women, who had been attracted by the "burning," protested, and drove the scoundrels away from the front of the house.

"Kathleen! Kathleen!" again cried Fitzgerald as he pushed his way through a dense volume of smoke that came up from below.

"Kathleen! Kathleen! my darling!" he groaned, "where are you? Speak to me my love."

She heard him not.

The young lover pushed toward the center of the chamber. His feet stumbled over some object, and he would have pitched forward if his breast had not struck against a bedpost. He stooped, and with a cry of joy followed by one of terror, he touched the prostrate, insensible form of his Kathleen.

He raised her in his arms and staggered toward the window.

"I have her—I have her," he shouted.

Regaining the ladder with his precious burden in his arms he was about to descend when a sheet of flame leaped from the window, and struck him fairly in the face.

"Oh, God! save me," he groaned. "Shield her."

He reached the ground. Kathleen was unconscious but unhurt.

The women gathered around her and carried her to a place of safety.

One or two of the more humane of the men, who had witnessed the heroic conduct of Fitzgerald, now came forward to assist him.

These noticed that his face was black and burned to a crisp.

"Oh, help, help me!" he moaned "Will some one give me a hand? I am blind. The fire has melted my eyes out of their sockets."

Again the men looked in his face. Yes, the young giant, like Samson, was harmless now. He was, as he said, deprived of sight.

The poor fellow was taken to his home. There a physician was summoned who dressed his wounds.

He examined his eyes and shook his head gravely. Edgar Fitzgerald, he said, would never see God's light again.

For many weeks he was confined to his room, but his constant companion and nurse was Kathleen, who insisted, in order that she might the better attend on her father's savior, they should be married.

Edgar demurred. He would be a constant burden to her, he pleaded.

"Kathleen, darling," he whispered, "do not sacrifice your young life. I am content to know that I saved you from a terrible death. That will be my solace through all my dark future."

"No, Edgar," she said, firmly, yet gently; "you saved the lives of my father and myself, and they are yours henceforth. Father consents. The feud is buried in the ruins of the lost home. Now let us live and die together. Edgar, it is not so long since you said you would willingly lay down your life for me. You've done something more worthy—you've lost light, and that is the best of all life, for my sake."

They were married, and in all Meath there was not a more loving or more beautiful wife than Kathleen Fitzgerald, who always insisted that her husband was not blind—for he could see the world always through her loving eyes.

Don't chew gum, girls. Have some gumshun about you.

GRACE IN LITTLE THINGS.

There is an old story of a certain minister who, in arranging his toilet for his afternoon parochial calls, found a button gone from his shirt collar, and all at once the good man's patience left him. He fretted and scolded and said undignified and unkind things until the tired wife burst into tears and escaped to her room. The hours of the afternoon wore away, during which the parson called upon old brother Jones, who was all bowed down with rheumatism, and found him patient, and even cheerful; upon young brother Hall, wasting away with consumption, and found him rejoicing in Christ; upon good old grandmother Smith, in her poor, miserable hovel of a home, and found her singing one of the good old hymns, as happy as a bird; upon young Mrs. Brown, who had a few weeks before buried her only child, and found her trustful and serene in the views of God's love which had come to her through her affliction.

The minister went home filled with what he had seen, and when evening came, and he was seated in his easy chair, his good wife near him, busy with her needle, he could not help saying: "What a wonderful thing grace is! How much it will do! There is nothing beyond its power! Wonderful! It can do all things."

Then the little wife said, "Yes, it is wonderful, indeed; but there is one thing that the grace of God does not seem to have power to do."

"Ah, what can that be?" asked her husband.

"Why, it does not seem to have power to control a minister's temper when a shirt button is gone."

This was a new version of the doctrine of grace to the parson, but it was such a version as many another religious man needs to remember. The honest servant girl said that the best evidence she could give of her conversion was now that she swept out the corners and under the sofa, while before she was converted she did not.

There is many a man who can stand up before a multitude and 'confess Christ;' who can be meek when insulted in some public place; who can rub his hands and bless God for the power of religion, but who is too weak to keep his temper at home. The value of art is in the fineness of the work; the perfection of music is in the little accuracies. So the beauty and power of our religion are seen when we manifest grace in little things. As it takes greater skill to engrave the Lord's prayer upon a five cent piece than upon a broad steel plate, so it takes more grace to live a good Christian at home than in public.

CARING FOR SICK FOLKS.

Try to keep a pretty china cup and saucer, a delicate plate and a small goblet to present food on, to the sick. One expert nurse always serves beef-tea and milk in a wine-glass, one of the thin, bell-shaped glasses, that hold more than they look to hold. A sick person will turn away from a bowl of soup, and be pleased with a pretty cupful. Sick children, especially, are amused and pleased with the color and pattern of the cups and dishes, and there is a trace of the fretful child in every invalid. There is something tempting in a small quantity. It does not tax the eye. Therefore, present just as little as you judge the invalid wants to see. A coarse, white dinner plate, heaped with food, will take away all appetite, while a small plate or saucer, especially if it is a pretty, dainty one, will be successfully cleared. A mauve saucer, or a pink plate, will coax a feverish patient to eat rice pudding or orange cream or a few grapes, when all the other arts have failed. There seems to be an appetite of the eyes as well as the stomach, and it must not be offended.

Very often the effort to lift the head, even if persons are not dangerously ill, disinclines them to take refreshing or nourishing drink. There is no need to disturb sufferers by propping them up with pillows and making them lift their heads and change their position. A bent glass tube, sold for five cents at the apothecary's, is not a signal of extreme illness or lowness, except that the head may rest low. It simply means comfort, and that the invalid may not be disturbed, in a sick headache or extreme fatigue, but can take the beverage provided without a change of position. The art of comfort is not cure, but it goes a great way toward it.

TRANSPLANTING BY NIGHT.—A gentleman, anxious to ascertain the effect of transplanting by night instead of by day, made an experiment with the following results: He transplanted ten cherry trees while in bloom, commencing at four o'clock in the afternoon. Those transplanted during daylight shed their blossoms, producing little or no fruit, while those transplanted in the dark maintained their condition fully. He did the same with ten dwarf trees after the fruit was one-third grown. Those transplanted during the day shed their fruit; those transplanted during the night perfected the crop and showed no injury from having been removed. With each of these trees he removed some earth with the roots. The incident is fully vouched for; and if a few similar experiments produce a like result, it will be a strong argument to horticulturists, etc., to do much work at night.

A young hotel clerk narrowly escaped a terrible death a few days ago. He had just purchased a new diamond pin to wear at a Long Branch hotel next season, and while the gem was flashing on his shirt front, he fell out of an elevator in the fourth story. His legs slipped through the hatchway, but his diamond, being larger than the opening, caught on the edge and held him suspended over the abyss until help came. He values that diamond at more than $10 now.

One of the best stories incident to the publication of the revised New Testament, is told at the expense of the pious bulls and bears of Wall street. Some enterprising fellow bought several thousand copies of the old version, and, putting them into new bindings, did a thriving business at 100 per cent., peddling them among the brokers for the new version. It is wickedly believed that the same trick could not have been played upon any other class of business men.

"Eugenie, Eugenie, will you still insist on wearing the hair of another woman upon your head?" "Alphonse, Alphonse, do you still insist upon wearing the skin of another calf upon your feet?"

Malaria is the short cut by which the average physician takes himself out of the vexing features of a diagnosis.—Yonkers Gazette.

It rains alike on the just and the unjust. On the just mainly because the unjust have borrowed their umbrellas.

Over the Bars.

'Twas milking time, and the cows came up
From the meadows sweet with clover,
And stood in the lane while pretty Jane
Had a quiet chat with the drover—
Such a quiet chat that it scarcely seemed
That a single word was spoken;
While a magic spell with the night dews fell,
And the rythm or song was unbroken.

The cattle stood at the lovers' side,
Without any show of vexation,
As though impressed that a five-bar rest
Was a part of their restoration.
And as Jane listened to the notes that came
Right under the bars and over,
Her heart took wing, the silly thing,
And nestled close up to the drover.

She heard him say his home was poor,
That he'd nothing but love to give her,
And she smiled content as though Love had spent
Every arrow he had in his quiver;
She smiled content when the evening air
With the voices of birds was ringing,
And her lips confessed that a lowly nest
Should never prevent her singing.

So over the bars the lovers lean,
In the joy of their sweet communion;
And their looks declare that poverty ne'er
Shall be a bar to their union.
O, sweetest music, go thread your rhymes,
Now under the bars and over,
Where pretty Jane, in the fragrant lane,
Bewitched the heart of the drover.

HOW THEY GOT A MINISTER.

They came to a little village church and heard him. He preached a good sermon. He was reverent in manner; his church services were all orderly; everything moved smoothly. They quietly inquired about him of his own people, and there was but one answer: he was all that a good minister and pastor should be. Then they mailed him a little note. Their vacant pulpit had been placed at his disposal the first Sabbath of the following month; their people wanted to hear him. They would give him $50 for preaching, and pay all expenses. To their surprise, and with a long list of applicants in their hands, from D.D.s to S.T.D.s, they got this reply:

"No, brethren; I cannot come and preach to you. I am not a candidate for your pulpit. I would not leave my church for another, unless Providence pointed the way. Somehow I do not believe the way lies in the direction of appearing before a congregation of strangers and preaching on trial. I did this once. After that I heard I was not quite tall enough; my coat did not fit as it should; my necktie was awry, and I learned that this was 'not accidental, for it was just so in the evening.' In the first part of my sermon I spoke 'too loud,' in the latter part 'too low.' I gestured too much with my left arm; I was 'too nervous' in my manner. My sermon in the morning 'was rather too analytical;' I did not pray for the success of evangelistic work in the evening, although I had in the morning; and there was more of the same order. 'Brethren,' I then said, 'as for myself, no more candidacy.' Now, if you want to hear me, I shall be happy to welcome you to my church; but I have no idea you will come. My necktie is still awry at times, and sometimes I omit to pray for evangelistic work in the evening. But my people put up with all these and other serious deficiencies, and having learned in whatever state I am therewith to be content, I am satisfied to continue to preach for my people. If you ever want to hear me, come and welcome to my church; the sexton will give you a good seat."

The committee found that they could not move the mountain toward Mohammed, so four Mohammeds kindly went to the mountain. They heard that minister. They gave him a call; he went to preach to them to see how he would like them, as the church, and not he, was the candidate. He preached; possibly his necktie was a little awry; possibly he omitted to pray for evangelistic work in the evening. Be that as it may, he accepted the call, was installed, and is now a successful minister.—Christian at Work.

TO PREVENT SUNSTROKE.

Dr. Edward C. Mann of New York gives the following hints for the prevention of sunstroke: To avoid sunstroke, exercise, in excessively hot weather, should be very moderate; the clothing should be thin and loose, and an abundance of cold water should be drank. Workmen and soldiers should understand that, as soon as they cease to perspire, while working or marching in the hot sun, they are in danger of sunstroke, and they should immediately drink water freely and copiously, to afford matter for cutaneous transpiration, and also keep the skin and clothing wet with water. Impending sunstroke may often be warded off by these simple measures. Beside the cessation of perspiration, the pupils of the eyes are apt to be contracted, and there is great frequency of micturition. If there is marked exhaustion, with a weak pulse, resulting from the cold water application, we should administer stimulants. The free use of water, however, both externally and internally, by those exposed to the direct rays of the sun, is the best prophylactic against sunstroke, and laborers, soldiers, and others who adopt this measure, washing their hands and faces, as well as drinking copiously of water every time they come within reach of it, will generally enjoy perfect immunity from sunstroke. Straw hats should be worn, ventilated at the top, and the crown of the hat filled with green leaves or wet sponge. It is better to wear thin flannel shirts, in order not to check perspiration. We may expose ourselves for a long time in the hot sun, and work or sleep in a heated room, and enjoy perfect immunity from sunstroke if we keep our skin and clothing wet with water.

A lady recently examining some clothing for infants in a New York dry goods store was evidently perplexed as to the proper selection, when the clerk thought to assist her by inquiring, "Is your baby a boy or a girl?" The lady flushed hotly, but replied with ingenious frankness, "I don't know yet." It may be inferred that she was suffered to make her selection without further interruption.

A city merchant who had formerly been a resident of a country town was in the habit of making annual visits to his native place. On one of these occasions he missed a minister who had preached there for many years, and on asking for him, one of the deacons said: "Oh, you mean Mr. Chancel: yes, we sent him his resignation last fall."

"The only lady that ever impressed me much," said an old bachelor, "was a 300-pound woman, who was standing in a car, and when the car turned a corner fell against me."

Pleasure, like quicksilver, is bright and shy. If we strive to grasp it, it still eludes us and still glitters.

SLEEPING IN THE BATH-TUB.

There are some men who sleep anywhere and on anything, except a lounge. There is something about an ordinary lounge that will drive sleep from the sleepiest person in the world. A person will go to church and sit right straight up and go to sleep while the minister is trying his best to keep the sleeper awake; but let the man go home and lay down on a lounge, and he can't go to sleep anyway. It may be the way it is built, but we defy anybody to get a wink of sleep on a lounge.

Speaking of lounges, we get the particulars from a minister at Eau Claire, of a thing that happened to a young man last week.

Harry Morrison, a young gas-fitter, who is boarding at his brother-in-law's, was asked to sleep on a lounge in the sitting-room, as there was sickness in the house, and it might be necessary to call on him in the night to go after the doctor. Harry never was much on lounges, anyway, but there was nothing mean about him; so he prepared to go to his rest, so as to be handy in case of emergency. He camped down, and for two hours tried to go to sleep. Sometimes the back of the lounge would rear up and hook him in the back, and then it would stab him somewhere else. The springs would work through the cover and corkscrew themselves into his flesh, and every hair of the lounge-cover seemed to stand on end and run into his vital parts. He got nervous and wished they would call him and send him clear to Chippewa Falls after a doctor. Finally he got up and went into the bath-room, and there was a bath-tub, which looked to him as though it would make a downy bed, such as an angel might sleep in compared to the lounge. He is no angel, but he got some quilts and a pillow and put into the bath-tub, and laid down in it, and in five minutes he was asleep. Most young men kick more or less in their sleep, and Harry is no exception. He kicked, and his tiny hoof came in contact with the faucet, and the water was turned on. The cold water struck the quilts and made no noise to wake him, but gradually the cold fluid found its way up his trowsers legs, along his spine, and, in fact, all over him. He began to dream that he was running for Vice-President on the ticket with Charles Francis Adams. Then the dream changed, and he fancied he was on an Arctic expedition, and while he was lunching on a piece of frozen boned seal, a polar bear was eating his feet off. Then he dreamed he was shoveling snow on a railroad, and a snowplough had run into him and threw him forty feet into the air. It was at this time that he was grasped by the hair of the head by his brother-in-law, and jerked out of the bath-tub, under the impression that he was trying to commit suicide. The brother-in-law had got up to call him and found that the lounge which had known him knew him no more, and the search which followed resulted in finding him nearly covered with water, and snoring as peacefully as a deacon in church. Harry run himself through the clothes-wringer, and came out as dry as a voter on election day, but insists that a bath-tub beats a lounge to sleep in.—Peck's Sun.

A stronger temperance sermon will never be preached than that which an unfortunate woman of Cape Girardeau, Mo., recently delivered before her husband in a bar-room. Setting a covered dish, which she had brought with her, upon the table, she said: "Presuming, husband, that you are too busy to come home to dinner, I have brought you yours," and departed. With a forced laugh he invited his friend to dine with him; but, on removing the cover from the dish, found only a slip of paper, on which was written: "I hope you will enjoy your meal; it is the same your family have at home."

A young man, whose moustache is, like faith, "the evidence of things hoped for, the substance of things not yet seen," called on his prospective father-in-law, and gave notice that he intended marrying the old gentleman's daughter at an early date. "It had better take place on some Saturday, so that it will not interfere with your school hours," sarcastically remarked the old man.

There is a good deal of true nobility in children, after all. "Jo" had accidentally pounded a new bump on the head of "Bert" with a base ball bat. "I'll tell you what, Bert," said he, "I'm going to have a show in my woodshed, Saturday, and you can come in free. The other fellers will have to pay three pins." You've no idea how that reduced the swelling. —New Haven Register.

To a widower: "Is it true that you are going to marry again?" "It's very true." "And whom do you marry?" "My dead wife's sister." "Is she handsome?" "No." "Rich?" "Not at all." "Then why have you chosen her?" "To tell you the truth, my dear friend, in order not to change mothers-in-law."

When a boy sees a big hornet's nest depending from the branch of a tree he is not satisfied that it is loaded until he hits it with a stone. He would rather heave a rock at it than to have five dollars. In a few seconds he would rather five dollars that he hadn't heaved the rock.

A colored preacher in Washington impressed his hearers deeply the other evening by shouting, "Now my poe sinners, get yo houses in order for the Lo'd the Lo'd is comin' my brethren, he's a comin' by the Baltimore & Potomac road: he'll be here to-morrow mornin', shuah."

Life in the Market: "Isn't that a beautiful color?" said the fish dealer, as he cut into a large salmon. "Yes," said Flotsam; "I suppose he is blushing at the extravagant price he is getting for himself."—Boston Transcript.

Do you intend going to a summer resort this summer?" inquired Miss Fitzjoy of her practical friend. "Oh, yes indeed. If there is any place where summer resorts this year, we are going, surely."

A Brooklyn man suffering from rheumatism was advised by his physician to try the waters of some hot spring. "What's the use;" he returned; "I've been in hot water ever since I was married."

Let us compassionate the weaknesses of others, since every one has his own; and let us allow prejudices to wear away by time, when we can not obviate them by reason.—Carnot.

Minnie was two years old. She asked for some water one night. When it was brought, she said: "Papa, can't you get me some fresh water? this tastes a little withered."

The Journal.

SATURDAY, JULY 2, 1881.

THE senatorial struggle at Albany is apparently no nearer an end than ever, though an effort is being made for a conference of Republicans next Tuesday night, to fix up a compromise. Ex-Senator Platt, already politically dead, has effectually nailed up his coffin by a disgusting scandal, being discovered in a room at the Delavan Wednesday night with a woman not his wife, both of them in their night clothes.

PRESIDENT GARFIELD held a reception last Saturday evening at Long Branch, and at the last moment Gen. Grant entered and shook hands with him, and after a moment's whispered conversation took his departure. It is reported that Grant remarked that it had "been very chilly lately," to which statement the President gave a hearty assent, after which the interview came to a close. The President goes to St. Albans, Vt., the latter part of next week.

SENATOR HALE of Maine has succeeded in ousting Gen. Smith, collector at Bangor, in the middle of his term, for the sake of giving his place to ex-Gov. Davis. Gen. Smith is a popular and efficient officer, but Hale wanted the place for his friend Davis, and the President complaisantly yielded to his request. But why should a competent and faithful officer be set adrift in the middle of his term for the sake of pleasing any man? This is not a kind of civil service practice which will strengthen either the service or the party.

THE investigation by the Legislative committee at Albany of the charge of bribery against Senator Sessions has closed without developing any conclusive evidence on either side. Bradley swore that Sessions paid him $2000; Sessions swore that he did not. Now the grand jury has taken up the matter and indicted Sessions for bribery, but he will not be tried until September, though he demanded an immediate trial. Two or three notorious members of the lobby have also been arrested on the same charge. We hope that evidence enough may be brought to light to clearly establish the guilt of every guilty man.

A COMET was discovered in the north-east sky last week Thursday morning, and the astronomers are busily at work trying to make out whether it is one formerly known to astronomers, or a new visitor in this region. Some of the astronomers incline to the belief that it is the comet of 1807. It has a nucleus 1000 miles or more in diameter, and a coma ten or twelve times as broad, while the tail is at least 4,000,000 miles in length, some experts estimating its length at 35,000,000 miles. The eccentric visitor is moving away from the earth at the rate of 300,000 or more miles a day now, so that a few millions of miles difference in the length of his tail will make no particular difference with us, the danger of a collision having passed by.

DESTRUCTIVE STORMS.—Washington was visited by a thunder storm of unprecedented fury Monday night, which unroofed the city hall and over 100 private houses, besides damaging many other buildings. Nearly 1500 shade trees were blown down, and 400 street lamps damaged.——Portions of New York and Pennsylvania were visited on Sunday by a severe thunder storm, accompanied by hail, which did considerable damage.——A remarkably heavy rain and hail storm swept over a section of Kansas last week Friday, destroying young fruit and thousands of acres of grain.——There was a terrific tornado Tuesday night in some portions of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Pennsylvania. A great deal of damage was done and several lives are reported lost.——The storm at Franklin, N. H., Tuesday night was very severe, damaging buildings and crops. Other places in New Hampshire and Maine also suffered more or less by the wind and hail.

A terrible disaster occurred on the Morelos Railroad in Mexico last week Friday night, in which a long train, drawn by two locomotives and filled with soldiers, plunged through a bridge which had been undermined by rains. One hundred barrels of brandy which were on the train caught fire, and the entire train, with the struggling passengers, was soon enveloped in flames. Over 250 lives were lost, comprising 17 officers, 197 privates, 37 women and 5 children. Only 60 persons escaped alive. It is stated that the engineer did not want to cross the bridge, on account of the heavy rain, but was compelled to proceed at the muzzle of a pistol, by one of the officers, who was afraid the men would desert.

A company has been formed in New York for the purpose of providing the people with means for corresponding by telegraph instead of by letter. The company is to have a capital of $3,000,000, with power to increase the same to $21,000,000, and erect wires in all parts of the United States for the purpose of correspondence.

Rev. Dr. N. W. Conkling, pastor of the Rutgers Presbyterian church in New York, is fortunate in having among his admirers a wealthy widow, who sent him and his family to Europe at her expense, bought and furnished a mansion for him at a cost of $70,000, and gave his wife $100,000 in Government bonds.

The crazy cook of the schooner Eustace killed the captain on the Pacific recently and set fire to the vessel. The rest of the crew escaped before the 2300 kegs of powder on board blew up. The maniac perished in the explosion.

All the windows in Tucson, Ariz., were broken, doors burst and crockery smashed Tuesday night by the explosion of a powder house containing two carloads of gun cotton and tonite powder.

The shad season is at an end.

Look out for fires next Monday.

One-half of 1881 has passed away.

Torpedoes and "sich" begin to snap.

The strawberry season is about over.

Cherries are beginning to appear in the market.

Dr. Stowe is at his old home in Vermont, for a few days' recreation.

The days are now decreasing in length at the rate of about a minute each day.

Dr. A. M. Higgins of New Bedford will preach at the Advent chapel Sunday.

Rev. C. R. Tenney of Mattapoisett will preach at St. Paul's church to-morrow.

Fifteen rats were caught in one trap in Robinson & Brooks' hardware store Wednesday night.

The ladies of the Baptist society will have another ice cream social at their church next Wednesday evening.

Principal Whiting of the high school has gone to Bethel, Ct., his mother's old home, for his vacation rest.

The trustees of the savings bank at their meeting last Saturday declared a semi-annual dividend of 2 per cent, payable next Tuesday.

J. P. Murphy, whose foot was run over by the cars a week ago last Sunday, and afterwards amputated, died on Thursday morning.

There will be no preaching service at the Baptist church to-morrow. Sunday school and prayer meeting will be held at the usual hours.

The Universalists had a pleasant and largely attended sociable Wednesday afternoon and evening, at the house of O. M. Graves, in Monson.

President Willis of the Palmer National Bank has been laid up for three or four days with a sprained back, caused by lifting a little too much on a piano.

An agent has been in the village this week securing subscriptions with a view to starting a council here of the American Legion of Honor, a co-operative insurance organization.

July, according to Vennor, will be hot and stormy, with frequent disastrous storms of wind, hail and rain throughout those sections in which the June storms have been so severely felt.

C. O. Makely, who was arrested a while ago by Sheriff Palmer for the larceny of a team at Amherst, was sentenced at Northampton last Saturday to three years in the house of correction.

The cellar wall for the addition to the school house is approaching completion, and the partitions in the building have been removed, in readiness for the changes to be made in the interior.

A party of showmen passed through this place Wednesday with a six-legged cow which they are exhibiting around the country. Her two extra legs seem to enable her not only to support herself, but also about a dozen men and half a dozen horses.

Mr. and Mrs. Hiram Ferry, who live in Silver Street, were surprised Monday evening by the unloading at their door of a nice chamber set and easy chair, costing about $100, left there by their neighbors and friends, who took this method of showing what they thought of them.

The Wide Awake base ball club, composed partly of members of the old carpet mill nine and others, will celebrate the Fourth by a game in the afternoon with George English's nine. The Wide Awakes appear in new uniforms. They also expect to play the North Wilbrahams this (Saturday) afternoon.

A few changes were made in the time table of the Boston & Albany Railroad on Monday. The morning accommodation west leaves Palmer at 8.09 instead of 8.06, and the evening express for New York leaves at 6.17 instead of 6.19. Going east the noon accommodation leaves at 11.38 instead of 11.37, and the first afternoon express at 2 instead of 1.40.

A new concrete walk has been laid this week in front of Feeney's Main street block, as well as in front of Lawyer Strong's office, and pedestrians can now pass over that part of the street without constant fear of a fall. Dr. Warren has also put in a concrete walk and a granite curbing on the Central street front of his lot, and Lawyer Taft has had some of the concrete put in about his house on Pleasant street.

A sharp clap of thunder Tuesday afternoon, sounding very much like the discharge of a cannon, brought nearly everybody in the village to their feet, and probably all were convinced that it was a close shave for them. An examination showed that the bolt struck a tree in the corner of S. W. Lawrence's yard, marking the bark a little on one side, but doing no damage. Several persons in the vicinity felt the influence of the electric fluid, but nobody was injured.

People will do well not to attempt any conversation over their telephones during a thunder storm, or immediately before or after one, unless they want to find out how lightning tastes, or perhaps receive a shock of electricity in their ears. The lightning plays around on the wires quite freely during a storm, and talks through the telephones in a snapping and crackling voice that suggests the wisdom of allowing the electric fluid to monopolize the wires for the time being.

The council called by the Congregational church in this place to advise in regard to the resignation of the pastor, Rev. B. M. Fullerton, will meet at the church next Wednesday, at 9 o'clock a. m. The churches invited to be present, by pastor and delegate, are as follows: First, South, North, Olivet and Memorial of Springfield, Congregational at Wilbraham, Hampden, Monson, Brimfield, Warren, West Warren and Thorndike, and East Congregational of Ware.

"The day we celebrate," or are supposed to, will be here next Monday, but the only attempt at a celebration in the village, so far as we can learn, will be the usual noisy demonstrations by the boys, with probably a few fireworks in the evening. The banks will close, and the stores will also close a portion of the day. At the State Primary School the children will have quite a little celebration among themselves, with running and walking matches, sack, stilt, hand, potato, wheelbarrow and tub races, etc., with prizes for all, closing up with fireworks in the evening.

Our charitably disposed citizens have an opportunity for doing a good deed by furnishing homes for ten days or more for some of the 15000 city children whom the Young Men's Christian Union of Boston are preparing to give a taste of country life this summer. The children are sent out and returned by the Union, who thus afford people an excellent opportunity of letting in a few rays of sunshine upon the lives of these little ones, as well as toning up their constitutions, by entertaining them for a season in the fresh country air. Communications upon the subject should be addressed to Miss H. G. Putnam, 18 Boylston street, Boston.

The case of Mont. Ackert of Brimfield against Lawyer A. R. Barker, formerly of this place, to recover $1000 which he had collected for insurance on Ackert's house, but not turned over, was tried in Springfield Tuesday and Wednesday, and the jury rendered a verdict of $808 for the plaintiff. Barker has now only about $250 of the original sum, which Ackert will now get, though the insurance companies will very likely sue him for it. Ackert is still in jail awaiting trial for inciting Mrs. Makely to burn his house, and Barker will remain there as long as Ackert chooses to pay his board. Lawyers Lathrop of Springfield and Strong of this place appeared for Ackert, and Lawyer Bliss of Springfield for Barker.

A special town meeting is called for next Tuesday, at 2 p. m., to consider the location of the highway near the Burns place in Three Rivers. Dr. Ruggles claims a part of the highway as at present laid out, and has set out his fence accordingly. It was supposed that last year's board of selectmen had settled the matter by having the road properly surveyed and bounds placed, but the doctor is still dissatisfied, and the fence has recently been set up by him several times and torn down by the selectmen, while one or two claims have already been made against the town in consequence of the fence being in the road. It would seem to be about time for this thing to come to an end in some way, before the town is obliged to pay damages, and it is to be hoped that the matter may be definitely settled at this meeting.

One of our well-known railroad engineers took a day for rest and recreation recently, and concluded to gratify his appetite for the speckled beauties inhabiting the country brooks. The way he did it is thus described by the Willimantic Journal: "No class of men enjoy an occasional respite from duty more than railroad engineers, and it is no wonder that "Happy Cal Moulton," who holds the throttle on Conductor Sander's train on the New London Northern road, laid out a rich day's sport (in his mind) in trouting at Stafford last Saturday. He struck in early and with the latest style tackle, and succeeded during the day in catching several things, among which the most notable were, two trout, one measuring one and a quarter inches in length and the other one and a half inches, a tumble into the brook and a thorough wetting, and a good square nap in his sister-in-law's bed while his clothes were being dried, also, a firm resolve never to be caught holding a pole over any brook for any kind of fish."

The following persons held the lucky numbers at the drawing of the articles at the close of St. Thomas' bazar last week Friday evening:—Miss Maggie J. Carberry of Worcester the gold watch; easy chair, J. J. Moynahan; ton of coal, Alice Burns; barrel of flour, Dennis D. O'Grady, Monson; glass tea set, Patsey Griffin; seal skin gloves, John Luman, Thorndike; dozen brush brooms, S. Meano; pair silver cups, Dr. Holbrook; pair blankets, Daniel Doyle; paisley shawl, Mrs. Ellen Watts; pair ladies' shoes, Miss Sarah Long; pair boots, Daniel Doyle; napkin rings, Rev. P. F. Callery; gold ring, Joanna Long, Monson; set silver spoons, James Rooney; parlor lamp, Kate Maguire; glass pitcher, Katie Kelleher, Three Rivers; flower vases, Michael Manning; steel engraving, F. H. McDonnel; and Miss M. Smythe of Westfield, Patsey Griffin, Wm B. Thompson and Philip McNearny each drew a box of cigars. The net result has not been ascertained, as the returns are not all in, but enough has been learned to say that it was a success and that a good portion of the church debt will be paid.

The readings by Prof. Geo. N. Cross at Wales Hall Monday evening were attended by a larger audience than has been present at a similar entertainment in this place for some time, indicating that the object of the entertainment, to provide funds toward the purchase of a piano for the high school room, was one to which the citizens were ready to lend a helping hand. Prof. Cross has an excellent voice, a good command of features and gestures, and a ready appreciation of the various points in his selections, especially in those of a humorous turn. His "Charity Dinner" was the gem of the evening, its different characters being portrayed in a manner remarkably true to life. "Gabriel Grub" was also given in a very effective manner, these two pieces being the best of the literary part of the programme. The band opened the evening's entertainment with a selection which deserved an encore, and the readings were interspersed with music, Miss Jessie Parks playing a solo on the piano, while vocal selections were given by Misses Lizzie Feeney and Carrie Lacey, the latter's "Ardito" being sung with much delicacy and expression. The net proceeds of the entertainment were something over $20.

Some important changes have been made in the time table of the New London Northern Railroad this week, and additional trains put on which give a better passenger service than the road has ever had before. A new train, connecting with the modoc from the west, now leaves for New London at 6.42 a.m., reaching there at 9.14. Returning, the train leaves at 6.05 p. m. and reaches Palmer at 8.43, connecting with the modoc for the west. This train will enable parties to spend a day at the shore visiting Watch Hill, Block Island, Greenport, Sag Harbor, and other resorts in that vicinity. Conductor Downer's train south in the afternoon now leaves at 2.05, connecting with the express from the west, and runs through to New London on express time, arriving there at 4.25 p. m. and connecting with train for Newport. This arrangement is made for the special accommodation of the summer travel to Newport, and enables parties leaving Saratoga in the morning to reach Newport the same evening. The afternoon train for Amherst, put on this week to accommodate the travel during commencement at Amherst, is to be continued, leaving this station at 2.08 p.m. and arriving on the return trip at 5.35. Conductor Dennis Mahoney collects the tickets on the new morning train south.

The high school exhibition came off at Wales Hall on Monday afternoon, according to the programme published last week. The stage was handsomely decorated with flowers and evergreen, and the various parts of the programme were performed in a very creditable manner, although some of the speakers failed to make themselves heard distinctly in the rear part of the hall. The musical portion of the entertainment was especially good in some parts, Miss Della Holbrook's piano solo, "The Dying Poet," being rendered in excellent taste, while the duet, "Fly Away, Birdling," by Misses Dewey and Mulvihill, was sung in a manner which was evidently aud justly well-pleasing to the audience. The hall was very comfortably filled with an audience composed somewhat largely af ladies, and bouquets were presented to the scholars who took part in the entertainment, with a somewhat amusing regularity, which indicated careful forethought on the part of their friends. There was but one graduate, Miss Mary Dewey, to whom the committee awarded a diploma. We understand that several who should have graduated did not finish out the term, a fact to be regretted. There are now enough scholars in our schools so that the high school ought to graduate a good-sized class every year.

Editor of the Journal:—A town meeting having been called for next Tuesday afternoon, an explanation of the call of the meeting at this time is in order. It seems that many years ago Mr. Ferrell and Mr. Earle gave the land and built the road from the Ferrell place to the village of Three Rivers, and presented it to the town. The gift was accepted, and the road has been used as a public way for some forty-five years. Four or five years ago a citizen of Three Rivers set up a claim to a part of the road, and urged the claim with a persistency peculiar to himself. Finally the selectmen of last year, strictly following the law provided for such cases, and acting impartially, employed a competent surveyor, ascertained and fixed the boundaries of the road, and properly recorded the result of their labors upon the town records. A fence having been placed in the road the present board of selectmen, following their only line of duty, ordered the owner to remove it. Their request not being complied with, the selectmen removed it. The owner of the fence placed it back in the road again. These operations were repeated and might have continued indefinitely, had not the owner, attended by some Frenchmen whose brains were excited and whose hands were red with the juice of strawberries, appeared and told one of the selectmen that there might be a riot if he touched that fence again. This bold act has had a marked effect upon the majority of the selectmen, and they are willing to have a re-survey or do anything to appease the anger of the offended citizen. At all events, he remains master of the situation. It is to be hoped that the voters next Tuesday will advise the selectmen that what is sometimes called "back bone" is a quality as commendable in executive officers, as a desire to please. FAIR PLAY.

Palmer, July 1st, 1881.

THORNDIKE.

Daniel Leary has opened a boot, shoe and cigar store at his house on High street.

Charles Hastings of this place has this week received a check for $2260.13 pension and back pay, and will hereafter receive a pension of $18 per month.

WALES.

Rev. A. N. Woodruff is spending a week in Vermont.

The Methodists held a strawberry and ice cream festival in their vestry Wednesday evening.

The roads through the center of the town have been repaired, and are in the best shape they have been for many years.

BONDVILLE.

The band will have a picnic the Fourth in the grove just south of the site of the new mill. They will erect a large platform to accommodate those who wish to dance, and a pleasant time is anticipated.

Mr. Munson, of the Mass. Central Railroad, not being satisfied with the old survey, has made a new one, which passes just south of the depot, crossing the river and Main street a little north of Murdock's store.

The county commissioners have visited the village and ordered a survey of Main street, with a view to straightening it from Murdock Bros'. store to R. L. Bond's ice house, which will greatly improve the appearance of the place.

BRIMFIELD.

Silas C. Herring, the well-known New York safe manufacturer who formerly spent his Summers in this town, died suddenly of apoplexy while sitting in a chair at his home in Plainfield, N. J., last week Thursday evening, at the age of 78. By a singular coincidence his watch stopped at the exact moment of his death. Mr. Herring was a native of Brookfield. At the age of 17 he went to Albany, to enter a grocery store. Subsequently he moved to New York, and in 1837 made the acquaintance of Enos Wilder, the originator of the idea of using plaster of Paris as a non-conductor of heat, in protecting valuables from fire. Subsequent experiments proved the value of the idea, and in 1843 Mr. Herring secured the sole right to manufacture safes filled with this material, by paying Mr. Wilder one cent a pound royalty—an arrangement which soon put him on the road to wealth.

WARREN.

Rev. Mr. Sanderson preaches to the young men next Sabbath.

Rev. J. Forbes attended the commencement exercises at Amherst.

The Methodist Sabbath school have a picnic at Bliss's grove on the Fourth.

The Ladies' Home Missionary Society met with Mrs. Joseph Ramsdell Wednesday afternoon.

A number of the people have engaged cottages at the seaside, and are waiting for warm weather before they occupy them.

The Methodist society have decided to repair their church, and an architect has looked over the building and is preparing plans.

A very severe hail storm passed over the town Tuesday afternoon, doing great injury, breaking down trees, and destroying gardens and fruit. It is estimated that over a thousand panes of glass were broken in the town. Some of the hail stones measured between five and six inches in circumference.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

E. F. Johnson has built two boats, which he will place in Nine Mile pond to let, both for rowing and fishing purposes.

The Fourth will be observed in a quiet manner. Many of the young people will have basket picnics, some going to Hampden ponds and others to Connecticut. The mills will shut down for the day.

John M. Merriam, who has been employed as cashier for Cutler & Co. a little more than a year, returns to his home at South Framingham to-day, where he will spend the Summer, with the purpose of entering Phillips Exeter Academy, next Fall, for a year, to fit for Harvard College. By his genial disposition and gentlemanly bearing Mr. Merriam has gained many friends who will regret his departure.

In accordance with the vote of the town last April, residents will be permitted to fish in Nine Mile pond on Thursdays of each week, during the four months ensuing, by applying to the fish committee for a permit, and paying twenty-five cents for the same. This will allow the holder to fish the first and third or second and fourth Thursdays of each month. Non-residents will not be allowed to fish. But one hook can be used on one line. No person or family will be allowed to take away more than ten pounds on each fishing day. All fish weighing less than one pound must be put back into the water unless mortally injured. The committee are Chauncey E. Peck, Calvin G. Robbins and Samuel M. Bliss.

HAMPDEN.

All the district schools closed for the Summer vacation yesterday.

Rev. Mr. Dicky, who has been teaching the high school in this place the present term, preached for Rev. Mr. Root last Sabbath.

Farmers have commenced cutting their hay. Some report a small crop compared with last year; others report full harvest.

Wm. H. Barnes is building a large dwelling and store on the same ground where his dwelling and store was recently burned. The building is 70 feet long and two stories high, and will be quite an addition to that part of the village.

C. C. Spellman, Esq., clerk of the police court in Springfield, and his family, have taken up their residence for the warm weather in Hampden, keeping house in the dwelling recently occupied by the late Mrs. W. P. Spellman.

There was a dance at Academy Hall last week Friday evening. Ravine mill paid off their help the same day. The result was a big drunk Saturday. Four were arrested and paid $9.50 each. Frank Cane, an old offender, escaped arrest by swimming the Scantic and fleeing to Connecticut.

H. M. Sessions, editor of the "Devon Herd Book," and the model farmer of Hampden, has sold his farm to A. C. Burleigh for $7000, and has also sold at auction all his personal effects. Just what Mr. Sessions is going to do is not publicly known. It is suggested that he would make an efficient detective. He made a complaint against Segar of the Allen House for selling to Dudley & Richardson of Boston in May. Mr. Segar's trial is to come before the Superior Court in December,

The case between the towns of Hampden and Wilbraham, tried at the present term of Superior Court, resulted in a disagreement of the jury. This is the second time the case has been tried. The jury stood 9 for Hampden and 3 for Wilbraham.

MONSON.

Dr. Spooner has his dental rooms in Central Hall block open every Thursday.

Wendell Glasser, merchant tailor, advertises goods at cost for the next 30 days.

Geo. E. Grout advertises goods at cost, preparatory to removal to his new store.

The school census shows that there are 500 children in town between the ages of 5 and 15 years.

The monthly meeting of the selectmen occurs to-day (Saturday) instead of Monday, the usual day.

Miss Carberry, the popular organist of St. Patrick's church, resigns her position there and goes to Worcester.

The Howard clock men are putting the clock into the Catholic church spire. It is to strike the half hours.

Henry E. Aldrich, livery man on Green St., has shown some stylish turn-outs on our streets lately, and can supply the wants of our people in that line very satisfactorily.

Thirty-eight candidates for admission to the high school presented themselves for examination at school No. 1, last Saturday, and all, with one exception, were admitted, 16 going in clear and 20 on conditions.

Mrs. E. F. Morris and children are at Saratoga for the Summer. Mrs. H. Lyon is at Long Branch, and Charles Merrick takes a trip via Saratoga and Lake George to the Thousand Isles and Montreal.

The programme for July 4th will consist mostly of picnics. The Catholic society spend the day at Reynolds' grove; the K. V. R. Club have a fish fry at Wales; and Evergreen Park, at State Line, offers numerous attractions to all comers. In the evening there will be a display of fireworks from Newton's Hill.

A large audience greeted "Cobwebs" at Central Hall Wednesday evening, and were evidently much delighted with the novel and beautiful entertainment. Considerable amateur talent was developed and some of the actors made decided hits. The frog was very grotesque, Capt. Hornet very graceful, Princess Firefly a perfect little coquette, the Butterfly Queen very regal in manner and appearance, and the wicked spider was cleverly caught in his own toils by the gallant Prince Grasshopper. Miss Winslow has put a large amount of work into the rehearsals, and fairly earned her success,

Miss Eaton is to continue in charge of the ladies' department of the academy for the coming year, and a young man with two years' experience in teaching takes the English department. Prof. Cummings has arranged three courses of study, covering four years' time—classical, Latin and English, and English. The students last term were arranged according to these courses, and new students will be classified with them. Arrangements are being made to accommodate students with board and rooms at very reasonable rates. The indications for next year, including the large class from the high school, point to an increased number of attendants.

Names of scholars in Dist. No. 1 who have been perfect in attendance during the past term: Grammar, Bertha Chandler, Lillie Everts, Maggie Donahue, Georgie Whiting, Jennie Day, Charlie Keep, Arthur Fisk, Arthur King, Johnnie Marriott; intermediate—Annie Healy, Lena Merrick, Mary Brosnahan, Sarah Keefe, Hattie Stacy, Gertie Woodrough, Sarah Parker, Minne Gough, Mabel Park, Lillie Burdick, Charlie Rood, Johnnie Parker, Johnnie Lynch, Johnnie Purcel, Georgie Marriott, Willie O'Brien; primary—Emma Fitzgerald, Susie Mixter, Alice Park, Annie Parker, Nellie Stacy, Matilda Stacy, Alice Underwood, Fisk Bacon, Daniel Gallivan, James Gough, Johnnie Keefe, James Ryan, Charlie Marriott.

The assessors have completed their work, and the result is as follows: Number of polls, 846; personal property, $332,883, real estate, $1,005,401, total, $1,338,284. Total tax, $19,863.78; rate per thousand, $13.75; poll tax, $2. Number of horses, 452; cows, 655; sheep, 175; houses, 592; acres of land, 26,344. The leading taxpayers are as follows: Joseph L. Reynolds $813, William N. Flynt & Co. $608, D. W. Ellis & Co. $601, S. F. Cushman $503, Chas. H. Merrick and Merrick, Fay & Co. $464, C. W. Holmes, Jr., $420, Mrs. Horatio Lyon $415, John F. Heery & Bro. $398, Cyrus W. Holmes $247, Daniel G. Green $229, William N. Flynt $201, Norcross & Reynolds $159, Alfred Norcross $156, S. F. Cushman and E. F. Morris, trustees for Mrs. Carrie R. Dale, $137, Isaac H. Plumley of Westfield $132, Daniel Foskit $107, Chas. Fowler $106.

WARE AND VICINITY.

A thing long needed and now appreciated is the barge of William Weeks.

The French Catholic society cleared $175 at their strawberry festival last week.

Willie Scott was arrested this week, on the complaint of his mother, who is addicted to drink and has but little control over him. After laying in the lock-up three days his case was continued on his promising to do better.

The Fourth promises to be a quiet one in the village, the Land League holding their picnic nearly a mile out, the Good Templars and friends going to Greenwich. There will however no doubt be noise enough in the morning to satisfy all for the day.

The whole neighborhood of Eddy street was aroused about 10 o'clock Monday night by shrieks and screams for help, coming from the vicinity of the house of Thomas Corbit. Some of the neighbors who rushed to the rescue were told to go home and mind their business. It seems that Mrs. Corbit, being in the yard, discovered a man in the act of stealing clothes, when she grappled with him and cried for help, and is sorry she could not have held on to him until he could have been identified.

The event of the week has been the closing of the Ware high school, with the examination, reunion, graduation exercises and the reception. The examination and closing exercises proper were held at the high school room on Friday of last week, and were highly creditable to all who took a part therein, it being admitted that Prof. Merrill has accomplished more and better work than has been done in the school in the same time for several years, the graduating class being the youngest, we think, ever graduated. The school room was beautifully decorated with flowers and evergreen, noticeable among which was the word "Welcome," in letters of roses on an evergreen ground. The address by Prof. Merrill to the graduating class was one of deep interest. He told them that if he had failed to impress upon them the thought that there was One to whom they should all go for instruction and guidance, who was higher and more important than any earthly teacher could be, then he had utterly failed in his calling as a teacher, and that he most earnestly hoped that no one who had been a pupil of his would ever use the education they had received for any base, ignoble or skeptical purpose, and rather than be so used the cost of it had far better be thrown in the fire. The only thing to mar the proceedings were, to say the least, the ungentlemanly remarks made by Prof. Merrill's predecessor. The interest of all in the school was shown by the large number of visitors present.

The graduating exercises at the Congregational church Wednesday evening were attended by as many as the house could well accommodate. The platform was the largest ever put in the church, and words can but faintly portray the magnificence of the floral display made thereon. In the rear was a mass of evergreen 14 feet wide and 16 feet high, arched at the top to correspond with the frescoing of the church, and bearing the class motto, "We live in deeds, not years," in white Old English letters on the green ground, as well as the figures "'81." This motto seemed especially appropriate in view of the fact that the class were so young and accomplished their work in so thorough a manner. Immediately in front of this evergreen was a mound nearly eight feet high composed of the richest flowers and plants. On the front corners were two large urns filled with trailing plants and flowers, while about the platform and on the organ was a beautiful display of cut flowers wrought in bouquets and tasteful designs. The platform was occupied by the graduating class, with their teachers upon the left, while on the right were the chairman of the school committee and Revs. A. J. Hall and W. G. Tuttle. It was regretted that Dr. Perkins could not be present, he being away attending the graduation of his daughter. In the salutatory by Miss Belle Naylor allusion was pleasantly made to various helps the class had received outside the school room, not the least of which was that derived from the use of the books of our public library. The good suggestions in the essay, "What shall we do with our Girls?" by Miss Bond, if followed, would make many happy homes. "Ancient History," an essay by Miss Coney, was an eloquent and interesting review of the subject. The "classical essay with sibylline utterances," by Miss Canavan, was good, and caused many a smile as one and another were brought to view in the magic mirror of the future. The valedictory addresses by Miss Ida R. Naylor were full of good thoughts, especially so in her address to her classmates, which if heeded would insure their greatest possible happiness on earth and a haven of rest hereafter. The presentation of the diplomas was made by Dr. W. W. Miner.

The past Winter was one of extraordinary severity in Iceland. Ptarmigans and other birds froze to death. All the sea was covered with ice as far as one could see from the tops of the mountains, and it was thought that it might not break up before August.

New Books.

"H. R. Stevens on Ensilage," is the title of a little work recently published, which comes as a timely contribution on the subject of ensilage and silos, now interesting so many farmers. In this work Dr. Stevens gives his own experience at "Echo Dale Farm" in Dover, Mass., with full and explicit directions for making and filling silos of different sizes and forms. In addition to his own experience, that of twenty-five practical farmers is also given, in the form of correspondence, thus telling the farmer just what he wants to know—the practical workings of this process of curing green forage crops, with those who have tried it; and if it does not lead him to build a silo of his own, it will at least give him a new interest in the subject and open his eyes to its possible advantages. The book is nicely bound in cloth, and sold by the booksellers for 50 cents; or will be sent by mail for 60 cents by the author, H. R. Stevens, Boston.

One of the handsomest editions of the Revised New Testament which has come to our notice is that published by the Henry Bill Publishing Co. of Norwich, Ct. It is printed on heavy paper of choice quality, in large, clear type, and is handsomely bound in American Morocco with gilt edges, making it indeed what the publishers call it, the "standard edition," well worthy a place in every family.

TOWN WARRANT.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS. HAMPDEN SS.—To H. A. Northrop, constable of the town of Palmer, Greeting:

In the name of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, you are hereby directed to notify and warn all the inhabitants of the town of Palmer qualified to vote in elections and town affairs to meet at the Town House in said Palmer, on Tuesday, the fifth day of July next, at two o'clock p. m., to act on the following articles, viz:

Article 1.—To choose a moderator to preside at said meeting.

Art. 2.—To see if the town will accept the location of a town way leading from near the house of O. B. Sikes to the highway leading from Three Rivers to Thorndike, as laid out by the Selectmen in 1880.

Art. 3.—To choose committees and give them instructions.

And you are hereby directed to serve this warrant by posting up attested copies thereof at the different public places designated by vote of the town, seven days at least before the holding of said meeting, and cause this warrant to be printed in the Palmer Journal, at least two issues before the holding of said meeting.

Hereof fail not, and make due return of this warrant, with your doings thereon, to the town clerk, on or before the time of said meeting.

Given under our hands this twenty-third day of June, A. D. 1881.

E. G. MURDOCK, H. G. LOOMIS, H. McMASTER, } Selectmen of Palmer.

A true copy. Attest: H. A. NORTHROP, Constable of Palmer.

HOP BITTERS NEVER FAIL.

If you are a man of business, weakened by the strain of your duties, avoid stimulants, and use Hop Bitters.

If you are a man of letters, toiling over midnight work, to restore brain nerve waste, use Hop Bitters.

If you are young, and suffering from any indiscretion or dissipation; if you are married or single, old or young, suffering from poor health or languishing on a bed of sickness, rely on Hop Bitters.

Whoever you are, whenever you fell that your system needs cleansing, toning or stimulating, without intoxicating, take Hop Bitters.

Thousands die annually from some form of Kidney disease that might have been prevented by a timely use of Hop Bitters.

Have you dyspepsia, kidney, or urinary complaint, disease of the stomach, bowels, blood, liver or nerves? You will be cured if you use Hop Bitters.

If you are simply week and low-spirited, try it! It may save your life. It has saved hundreds.

GEORGE ROBINSON.

Corner Central and Pleasant Sts., Palmer.

TO THE HONORABLE THE JUDGE OF THE PROBATE COURT IN AND FOR THE COUNTY OF HAMPDEN.

Respectfully represents your petitioner, David E. Tenney of Palmer, in said county, that on the third day of March, A. D. 1872, Eunice B. Durkee of said Palmer, made her last will and testament, and on the first day of January, A. D. 1875, made a codicil thereto—that said Eunice B. Durkee departed this life on the 30th day of March, A. D. 1879, and on the first Tuesday of April following the said will and codicil were admitted to probate by said court, and letters testamentary issued to your petitioner, the executor therein named.

That among the provisions of said last will and testament are the following, as by reference to a certified copy of said will in said court to be produced will more fully appear, to wit:

"Seventh—I will and bequeath to my sister, Nabby Ellis, the rest of my household effects, to be divided as I shall designate to her."

"Eighth—I will to the Foreign Missions of the Baptist Missionary Union and to the Emancipated of the Baptist Home Mission Society formed in New York in 1832, all the remainder and residue of my esthate, to be equally divided between the two missions."

That after the death of said testatrix there were found with said will, in the handwriting of said testatrix, and one bearing her signature, two certain papers, copies of which are hereto annexed, marked "A" and "B." That within about one year from the date of said letters testamentary and before any of the effects named in said will to be by her distributed, as herein set forth, were delivered to her, she, the said Nabby Ellis, died, and no administration has ever been taken on her estate, and said effects, amounting according to the inventory of the estate of said testatrix to about $89.30, still remain in the hands of your petitioner.

That your petitioner is not acquainted with any society and can learn of none bearing the precise name of either of those named in the eighth clause of said will hereinbefore set forth, but is informed and believes that the society therein called the Baptist Home Mission Society was intended by said testatrix to be the American Baptist Home Mission Society, a society formed in New York in the year 1832, and the society therein called the Baptist Missionary Union was intended by said testatrix to be the American Baptist Missionary Union. That the heirs-at-law of said testatrix at the time of her decease were Nabby Ellis of Ware, Mass., a sister of said testatrix since deceased, E. B. Ellis of Blandford, A. Parkhurst Ellis of Hardwick, both in this Commonwealth, John G. Ellis of Melrose, Minnesota, and Susan S. Town of Rindge, New Hampshire, children of Lucy Ellis, a deceased sister. That the heirs-at-law of said Nabby Ellis are A. Goodrich Ellis and Mary E. Pierce, both of said Ware, Abby B. Anderson of Warren, Mass., and Thomas D. Ellis of Bridgeport, Connecticut.

That the property in the hands of your petitioner, other than said $89.30, to be distributed under said will, amounts to $1617.87, as shown by the final account of your petitioner now on file in said court.

That at least two of the heirs-at-law of said Nabby Ellis now interested in said estate claim that said residuary legacy is void on the ground that the legatees therein named have no legal existence, and one of them has further claimed that said papers, copies of which are hereto annexed, marked "A" and "B," should have no legal effect in the distribution of that portion of the testatrix estate which is bequeathed in the seventh clause of said will, hereinbefore set forth, on the ground that the same were not duly executed as a part of said will. That your petitioner is in doubt as to who is legally entitled to receive the money and other effects now in his hands.

Wherefore he prays your honor that all persons interested in said estate may be cited to appear before said court at the term thereof named in such citation, and that after due hearing in the premises your honor will determine to whom the estate now remaining in his hands belongs, and decree a distribution thereof among such persons or corporations as are entitled thereto, appoint all necessary trustees, and make such other orders and decrees as your honor may deem meet and proper. DAVID E. TENNEY.

By his Attorney, C. L. GARDNER.

Dated June 15th, 1881.

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.—HAMPDEN SS. PROBATE COURT.—On the foregoing petition all persons and corporations interested are hereby cited to appear at a Probate Court to be holden at Springfield in said county of Hampden, on the first Tuesday of July next, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, to show cause, if any they have, against the same. And the petitioner is ordered to serve this citation by delivering a copy of said petition and of this order to each person and corporation interested that can be found within the State, fourteen days at least before said court; and if any one cannot be so found, by also publishing the same in the Palmer Journal, a newspaper printed at Palmer, once in each week for three weeks at least before said court, and by mailing a copy thereof to the principal office of each such corporation and to the place of residence last known to the petitioner of each such person not found within the State, fourteen days at least before said court.

Witness, William S. Shurtleff, Esquire, Judge of said Court, this sixteenth day of June, in the year eighteen hundred and eighty-one.

Observations of Rev. Gabe Tucker.

You may notch it on de palin's as a mighty risky plan
To make your judgment by de clo'es dat kivers up a man;
For I hardly needs to tell you how you often come ercross
A fifty-dollar saddle on a twenty dollar hoss.
An', wukin' in de low-groun's, you diskiver as you go,
Dat de fines' shuck may hide de meanes' nubbin in a row!

I think a man has got a mighty slender chance for Heben
Dat holds on to his piety but one day out ob seben;
Dat talks about de sinners wid a heap o' solemn chat,
And never draps a nickel in de missionary hat;
Dat's foremos' in de meetin'-house for raisin' all de chunes,
But lays aside his 'ligion wid his Sunday pantaloons!

I nebber judge o' people dat I meets along de way
By de places whar dey come frum an' de houses whar dey stay;
For the bantam chicken's awful fond o' roostin' pretty high,
An' de turkey-buzzard sails above de eagle in de sky;
Dey ketches little minners in de middle ob de sea;
An' you finds de smalles' 'possum up de bigges' kind o' tree!

How to Catch a Horse.—If the horse is shy and hard to catch, take finely-grated castor, oils of rhodium and cummin. Keep them in separate bottles, well corked. Put some of the oil of cummin on your hand and approach the horse on the windy side. He will then move toward you. As soon as you can reach him rub some of the cummin on his nose, give him a little of the castor or anything he likes, and get a few drops of the oil of rhodium on his tongue. After this you can make him do nearly everything you want. Treat him kindly, feed well, handle gently, and your victory is certain.—Turf, Field and Farm.

The work of tunneling the English Channel is proceeding briskly. The English engineers have excavated a gallery 800 or 900 yards long and seven feet in diameter, while the French have made equal progress on their side. It is believed that a seven foot experimental tunnel may be completed in five years. The distance is about ten miles.

"You are now one," said the minister to the happy pair he had just tied together with a knot they could never undo with their teeth. "Which one?" asked the bride. "You will have to settle that for yourself," said the dominie. It was subsequently settled with a broom-stick.

Mr. Gladstone, the great English premier, once said, when opposing the policy of the Government licensing the sale of intoxicating liquors, "It is the duty of the Government to make it as hard as possible for a man to go wrong, and as easy as possible for him to go right."

The long-continued wet weather has effectually disposed of the army worm on Long Island, millions of them being found dead in the fields. Before the storm set in they had begun their ravages and threatened to do as much damage as last year, when they ruined thousands of acres of wheat, rye and other crops.

The International Arbitration and Peace Association has attained such popularity in Europe that Lord Derby has joined it, while Herr Lasker, the chief of the German Liberals, has become President for Germany, and Herr Dorz, President of the Swiss Confederation, has become President for Switzerland.

"Don't waste your time in clipping off the branches," said the woodman to his son, "but lay your ax at the root of the tree." And the young man went out and laid the axe at the root of the tree, like a good and dutiful boy, and then went fishing. Truly, there is nothing so beautiful as filial obedience.

In 1880 the crop of winter wheat in Illinois was nearly 54,000,000 bushels. According to a very thorough and careful report the crop this year must be very much less. Estimates given indicate a yield of not more than fifty per cent as compared with last year's crop.

An old Scotch lady gave a pointed reply to a minister who knew he had offended her, and who expressed surprise that she should come so regularly to hear him preach. Said she, "My quarrel's wi' you, mon; it's no' wi' the gospel."—Chicago Tribune.

There are many prehistoric things in Arizona. A writer in the Tucson Citizen says that six miles north of Camp Powell, at the base of the Santa Cataltna Mountains, there are the remains of an ancient town, covering an area of over sixty acres.

The people of New London, Conn., are cutting down many of the stately elms that adorn that city, because they grow in the center of sidewalks or just in front of doors and windows, and are in the way.

A man in Racine, Wis., thirty-five years of age, was introduced by friends to a blooming country girl whom he had never seen before, on the 5th instant, and in three hours had married her.

It is useless for physicians to argue against short-sleeved dresses. The Constitution of the United States says, "The right to bear arms should not be interfered with."

TAKE
SIMMONS
Liver Regulator!

ASK the recovered dyspeptics, bilious sufferers, victims of fever and ague, the mercurial diseased patient how they recovered their health, cheerful spirits and good appetite; they will tell you by taking Simmons Liver Regulator.

The Cheapest, Purest and Best Family Medicine in the World for DYSPEPSIA; CONSTIPATION, Jaundice, Bilious Attacks, Sick Headache, Colic, Depression of Spirits, Sour Stomach, Heart Burn, &c., &c.

This unrivaled Southern remedy is warranted not to contain a single particle of Mercury, or any injurious mineral substance, but is

PURELY VEGETABLE,

containing those Southern roots and herbs, which an All-Wise Providence has placed in countries where Liver Diseases mostly prevail. It will cure all diseases caused by derangement of the Liver and Bowels.

The SYMPTOMS of Liver Complaint are a bitter or bad taste in the mouth; pain in the back, sides or joints, often mistaken for Rheumatism; SOUR STOMACH; loss of appetite; bowels alternately costive and lax; headache; loss of memory, with a painful sensation of having failed to do something which ought to have been done; debility; low spirits, a thick yellow appearance of the skin and eyes, a dry cough often mistaken for Consumption. Sometimes many of the symptoms attend the disease, at other times very few; but the LIVER, the largest organ in the body, is generally the seat of the disease, and if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and DEATH will ensue.

"I can recommend as an efficacious remedy for disease of the Liver, Heartburn and Dyspepsia, Simmons Liver Regulator.
Lewis G. Wunder, Philadelphia."

"We have tested its virtues personally, and know that for Dyspepsia, Biliousness and Throbbing Headache, it is the best medicine the world ever saw. We have tried forty other remedies before Simmons Liver Regulator, but none of them gave us more than temporary relief; but the Regulator not only relieved but cured us."—*Ed. BACK ACHE

POSITIVELY CURED BY

BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS.

Reasons Why they are Preferred to All Other Porous Plasters or External Remedies:

FIRST.
Because they possess all the merit of the strengthening porous plaster, and contain in addition thereto the newly discovered powerful and active vegetable combination which acts with increased rubefacient, stimulating, sedative and counter irritant effects.

SECOND.
Because they are a genuine pharmaceutical preparation, and so recognized by the profession.

THIRD.
Because they are the only plasters that relieve pain ot once.

FOURTH.
Because they will positively cure diseases which other remedies will not even relieve.

FIFTH
Because over 5000 physicians and druggists have voluntarily testified that they are superior to all other plasters or medicines for external use.

SIXTH.
Because the manufacturers haue received the only medals ever given for porous plasters.

Larrie O'Dee.

Now the Widow McGee
And Larrie O'Dee
Had two little cottages out on the green,
With just enough room for two pig-pens between.
The widow was young and the widow was fair,
With the brightest of eyes and the brownest of hair;
And it frequently chanced, when she came in the morn,
With the swill for her pig, Larrie came with his corn,
And some of the ears that he tossed from his hand
In the pen of the widow were certain to land.

One morning, said he:
"Och! Mistress McGee,
It's a washte of good lumber this runnin' two rigs,
Wid a fancy partition betwane our two pigs!"
"Indade, sure it is!" answered Widow McGee,
With the sweetest of smiles upon Larrie O'Dee.
"And thin it looks kind o' hard-hearted and mane
Kapin' two friendly pigs so exceedingly near
That whinever one grunts thin the other can hear,
And yit keep a cruel partition betwane!"

"Shwate Widow McGee!"
Answered Larrie O'Dee,
"If ye tale in yer heart we're mane to the pigs,
Ain't we mane to ourselves to be runnin' two rigs?
Och! it made me heart ache when I paped through the cracks
Of me shanty, lasht March, at yez shwingin' yer ax,
An' a-bobbin' yer head, an' a-sthompin' yer fate,
Wid yer purty white hands just as red as a bate,
A-splittin' yer kindlin'-wood out in the shtorm,
Whin one little shtove it would kape us both warm!"

"Now, piggy," said she,
"Larrie's courtin' o' me,
Wid his delicate, tinder allusions to you;
So now yez musht tell me jusht what I must do,
For, if I'm to say yes, shtir the shwill wid yer shnout;
But if I'm to say no, yez musht kape yer nose out.
Now, Larrie, for shame! to be bribin' a pig
By a-tossin' a handful of corn in its shwig!"
"Me darlin', the piggy says yes," answered he,
And that was the courtship of Larry O'Dee.

—W. W. Fink in the Independent.

IMPROMPTU FIREWORKS.

"Are you my Uncle Robert?" said a sweet, childish voice. And stopping the cheerful whistle that always accompanied his work, and looking up from the plane that was loudly lisping as it rapidly skimmed along the board he was planing, Richard Foster saw, standing in the doorway of his workshop—a bright June sunbeam resting on her pretty head—a little fair-haired girl.

Lost in astonishment, he did not answer the child, but gazed at her with wide-opened eyes. She had appeared so suddenly and quietly, and, moreover, she was so unlike the round-faced, rosy-cheeked, white-haired, chubby little ones of his native village—so fragile, with a strange, yearning look in her large violet-blue eyes, and a tint of purest gold on the long flowing hair that fell about her small delicate face—that she seemed to belong to an entirely different race.

"Are you my Uncle Robert?" she repeated, coming a step or two into the shop.

"No, I'm not, baby; I wish I were," answered the cheery young fellow, recovering from his surprise; for he dearly loved children, and this child touched some chord in his heart that had never been touched before.

"My name's not 'Baby,' it's 'Eva,'" said the child, shaking the black hair from her face, and regarding him with a serious look. "And mamma's name is Eva, too." And then, with a little sigh: "I fought perhaps you was him."

"What made you think so, baby—I mean Eva?" asked the young man, with a pleasant smile, tossing his plane aside, and sitting down on a huge block of wood that stood near.

"You look like him"—speaking with quaint preciseness. "He went away when I was a very little girl—I'm 'most five now—but I 'member him. He had a face like you, a nice, laughing face; but"—glancing at the shirt sleeves—"he were a coat, and he used to give me candies for kisses—two candies for one kiss—and mamma cries because he does not come back and take us away with him."

The dinner bell rang loud and long in the cottage adjoining. The young carpenter mechanically rose to his feet and then deliberately sat down again, as he said, with a tender look in his honest brown eyes, "I'm sorry mamma cries."

"Yes, she cries"—in a lowered voice, and, completely won by the kind look, coming to his side, and putting her mite of a hand confidingly in his—"because papa has gone up there," (pointing to the sky). "I don't 'member him; 'twas long, long, long ago; and Uncle Robert don't come back; and she's a beggar;" this last remark evidently quoted, with a dramatic little gesture.

Again the dinner bell rang violently.

"Will you tell me where you live, Eva?" asked Dick, paying no attention to the summons; but before the child could reply a stout, buxom, black-eyed girl flew into the room from the rear door, and a slight, graceful, fair-haired woman came in at the other.

"Dick, why on earth don't you come to dinner?" almost yelled the buxom girl; and, "Eva, my darling, what are you doing here?" cried the pretty woman.

"I fought he was my Uncle Robert," said the child, smiling at the young workman as she dropped his hand and went toward her mother.

"He?" exclaimed the pretty woman, scarcely glancing at him. "Why, he"—with a light laugh, and a slight inflection of scorn, or something very like it, in her voice—"he's a carpenter." And catching the child in her arms she disappeared as suddenly as she had arrived.

"Goodness gracious sakes alive!" said Dick's brown-faced, red-cheeked sister, with not an inflection but a whole volume of scorn in her voice. "A carpenter, indeed! And what is she?"

"What is she?" repeated Dick.

"Oh, come along to dinner, Dick, and don't bother. I'm hungry, if you ain't"—giving him a by no means gentle pull.

"Stop a moment, Lib"—jerking away from her—"that's a good girl, and tell me all about it."

"All about it? Pshaw! You men are all alike! All about her, you mean. Do you think she's pretty?"

"Well, all about her, then," said Dick, utterly ignoring the question.

"Mother'll be hopping mad, and the victuals'll be stone-cold, but I s'pose I'd better hurry and tell you what I know at once, or you'll be pestering the life out of me till I do. She's a widow—'Mrs. Leonard Deming, M. D.,' that is, Mr. Leonard Deming was 'M. D.,' and she came here two days ago to live in the brick cottage around the corner, with her aunt, old Mrs. Paulding, who is always talking of 'better days,' and boasting that there has never been a mechanic in her family. And yet she's as poor as a church mouse, and no one knows how she manages to live."

"Go on, Lib"—as she stops to take breath.

"There's the bell again"—turning toward the door.

"You shall not stir a step until you finish your story," says Dick, detaining her with firm but gentle force.

"Oh, Richard Foster, what a tease you are, and only yesterday you was calling me a gossip, and saying how women's tongues did run on, and—eh!" (with a shrill scream) "what a pinch, you tormenting thing! Well, her husband was a doctor, and went off to some place or other when they'd been married a year or so, and caught the yellow fever, and died, and left her nothing but his 'M. D.' And she's as poor as old lady Paulding and just as proud; and, oh, Dick, the funniest thing—she's filled one of her aunt's windows with wax flowers for sale, just as though any one in this place would buy wax flowers! Come along!"

"Lib, I think wax flowers are beautiful,"—he had never thought of them in his life before, and in fact knew nothing about them—"and I wish you'd set the other folks a good example and buy a lot of them from—Mrs. Deming for our parlor mantel," and he thrust a bill into her hand.

"Dick Foster, are you crazy? Wax flowers, and mother wanting a new cook stove this minute!—the old one's falling into pieces—and I haven't—"

"A stitch to your back," says Dick, smiling. "You never have. But buy the flowers, Lib, dear, and mother shall have a new stove and you a new dress before the week's out. I'll work nights."

"But, Dick—"

But Dick had rushed away at a fourth and most furious ringing of the bell, and she was fain to follow without another word.

Day after day Dick Foster set his shop door wide open, and replenished the pretty bonbon box that was hidden away behind some tools on a shelf in the corner, in hopes that he might some day again raise his head from his work and see the fair-haired child standing before him. But day by day went by, and June merged into July, and she came no more.

The wax flowers had been bought a few days after Dick had so suddenly discovered how much he admired them, and wonderful imitations of nature they proved to be, but, alas! wanting nature's wonderful fragrance; and they stood between the china dog and cat that Dick remembered from his earliest boyhood, on the high, old-fashioned wooden mantel in the low-ceilinged sunny parlor.

Lib had come back from purchasing them with a quick step and a snap in her black eyes, and had immediately—as Dick knew she would the moment he caught sight of her—rushed into the shop to—as she was wont to express it—"free her mind."

"There, I hope you are satisfied," she began, with a toss of her head, putting the vase of lilies and roses into his hand; "but I think you'd better saved your money. Not but what they're pretty enough, and I don't see how she makes 'em; I couldn't. But of all the stuck-up things I ever saw, she's the worst. 'Your little girl thinks your brother looks like my brother,' says I, trying to make myself agreeable; 'does he?' 'I'm sure I don't know; I didn't look at him. My brother is a very handsome man, and an artist. We were a family of artists, although my share of talent took a very lowly form,' says she, handing me the vase—she called it a 'varse.' 'Good-afternoon.'"

To all of which Dick replied not a word, but turned away and sawed like mad, which so offended Miss Elizabeth Foster that she never referred to the pretty widow again until the afternoon of the 3d of July, when, with a gleam of mischief in her face, she burst out at the supper table:

"Oh, Dick, I've a message for you. I met 'Miss Eva,' as the little servant-girl calls her. They say that girl serves Mrs. Deming for love; wish I could get people to serve me for that. 'Please tell the—the shavings man,' said Miss Eva, 'that I wanted to come again, but mamma wouldn't let me.' And, oh, Dick, if they haven't put fireworks for sale in the other parlor window! Wax flowers and fireworks! Ain't it funny?"

But, judging from Dick's clouded brow and closely set lips, Dick thought it anything but funny; and Lib, wisely dropping the subject, devoted herself to mother's soft gingerbread with undivided attention.

And the cloud still lingered on the carpenter's brow, as he, pail in hand, just after supper, bent his steps toward the old well that stood a few feet beyond the brick cottage. He had developed an extraordinary fondness for the water of this well; it seemed as though nothing else could quench his thirst, albeit until a few weeks ago he had been perfectly satisfied with the cold as ice, clear as crystal water drawn from the well in his mother's garden.

As he drew near the isolated cottage he saw the fireworks in the window, and his heart came up in his throat. "So poor, so proud, so lovely," he thought. "I'll buy them all to-morrow." And at this moment the pretty woman stepped out on the old-fashioned porch, and Dick turned and fled.

But a few hours after Dick was again seized with a terrible thirst—a thirst that he was firmly convinced could only be assuaged by a draught from the brick cottage well, and again, pail in hand, he set out, this time to reach the place of destination and begin slowly to return. It was ten o'clock. In the cottage all was silence and darkness. Dick paused as he reached it, and leaned against the maple in front of the door and gazed at the shutterless windows where the wax flowers and fireworks entreated, "Come, buy me." And as he gazed, smash went a pane of glass, and a blue light shot past him and fell with a prolonged hiss upon the ground. Then in quick succession came another and another. Then fizz! bang! pop! pop! fizz! bang! and the pyrotechnic articles were shooting about in every direction, and the white muslin curtains were in flames.

In a moment the strong young fellow had burst open the door, thrown the pail of water upon the crackling fireworks, torn down the blazing curtains and stamped out the fire. And in another moment some one in a long white robe, her golden hair silvered by the moonlight, came flying out of the room just beyond, and, flinging her arms about him, cried: "Oh! dear brother Robert, you have come back at last. But—but"—looking about her in a bewildered manner—"what has happened?"

"I'm not brother Robert," said Dick; but he did not loosen the clinging arms, as it behooved him to do when he made the declaration. "I am—the—the shavings man, and your window has been on fire. Fortunately, I was passing"— But he got no further, for the white-robed figure uttered a little shriek, and fled with precipitancy as old Mrs. Paulding entered the room from the other door, her best bonnet perched on her head and her night-cap dangling by its strings around her neck, a silver teapot in one hand and her favorite cat, grasped by the throat, in the other, on a queer little run, totally unlike her usual dignified tread.

To her did Dick explain the cause of the wet carpet and the smoke-begrimed walls, and, amid her profuse thanks for his timely help, was taking his leave, when Mrs. Deming, lamp in hand, again made her appearance—this time in suitable evening dress.

"Oh, aunt, what an escape!" she began, setting the lamp on the table; "and to think I never awoke until the very last, I was so tired; and Eva has slept through it all. We might have been burned in our beds." And then, turning to Dick, she said, her sweet voice trembling in spite of her great effort to maintain her composure: "I beg your pardon for the absurd mistake I made, but I was so bewildered, and only half awake, and I had been dreaming of my brother, whom you"—looking him full in the face—"resemble very much." And breaking off suddenly, her voice trembling still more, "How can we ever thank you, Mr.—"

"Dick Foster, the carpenter," said Dick, with as much dignity as though he had said "doctor" or "artist."

"Mr. Foster," her lips quivering and her fair cheeks flushing red, and she held out to him her dainty hand.

Dick flushed as rosy red as she, but made no movement toward her. His right hand hanging listlessly at his side, his hat held in his left, he stood in silence as though uncertain what to do.

"Do you refuse to shake hands with me?" she asked, a look of pained surprise flitting across her lovely face.

"Why, God bless us! he can't," screamed the old lady; "his poor hand is dreadfully burned." And she hastened away in search of old linen and sweet oil.

And it was—his working hand—terribly burned; but when Dick went home that night he scarcely felt the pain for the memory of two violet eyes shining through tears, and a sweet voice saying, "Oh, I'm so very, very sorry—so very, very sorry!"

The next morning Mrs. Foster had just cleared away the breakfast things, and gone into the sitting-room where Dick sat, installed in the only easy chair the house possessed, his right hand enveloped in bandages, a book in his left, and the vase of wax flowers on the table before him, when there came a gentle knock at the street door The good mother, opening it, beheld a pretty blue-eyed woman, holding a pretty blue-eyed little girl, standing upon the threshold.

"Oh, it's you, Mrs. Deming," said the old lady, bridling and fluttering her cap ribbons. "Good morning, ma'am."

"Your son," said the young widow, with a hesitation strangely foreign to her, "is he better? Has he suffered much through the night?"

"His sufferings can be of no consequence to you, ma'am," returned the old lady, sharply, in spite of a warning "Mother!" from the room she had just left. "He's only a mechanic, ma'am." "He's a noble fellow!" exclaimed Mrs. Deming, seizing the wrinkled, toil-roughened hand that was raised as though to wave her away; "and oh please don't be cross to me. I haven't slept all night thinking of him."

Mrs. Foster's face began to relax, and the stern look completely faded away when little Eva, looking up with pure, beautiful. beseeching eyes, entreated, "Don't be cross to poor mamma."

"Well, I suppose the fire warn't your fault," she said; "though how them fireworks exploded passes my comprehension. There must have been some powerful carelessness somewhere; and it's my opinion that folks that doesn't understand things should let 'em alone; and his hand's very bad indeed; and he won't be able to work for a month, just as he had the most industrious fit I ever know'd him to have—though a lazy boy he never was—and earning lots of money. And his hand'll have to be dressed night and morning, and take about an hour each time—"

"Oh, then I can be of use," cried the pretty widow, a bright smile breaking over her face. "I am a capital nurse. Let me come every day and dress the wounded hand. Your time, I know, is precious; and it is the least I can do, for it was in my service—I mean my aunt's—that it was wounded."

"Well, that's clever, and I'm obliged to you; but me and Lib—"

"Mother!" from the parlor.

"Well, Richard?"

"I shall be only too glad to accept Mrs. Deming's kind offer;" and Mrs. Deming went in.

Three weeks had gone by, and the hand was nearly well. 'I never saw anything heal so quickly,' soliloquized Dick, one pleasant, fragrant morning, in a tone that implied he wished it wouldn't. 'She can't come here but a day or two longer, bless her!—I don't really need her now, though I pretend I do—and then I'll be nothing to her but Dick, the carpenter, again.'

'Dick,' chirped a bird-like voice, 'mamma's got a letter from Uncle Robert. I run in to tell you,' and little Eva danced into the room.

'Great heaven!' thought Dick, turning pale, 'he's coming to take her away;' and a moment later Mrs. Deming came in with the letter in her hand.

'Are you worse this morning?' she asked, anxiously, looking at the young fellow's pale face.

'Yes, much worse,' he answered, dryly. 'Eva tells me you have a letter from your brother.'

'I have—at last. And he's in Paris and does not expect to return to this country for many years. He has married a beautiful French girl, and, I fear, has almost forgotten me.'

'Your brother married and forgotten you?' burst in Lib, poking her head in at the door. 'Well, that's nothing strange. Brothers will marry and forget sisters till the end of time;' and calling Eva to come and see the newly-hatched chickens, away she went again.

'And personally I resemble him, that is, I suppose, as much as a mechanic could resemble an artist,' said Dick, with a feeble attempt at sarcasm; 'but there the resemblance must end. I never could have forgotten you.'

And then they are both silent for a few moments, Dick breaking the silence at last. 'I am very sorry for your disappointment. You had hoped to leave this humdrum place, where there is no one you could care for.'

'No one I could care for,' she repeated, slowly. 'I am not so sure of that; but I am sure of one thing, Richard, and that is that I do not need your sympathy. I have learned to love this pretty, quiet place—'

'You have?' shouted Dick. 'Oh, if I were not a poor carpenter—if I were an artist, a physician, a lawyer, anything professional—I'd ask you to try and learn to love me, and stay here forever.'

'Try to learn to love you! Why, Dick, you dear, splendid, darling old goose, don't you know I've loved you ever since the night of the impromptu fireworks.'

'My blessed darling!' cried Dick, catching her in his arms and kissing her sweet lips.

'Goodness gracious sakes alive!' said Lib, appearing at the door again. 'My brother's going to be married, too.'

CHURCH COLLECTIONS.

A congregation, which has about 400 communicants, had taken up a collection, which the treasurer was about to count. The editor of the Christian Giver thought he would like to see just how the collection was made up, and asked the privilege of counting and classifying it. The following table shows the result:

Number of pieces.	Value of each.	Total.
145	1 cent	$1 45
2	2 cents	4
8	3 cents	24
25	5 cents	1 25
7	10 cents	70
3	25 cents	75
190		$4.43

This was about one cent for each person present and two cents average for each giver. More than half gave nothing. Apropos thereof we add the following:

At a large gospel meeting in Cooper Institute, recently, Mr. Sawyer announced that a collection would be taken to assist several poor and suffering families, and asked that each would aid according to his ability and the pressing need of the case. A general movement was made for purses and pocket-books. In a front seat sat a man whose whole appearance bespoke comfortable circumstances. He got his purse open and as a half dollar pushed itself to the front he took it out and laid it in his hand. Next a quarter came out and was laid beside the half. Then a dime looked out and was passed to the company of its superiors. At last the looked-for cent appeared. It was picked out and placed between the lips until the other coins were replaced in the purse and the purse in the pocket, then it was held in the fingers until the basket came and was carried off to relieve the suffering families.

Perhaps that cent represents the value of the treasure laid up above by the one who bestowed it.

CHOCOLATE CREAMS.

If you wish to make chocolate creams that are more delicious than those any confectioner will ever offer you, try this receipt: Take two cups of granulated or pulverized sugar, half a cup of cream—milk will do, but it needs cream to perfect them; boil just five minutes from the time it begins to boil, not from the time you put it on the stove. After taking from the stove stir till it is stiff; flavor it with vanilla; then drop on a buttered plate and let it remain there till it is cold. In the mean time have a cake of chocolate broken in little pieces in a bowl; have some water boiling in the tea kettle; set the bowl over it; the chocolate will soon melt; then take a fork and roll the drops in the melted chocolate and put back on the plate to harden. Observe the directions carefully, and you cannot fail to be pleased with the result.

"Paul," exclaimed the fair daughter of a bonanza king, addressing one of her suitors, "Paw has settled $500,000 on me and I thought there'd be no harm in telling you." "Florinde," he said, nervously fingering a few nickels in his waistcoat pocket and striving to hide the evidences of the profound interest which the communication excited, "Florinde, do you think I'm so sordid as to let such a consideration affect me?" "No," she added, nonchalantly, "I didn't suppose you'd care much, so I engaged myself to Mr. Slacker last night." It was a ten strike and he flopped, but she was a cool girl, and summoning a servant told him to set the sufferer out on the back stoop until he felt better.

In a certain minister's family the conversation turned upon the character of the baby. Why was the baby so naughty? The brother, who had reached the age of twelve, and was studying the steam engine in his intervals of catechism, gave vent to his orthodoxy in the following suggestive inquiry: "Papa, as we all inherit the sin of Adam, and the baby is such a little fellow, is there not a greater pressure of sin to the square inch in the baby than in the rest of us?"—Hartford Courant.

"Your husband requires rest," said the doctor as he came from the sick chamber. "He will soon be well—he has a bad attack of tickerosis." "Tickerosis, doctor; why that's a new disease, isn't it?" "Yes, quite new—it is caused by watching the tickers in the brokers' offices. It affects the optic nerve and the spinal column." Wife retires to ponder over tickers.

A Conscious Martyr: "Why are you so cross, Angela?" "Oh, because I hate selfishness, aunt, and they're all of them so selfish." "What have they done?" "Why, they all want to go on the river, just when I want to play lawn tennis." "Well, you needn't go with them." "Of course I needn't; but how am I to play lawn tennis all by myself?"

When Pat went a gunning for the first time he made one shot and then looked under a tree for his game and found a toad. "Be gorra!" he exclaimed, "I'd scarcely recognize ye: but ye must 'ave been a d—n foine bird 'fore I shot the feathers off ye!"

If you want knowledge you must toil for it; and if pleasure, you must toil for it. Toil is the law. Pleasure comes through toil, and not by self-indulgence or indolence. When one gets to love work, his life is a happy one. —Ruskin.

It has been estimated that the common fly moves its wings 330 times per second and 19,800 times per minute. The calculation was made by a baldheaded man.

We don't know who it was that said it, but we all of us know how true it is that there is no man so debased but some woman loves and has faith in him.

Naughty.

Somebody's lips were close to mine,
Thus tempted, I couldn't resist.
Roguish and rosy, a sweet little mouth
Was suddenly, softly kissed.

Somebody's eyes looked up and frowned
With such a reproving glance.
"If kisses were wicked?" I asked my pet,
Then the eyes began to dance.

And, smiling, the little maiden answered,
As I knelt there at her feet,
"They must be just a little bit naughty,
Or they never would be so sweet."

THE RAM AT CHURCH.

Mollie had a little ram, fleece black as rubber shoe, and everywhere that Mollie went, he emigrated to.

He went with her to church one day—the folks hi-la-rious grew, to see him walk demure-ly into Deacon Al-len's pew!

The worthy dea-con quickly let his angry passions rise, and gave it an unchristian kick, between the sad brown eyes.

This landed rammy in the aisle; the deacon followed fast, and raised his foot again, but alas! that first kick was his last!

For Mr. Sheep walked slowly back, about a rod, 'tis said, and ere the deacon could retreat, it stood him on his head!

The congregation then arose, and went for that ere sheep, but several well directed butts just piled them in a heap.

Then rushed they straightway for the door with curses long and loud, while rammy struck the hindmost man and shot him through the crowd.

The minister had often heard that kindness would subdue the fiercest beast—"Aha!" he said, "I'll try that game on you!"

And so he kindly, gently, called: "Come rammy, rammy, ram; to see the folks abuse you so, I grieved and sorry am!"

With kind and gentle words he came from that tall pulpit down, saying "rammy, rammy, ram, rammy, rammy, ram—best sheep in the town."

The ram looked meek, and on he came, with, "rammy, rammy, ram; ram, ram, rammy, rammy, rammy, ram: the nice pretty ram."

The ram quite dropped his humble air, and rose from off his feet, and when the parson lit, he lay beneath the hindmost seat.

As he shot out the door and closed it with a slam, he named a California town, I think 'twas "Youba Dam!"

A volume of smoke rises constantly from the midst of a densely wooded morass in Wakulla County, Florida and has for at least fifty years been a mystery to the people of that region. The spot is five miles from the nearest point to which any person has ever penetrated. The negroes believe it is an entrance to hell, and regard it with awe. Some of the whites accept the theory of a volcano. Judge White of Tallahassee lately organized an expedition to explore the swamp, but failed to make a way into the tangle of rank growth.

Contagion is largely propagated by means of the clothing, and clothing is best disinfected by heat. No form of contagion can withstand a dry heat of 220 degrees. The clothing should be placed in a box or a closet maintained at that temperature for perhaps an hour. Carbolic acid will not destroy the effect of vaccine virus but for the time being.

The sweetest life is to be ever making sacrifices; the hardest life a man can lead, the most full of trouble, vexation and misery, is to be always doing his own will and seeking to please himself.

The Journal.

SATURDAY, JULY 9, 1881.

WITH SUPPLEMENT.

Ex-Senator Hamlin of Maine has been appointed United States minister to Spain.

Mr. Platt hastily withdrew from the Albany contest last week Friday, upon the publication of the scandal in which he was mixed up, and went home with his wife, giving out that he withdrew "in the interest of the Republican party." Now if Mr. Conkling will follow his example, the interests of the party will be materially advanced.

An end to the Albany struggle is looked for soon, over 60 Republicans having signed a call for a caucus, though the Conkling men all hold aloof, in the expectation that Vice President Arthur will in some way be able to arrange a compromise in their favor, as it is reported that Secretary Blaine is anxious to heal the differences in the party in that State. If this is to be done by returning Conkling, it will be a disgraceful ending of an unseemly quarrel.

Rev. Edward Cowley, the New York Episcopal clergyman who was convicted in court of inhuman treatment of the children in his asylum, and imprisoned therefor, is given a clean character by the ecclesiastical committee which has been investigating the charges against him, and which, queerly enough, pronounces them unfounded, in spite of the overwhelming evidence produced against him in court. The committee's whitewashing will not be likely to improve Mr. Cowley's standing in the popular mind.

In our supplement will be found a full account of the shooting of President Garfield, and of his condition up to Wednesday. His symptoms up to latest accounts have continued very favorable in the main, although he is by no means out of danger. He has passed the first crisis, but another is expected about this time, secondary hemorrhage and blood poisoning being feared. At the best, it will be many days before he can be considered out of serious danger, and the people can only hope and earnestly pray that his life may be spared to the nation.

From every portion of our own country, and from all parts of the civilized world, a constant stream of messages has poured into Washington the past week, conveying words of anxious inquiry and warmest sympathy for President Garfield, and attesting in the strongest manner the high esteem in which the stricken President is held. The New York chamber of commerce has undertaken a very practical way of demonstrating its feelings, by starting a fund of $250,000, to be presented to Mrs. Garfield as a token of sympathy and esteem, and to relieve the President's mind from any anxiety as to the future of his family.

A Feeling of intense dismay pervaded the country last Saturday, at the thought that Vice President Arthur would in all likelihood become President within a few days. The course he has pursued the past few weeks in entering into the political contest at Albany has been generally and severely condemned; but since the shooting of the President his conduct has been unexceptionable. He has seemed overpowered with a sense of the responsibilities likely to suddenly devolve upon him, and has in a measure risen to them. He is not a man of Presidential caliber, but still we believe that he would give us a creditable administration if called to occupy that high office.

The Assassination.

Not since the assassination of Abraham Lincoln has the country been so startled and horrified as when the intelligence was flashed over the wires last Saturday that President Garfield had been shot down by an assassin. That in this free and prosperous country, in a time of peace and plenty, a deliberate attempt should be made upon the life of the chief magistrate, seemed utterly incredible, and as one man the whole nation was bowed down with grief and shame. And yet, what has happened to President Garfield is liable to befall any man in high office, almost any day. The crime was not the result of any conspiracy, but was the act of one man, weak headed, disappointed in seeking for office, and doubtless possessed with a morbid longing for fame of some description, even though secured by such a terrible crime. There are hundreds of other Guiteaus in the world. We read of their tragic doings every day in the criminal records. They do not always select a President for their victim, simply because he is not in their circle, and they have no grievance against him. But give them even a fancied cause for putting him or any other high official out of the way, and the attempt will soon be made.

It is folly to hold our civil service system responsible for Guiteau's crime. We have no apology to make for the "spoils system." It is bad, and there is ample room and urgent need for improvement in the methods of making appointments to office. But the civil service is no more accountable for Guiteau's deed than it is for the lunatics who occasionally turn up at the White House and demand possession as being the real chief ruler of the country. Far more responsible for the crime is that spirit of unkind and malicious criticism, which has traduced the President's motives, loudly condemned every act not thoroughly in accord with the critic's notions, and magnified the smallest error into a mountain of evil, until a weak mind could easily be brought to feel that to take the President's life would be to confer a public blessing.

We want more respect for character; more charity for those with whom we differ; and less familiarity with the pistol in our every day life. These are some of the important lessons of this sad event.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

Moonshiny nights.

Going away this summer?

Plenty of rain these days.

Dog days are approaching.

Old Sol is warming up to his work.

The hot wave is waving industriously.

Rev. J. K. Mason of Springfield will preach at the Universalist church on Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. M. W. French have gone to Peterboro, N. H., for their summer's rest.

Rev. A. W. Goodnow of Shutesbury will preach at the Baptist church Sunday afternoon.

Corn is backward about coming forward, and needs much hot weather to bring it up to where it should be.

W. A. Lincoln of Chicago, formerly cashier of the Palmer National Bank, is spending a week in this vicinity.

The trustees of the savings bank hold an adjourned meeting at the district court room this afternoon, at 2 o'clock.

The monthly meeting of the Improvement Association will be held at the house of R. L. Goddard next Monday evening.

The Wide Awakes of this place whipped the North Wilbraham base ball club on the park last Saturday, by a score of 22 to 2.

S. H. Hellyar was on Tuesday evening chosen clerk of the Congregational church, in place of Rev. B. M. Fullerton, resigned.

When a conductor announces 26 minutes at a water tank, either that train isn't in any hurry, or the conductor is caught dreaming of the near future.

O. F. Benedict of Wilbraham is as usual first on hand with native new potatoes, and he remembers the printer with a generous supply of excellent quality. Thanks.

Some miscreant amused himself on the evening of the Fourth by exploding a cannon cracker in one of M. W. French's street lamps, shattering the glass and ruining the burner.

The ladies' social union connected with St. Paul's church will be entertained by Mr. and Mrs. E. S. Gibbons next Wednesday evening, at their residence. Ice cream will be served in the evening.

E. G. Baldwin, formerly principal of the high school in this place, but for the past three years principal of the Pittsfield high school, has resigned, and will open a private school in that town.

Judge Robinson last Saturday committed Mrs. Scarborough of Brimfield to the insane asylum at Worcester. On Tuesday four or five men were brought up for imbibing too much liquid 4th of July, and settled by paying fines.

Travel is very heavy now on the railroads, the warm weather starting people toward the shore and mountain resorts with a rush which fills the trains to overflowing, and gives the baggage masters so much work to do that swear words come out pretty easily sometimes.

We understand that the managers of the New London Northern Railroad are considering the plan of running their steamboat train Sundays, as well as week days, to accommodate the summer travel. In this event, the Sunday train will probably not go any further north than this place.

A right smart thunder and hail storm visited this section Monday afternoon, and in the northern part of this town and in South Belchertown a good deal of damage was done by the hail stones. Some fields of corn were completely cut to pieces, fruit was beaten from the trees, window glass broken and other damage done. In this village the rain was heavy, but only a few small hail stones fell.

The returns of St Thomas' bazar are all in, and Rev. T. J. Sullivan reports the net receipts to be $600, which will be used in liquidating the debt of the church. The result shows that the canvassers and the managers labored diligently to make it a success, and the pastor and members of the church wish to return their thanks for the very liberal patronage they have received from the people of this and adjoining towns.

Bridget McClenchey, who has been rooted out of Warren for selling liquor, recently came across the line into Palmer and resumed business in the house near the Pool, being assured by the Warren people that she would not be disturbed in this town. But she has not found it entirely smooth sailing, Sheriff Palmer having made two raids on the premises and cleaned out her stock of liquors, and she will have a hearing the second Monday in August on the charge of illegal keeping of the ardent.

The probate court, at its regular monthly session in Springfield Tuesday, granted administration on the estate of Samuel Allen of Brimfield, William S. Blackmer administrator. Wills approved of John Miller of Ludlow, William B. and Walter Miller executors; Ebenezer Howlett of Hampden, E. A. Day executor. Accounts were filed on the estates of J. W. Lovering of Hampden and Lucius Rindge of Wilbraham. An inventory was filed on the estate of C. L. Cushman of Ludlow, personal $371, real $2700.

The committee appointed to prefer charges against Lawyer Barker, formerly of this place, for unprofessional conduct, have made up their report, which charges Barker with cheating Montraville Ackert out of insurance money collected, and also with collecting a large sum of money for Mary E. Dunkel of this town, which he never turned over to her, though he gave her a worthless check and a mortgage on his borrowed law library. There will be a hearing in the matter next Thursday, before the superior court at Springfield. Barker still remains in jail, and is likely to for some time.

Nearly two hundred voters gathered at the town meeting on Tuesday. Enos Calkins was chosen moderator, and a spirited discussion took place in regard to the road from the house of Oscar Sikes to Three Rivers, Lawyers Gardner and Strong being the principal speakers. Dr. Ruggles had refused to respect the boundaries placed by the selectmen in 1880, and had placed a fence in the road, which had several times been removed by the selectmen and as often placed back again by Dr. Ruggles. Mr. Gardner argued that it was better for the town to adjourn without action on the articles of the warrant, and allow a compromise to be made by the selectmen with Dr. Ruggles. Mr. Strong argued that the selectmen, acting impartially, had ascertained the boundaries of the road, and that these corresponded with the road used by the public for more than forty years, that no party was injured, that the land in question was of trifling value, that too much money had already been expended upon surveys and resurveys, and that the true policy for the town was to maintain its rights to a road which it clearly held by possession after constant use for so many years. The meeting voted by a large majority to accept the road with the boundaries laid by the selectmen in 1880. Some of the selectmen requesting to be excused from further service in regard to this road, a committee, consisting of F. A. Packard, Charles E. Dewey, Joseph Kerigan and Joshua Graves, was chosen to see that all obstructions were removed from the road, and to take all necessary steps to maintain the rights of the town.

Independence day was ushered in promptly after midnight, Monday morning, by the ringing of the church bells, firing of crackers, bonfires, and other evidences of youthful patriotism, and about the usual quantity of powder was burned during the day and evening. At the State Primary School the children had a day of delightful pleasure, closing up with fireworks in the evening, which were enjoyed also by quite an audience in the village. In the afternoon there was a game of base ball on the park between Geo. English's nine and the carpet mill boys, the score standing 14 to 12 in favor of the former. There was also a shooting match between some of our sportsmen, with the following score:

The assessors have completed their work, and the result is shown in the following figures, which they kindly furnish: Valuation of the town—real estate, $1,479,930; personal, $777,587; total, $2,257,517. The increase from last year is about $108,000. This is accounted for by the general growth of the town, and not by the increase of the business of Bondville and Three Rivers alone, as the Springfield Republican has it. There have been 22 houses built in town the past year, some of them very good ones, and also buildings for business purposes, which add materially to the valuation of the town. Number of polls in town, 1311; tax on polls, $2 each; rate of taxation, $14 per $1000; total tax on collector's book, $34,451.01. The following corporations and individuals pay a tax of $100 or over: Ebenezer Brown, $165; Boston & Albany R. R., $130; Salina and Loman Brown, $109; Boston Duck Co., $3640; John M. Converse, $441; Clark & Hastings, $116; C. E. Dewey, $190; John Feeney, $203; M. W. French, $460; Mrs. E. T. French, $380; R. L. Goddard, $176; Hampden Hat Shop Co., $108; C. D. Holbrook, $112; H. P. Holden, $110; Wm. Holbrook, $110; David Knox, $139; S. S. Lawrence, $247; George Mooers, $225; New London R. R., $129; Palmer Carpet Co., $584; Palmer Savings Bank, $112; Palmer Mill, $5494; Homer and Lucia E. Strong, $235; John A. Squier, $147; Jacob Stever, $106; Thorndike Co., $3684; Joseph Weeks, $114; non residents —W. W. Cross, $126; P. P. Potter, $131. Resident bank tax, $431; non resident bank tax, $723.

Editor of Journal: —In your last issue appeared a communication under a nom de plume, from a member of the legal fraternity of this town, in regard to the disputed highway at Three Rivers, in which, through ignorance or malice, he perverts the truth to an extent which needs correcting. The aforesaid legal gentleman seems, for some reason or other, to have let his petty spite against Dr. Ruggles and the selectmen run away with his judgment—if he possesses that article. The selectmen, thinking it child's play to continue to tear down the fence on the disputed boundary, and wishing to take some decisive step in the matter, before proceeding to do so wished to be certain that they were right, and had the road surveyed, and found that Dr. Ruggles' fence was not in the road at all. The affair could have been settled amicably without further cost, had not the aforesaid legal gentleman, probably wishing an opportunity to air his eloquence, drawn up a petition to the selectmen calling for a town meeting, and, with his usual perspicuity, seeing "no difference between laying out a road and a re-survey," so words it that any action taken by that town meeting would not be legal. I think the selectmen have acted wisely and prudently in this matter and have the confidence of the town. They have unfortunately displeased a defeated candidate for selectman, but although they may be deficient in unparalleled egotism, I think they are not in common sense. When the writer of that article tried to bulldoze them into making needless repairs in front of his residence, he found they were possessed of some "backbone," and were not to be intimidated even by threats of prosecution. Palmer, July 5th, 1881.

The new time table of the New London Northern Railroad, which went into effect on Monday, will be found in another column. The new 6.42 a. m. train to New London is already gaining popularity with people who wish to make a day at the sea shore, as it arrives at New London at 9.14 a. m., connecting with steamer for Watch Hill and Block Island, giving several hours at either of these resorts, and an opportunity to return in the evening, reaching Palmer at 8.43. There are additional attractions at New London this season, among them the fine house at Osprey Beach, its bath houses and shore dinners affording great enjoyment to those seeking a day's pleasure. In addition to the local convenience of this train, people arriving at Palmer on the 6.36 a. m. train from the West make close connection for New London, Norwich, Willimantic, Providence and way stations. The new time table also includes the new train between Palmer and Amherst, leaving Palmer at 2.07 p. m., arriving at Amherst at 2.57; returning leave Amherst at 4.50, arriving at Palmer at 5.38, to connect for New York and the West. With the four trains from Palmer to Amherst the public need no longer complain that they must go by stage to and from Northampton. Passengers can leave Boston at 5.00, 8.30 and 11.00 a. m. and 4 p. m., connecting direct for Amherst; and leave Amherst at 6.46 a. m., 12.20 and 5.50 p. m., connecting direct for Boston. The 6.46 a. m. and 12.20 and 4.50 p. m. trains connect close at Palmer for Springfield, New York and the West. Downer's 2.05 p. m. train south is a through connection from Saratoga, New York and West for all points on the New London road, and for Providence, Narragansett Pier and Newport. Through tickets and through checks by this connection may be relied upon.

The council which was called by the Congregational church in this place to consider the resignation of the pastor, Rev. B. M. Fullerton, met at the church Wednesday forenoon, and was called to order by Rev. M. S. Howard of Wilbraham. Rev. A. E. P. Perkins, D. D., of Ware, was chosen moderator, and Rev. D. R. Atkins of Brimfield scribe, and after listening to statements by the pastor and officers of the church, the council went into private session, its action being embodied in the following report, which was unanimously adopted:

The council, after having had submitted to them the request of Rev. B. M. Fullerton to be dismissed from this church to accept a call from the Trinitarian Congregational church in Waltham, and hearing the action of this church and parish on that request, and also listening to the statement of individuals in regard to the same, come unanimously to the following result: In view of the long and successful ministry of Bro. Fullerton here, and the unanimity of his people in wishing to retain him as their pastor, the council regret that such a separation should take place. If the question had been submitted to us at an earlier stage of the proceedings we are by no means sure that we should have recommended the dissolution of this pastoral relation. But in view of his own convictions of duty, and his statement to the committee that no action of the church or parish would be likely to change those convictions, we reluctantly yield to his own sense of duty and the concurrence of his people in the same, and recommend that this pastoral relation be dissolved, the dissolution to take place at the time agreed upon, the 12th day of August next.

Rev. Mr. Fullerton's ministry here of more than thirteen years' duration, the character he has borne, and the work he has done, have secured him a high place in the respect, the confidence, and esteem of the churches of this region. He is known to be an able, evangelical, and faithful minister of the gospel. And as such we commend him to his new charge, and to all the Israel of God. To this church and people we tender our sympathy in their bereavement, with gratitude for their past prosperity, and the prayer that the Good Shepherd of the Flock will watch over them, and soon send them another under shepherd who will care for them as faithfully and tenderly as the last has done.

A TOWN MEETING 100 YEARS AGO.

In looking over the town records of a century ago, one comes across many curious and amusing things, some of which read rather queerly to the men of the present generation. We are indebted to David Knox for a copy of the records of a town meeting held 100 years ago, which we give herewith for the benefit of our readers. First comes the warrant, and it will be seen that this town had not at that time graduated from Hampshire county. The warrant is as follows:

Hampshire ss.—To the Constables of Palmer or either of them Greeting.

You are hereby Required in the Name of the Commonwealth of the Massachusetts Bay forthwith to notify & warn all the freeholders and other Inhabitants of the town of Palmer Qualifyed by Law to Vote in town Meetings to meet and assemble them Selves togather at the meeting House in said Palmer on tuesday the 20th day of this enstent March at Nine o'clock In the morning of said Day, 1781

Robert Ferrell, Joshua McMaster, John Quinten, } Select men.

In obedence to the within Warrent I have warned the Inhabitants of Palmer to Assemble at the and place within mentioned.

John Mc'Elwane, Constable in Palmer.

It will be noticed, especially in the record of the meeting, that a good many words, as well as some of the sentences, were fearfully and wonderfully made, orthography evidently not being one of the strong points of the recorder. Our readers will also notice the suggestive frequency with which the voters of that day adjourned "to the house of Landlord John Thompson." There must have been a good deal of "spirituality" in the meetings of those days! Here is the record of the meeting:

At a meeting of the freeholders and other Inhabitants of Palmer Legly convend at the meeting House in said Palmer on tuesday, the 20th Day of March at nine o'clock in the morning of said 1781.

WALES.

Mr. Willis, who has been selling clothing in Shaw's Block for a few weeks, has vacated and taken his stock and boy home again to Monson.

The Wales Savings Bank declared a semi-annual dividend on Tuesday of 2¼ per cent. Commissioner Gatchell examined the bank Wednesday and pronounced it all satisfactory.

MONSON.

The neighbors and friends of Augustus Low assembled at his house Tuesday evening to remind him that it was his 66th birthday. He was presented with an easy chair and various other articles, among which was a birthday cake and a large basket of beautiful flowers. His four daughters were present, and the time was spent in a happy social way until a late hour, when the company took leave with many kind wishes. The event proved a genuine surprise.

NORTH WILBRAHAM.

Dennis Knowlton, an estimable citizen 80 years old living on Wilbraham mountain, was assaulted and robbed on the 26th ult., by Albert Dean, a young fellow of poor reputation. Dean came along and demanded some cider of Mr. Knowlton, and after getting it knocked him down, grabbed his watch and departed. Sheriff Palmer of Palmer was put on his track and captured him the next night between West Stafford and Ellington, Ct., lodging him safely in Springfield.

THORNDIKE.

John Dunn had a shoulder dislocated on Tuesday.

There are several in this village making preparations for the Summer vacation.

The brick work on the new mill will be completed in a few days. The building has a pleasing appearance, and adds greatly to the business look of the town.

The young people of the village meet weekly at different houses for singing, and have thus far been quite successful. They supply a desire long felt in this place for social amusement.

Monday was very quietly spent here. With the exception of a game of base ball, and several local picnics, nothing disturbed the usual quiet. The storm of the afternoon seriously interfered with the parties at Newell's Pond. The fireworks in the evening called together a considerable number, and made a very good display, the citizens having contributed some $30 or $40 for their purchase.

WEST WARREN.

A. Amsden has received about $550 from the cotton mill company for land damages caused by the flowage of Wickaboag pond.

John McWilliams, a Scotchman 45 or 50 years old, was killed by the evening express from the east while walking on the railroad track Monday. He leaves four boys and a widow, who had arrived in town only that afternoon. He had worked in the Warren woolen mill only two weeks.

The Catholics of this village held their annual picnic in Crossman's Grove the Fourth, and it was well attended by people from this and neighboring towns. The programme was well carried out, Rev. Father Kelley, formerly of Palmer, being on the grounds looking after the comfort of all attendants. In the sack race Richard Haley took first prize and C. Willett second. M. J. Proulx of Hatfield proved himself more than a match for his competitors in the running jump, clearing 17 feet, while J. Marshall of this village jumped 16 ft 3 in. Mr. Proulx also took first prize hop, step and leap, making 36 ft. 3 in.; E. Allair second, 35 ft. 8 in. Standing jump, J. Marshall 10 ft. 5 in., D. Sullivan 10 ft. 3 in.; three jumps, J. Marshall 30 ft. 7 in., M. Connor 30 ft. 6 in.

INDIAN ORCHARD.

J. H. Losee has entered the employ of Postmaster Chapman as clerk.

Some of our telephones are being removed, the subscribers refusing to keep them at the increased rates.

Dr. E. D. Chapman, the new postmaster, took possession July 1st, and has put in 300 new call boxes and 14 lock boxes. The box rent has been raised from 10 cents to 25 cents per quarter.

A. E. Butler, who has been in the employ of H. K. Wight as book-keeper, and manager for nine years, has resigned, and is succeeded by Fred Warner, who has been in the counting-room of the mills for about 10 years.

Last Saturday night a Frenchman named Fred. Hogue was near the iron bridge returning home, when he was insulted as he states by a boy named Barney Mulverney, about 16 years old, and one of the worst modocs in the place. Hogue slapped his face or knocked him down and then started for home, when Mulverney threw a stone or struck him with a sharp iron, knocking him almost senseless. He has also a bad scalp wound, but is doing well. The boy's trial was set for yesterday.

The Orchard made quite elaborate preparations for the celebration of the Fourth this year, and in spite of the sad news from Washington it was decided to carry out the programme, which was done as follows: In the "wee sma' hours" "Gideon's band," Walter Duncan leader, started on a tour through the streets, waking all with its hideous music. At about 6 a. m. the horribles reached the village, having met with a Jenksville company, and paraded through Jenksville. After parading a few of the streets, a collation was served at the corner of Main and Oak streets, after which the line of march was taken up through most of the streets, the company being joined by a number of traders with their teams loaded with samples of their merchandise and decorated with flags. The young men's club held a picnic and dance in the grove and gave prizes for best jumps and fastest running. In the evening a display of fireworks was given from a stand erected on the north side of the school house by Agent C. J. Goodwin. The sum of $240 had been raised for the fireworks, and large numbers from out of town, as well as all the Orchard, were out in the best places to witness what was the finest display the Orchard ever witnessed, lasting from 8.30 to 11 p. m., and closing with a set piece called "The liberty cap." By the way, when it comes to patriotism, the Orchard is not found wanting, by any means.

THREE RIVERS.

The pulpit of the Baptist church will be occupied Sunday morning by Rev. A. W. Goodnow of Shutesbury.

Roscoe S. Milliken and wife of this village sailed from Boston for Liverpool last Saturday on the steamer "Atlas" of the Cunard line. Mr. Milliken goes to Europe to represent Young, Thayer & Co., of Boston, manufacturers of bark extracts and dyes, for whom he has been at work for the past year.

Belcher & Co., of Boston, will give an "art entertainment" in Union church vestry next week Friday evening, under the auspices of the Sunday school. Mr. Belcher has been here twice before, and has each time had a full house. His entertainment is first-class and pleases everybody. Tickets for sale by the children of the Sunday school.

The Sunday schools in this village united in a picnic on the Fourth in the beautiful grove in the pasture of the Otis company on Springfield road, and were just enjoying their dinner when the shower of hail came upon them, causing them to leave the tables loaded with "good things" and seek shelter in the nearest houses. The shower was very severe, the hailstones averaging about the size of a hen's egg, and some of them being much larger. In some places the ground was completely covered with ice. One little fellow was heard to remark that he thought that "a good many of the hailstones would weigh a pound," which was very true.

Rev. C. D. Dudley preached last Sunday at the Union church on the political situation. Text, Rom. 13:4—"For he is the minister of God to thee for good." In his introduction the speaker directed attention to the intimate relation between religion and politics, plainly set forth in the text and its context. He then proceeded to notice some important suggestions and lessons to be derived from the terrible tragedy in which the life of the President of the United States was so nearly lost. Almost the first anxious thought is—to what state of lawlessness are we coming? Is not our freedom running to a dangerous extreme? Lesson—Freedom must be balanced by responsibility; Franchise must be carefully and justly restricted; Educational and even property tests should be required of voters. A second thought is, that this frightful event is the natural fruit of our present system of civil service. A thorough reformation of this threatening evil is of greater importance than the existence of any present party. But above all are we taught that a higher degree of morals must be had in our politics. Self-seeking is responsible for this crime. We must have voters and rulers who are men in politics as well as elsewhere. It has certainly become time for Christians, both ministers and laymen, to face everything, and to carry their religion into all the activities of political life, from the primary caucus to the highest official service.

WARE AND VICINITY.

Jacob La Flamme, a French boy, lost his eyesight while playing with powder on Monday.

James Kane fell while running a sack race at the Irish Land League picnic, and broke his collar bone.

G. H. Carter was severely cut in the first finger of his left hand last week Friday, on a circular saw. With care it is expected it will be saved.

The firm of Ripley & Utley, lumber dealers, has been dissolved by mutual consent. George E. Utley will continue the business. Mr. Ripley is going to Mexico in the railroad business, and is to leave here about the first of August.

The picnic in Coney's grove, under the auspices of the Irish Land League, was a grand success, clearing about $400. It was said to be a very orderly party, but few, if any, who were at all under the influence of liquor being seen on the grounds.

The Oregon Engine Co. have elected the following officers: Foreman, M. W. Buckley; first assistant, John Fitzgerald; second assistant, M. Clear; clerk, J. T. Dowd; treasurer, Wm. J. Canavan; steward, Patrick Sullivan; standing committee, E. T. Hampton, John Shea, James Murphy.

The officers of the Ware Reform Club, who were recently elected, are: J. L. Wood, president; J. L. Fairbank, 1st vice prest.; E. T. Thurman, 2d vice prest.; Joseph Mitchell, 3d vice prest.; H. L. Fairbank, recording sec.; G. D. Marlin, financial sec.; H. H. Ashton, treasurer; executive committee, G. D. Marlin, M. Kelley, Eli Hilton, W. L. Wilds, Joseph Mitchell; finance committee, J. L. Wood, E. T. Thurman, J. L. Fairbank.

The Glorious Fourth was ushered in upon the ringing of the bells at midnight by a general pandemonium of disorder, so that those who wished could get but little sleep the remainder of the night. During the day it was very quiet, as large numbers were out of the village for the day. The Good Templars and friends to the number of about 60 picnicked at Greenwich, and report an enjoyable social time. The Methodist Sunday school did not have quite as large a party at Hoyet's Grove as was anticipated, and quite a number of those drifted over to King's Grove, which was near by. Several smaller parties were also there, and all agree that Mr. King stands at the head in providing comfort and pleasure for his patrons, be they in large parties or small. More than the usual number of families and neighborhood picnics and parties were held.

For the information of "those who ought to know" better, but have the impression that the operatives in our mills are paid but a mere pittance for their labor, and are only "able to furnish the bare necessities of life," we have taken pains to investigate the matter and can vouch for the accuracy of the following statements. There are employed here and at Gilbertville 2465 operatives, including men, women and children, the latter of whom, owing to the character of the goods manufactured, are in much greater proportion than in most manufacturing establishments; and the average pay for each, old and young, is a fraction over $1.05 per day of ten hours. Instead of finding fault, we should remember the depression that was felt by all at the prospect last Summer of a small portion of one of our establishments having to suspend for a time on account of the fire, and it should be a matter of rejoicing that our corporations are able to pay so much better wages than can be shown by many of the corporations in the State. With these facts before us, we think that with anything like economy no one need to suffer.

The New York Legislature has passed a bill authorizing the organization of "fidelity" insurance companies, to furnish bonds for the good behavior and faithfulness of employes and officials. Nothing makes a man feel more "streaked" than to ask a person to go upon his bond, and such companies, furnishing the necessary bonds for a fair consideration, will find a profitable business awaiting them.

The wind in a recent storm in Rockingham, Va., drove an inch plank 10 inches wide through the side of a new weather-boarded house and across a room. In its passage the plank demolished a table.

The amount represented by business failures throughout the country in the first half of this year is $40,000,000, or seven millions more than for the corresponding period in 1880.

WASHINGTON, July 2, 1881.

The presidential party was to leave Washington this morning on the limited express for an extended journey through New England. The party was to comprise the President and Mrs. Garfield, who was to meet him in New York, their two elder sons Harry and James, Miss Mollie Garfield, their daughter, who is now with her mother; Colonel and Mrs. Rockwell, with Don Rockwell, their son, and Miss Lulu Rockwell, their daughter; Dr. W. H. Hawkes, the classical tutor of the three young gentlemen above named; the secretary of the treasury and Mrs. Windom; Postmaster-General James and Mrs. James, the secretary of the navy and Mrs. Hunt, the secretary of war, Judge Advocate General Swain and Colonel Jameson, of the postoffice department. From New York they were to go directly to Irvington, on the Hudson, where they were to spend Sunday. On Monday morning they were to go to Williamstown, Mass., to attend the commencement exercises of Williams college, of which the President is a graduate. They were to remain there until Thursday noon, and then take the cars for St. Albans, Vt., spending Friday at that place. From there they were to go to the White mountains, staying at Maplewood or Bethlehem and remaining over Sunday. On Monday they were to go to the top of Mount Washington, and on Tuesday to Portland, Me.; from thence to Augusta, where they were to be the guests of Secretary Blaine. The secretary had secured a revenue cutter, and the party were to take a trip along the Maine coast, visiting Mount Desert and other places of interest. They were then to return to Bangor, Me., and from there to Boston. The legislature of New Hampshire, having by resolution invited the President to make them a visit, the party was to go to Concord. From there they were to go to New Concord, Mass., then begin the homeward trip, going to New York by way of Hartford and New Haven, expecting to get back to this city about the 17th or 18th of July.

THE PRESIDENT SHOT DOWN.

This was the programme marked out for a pleasant vacation, and the last of the party to complete it had not arrived when the 9:20 A. M. train, preceding the limited express, departed from the depot. A few moment's later the President's carriage drove in front of the depot, and the President and his only companion, Secretary Blaine, alighted and both entered the depot by the main entrance on B street. There was a slight pause on the steps, and a moment later the President and Secretary of State, side by side, were walking across the ladies' reception room, in which there was not at the time half a dozen persons. One of these was a man of short stature, a wicked expression in his face, who moved about nervously until the two statesmen had half crossed the reception room, a distance of not more than ten feet from the door. A report as of a big fire cracker challenged the attention of the policeman at the main door, who thought some boy had fired it in honor of the President's departure. Instantly another report was heard and President Garfield lay prostrate upon the floor of the reception room wounded in the right arm and in the side just above the hip. The mysterious nervous individual was Charles Guiteau, now from Chicago, about forty years of age, who had been imploring the President to give him a consulate in France. His excited condition had changed in the presence of his intended victim, and he stood as firm and as calm as a statue, "the English bulldog" pistol still drawn and in his right hand. Secretary Blaine had, in turning the corner of the seat near the main entrance to the hall of the depot, gone just a little ahead of the President. The first shot not being noticed by the President or his companion, the second and the fatal one found Mr. Blaine on the sill of the door, who instantly called for help.

GREAT EXCITEMENT AT THE DEPOT.

Colonel Jameson, who was to have had charge of the President's party, was the first to communicate the sad news to the Cabinet officers. From the scene to the rear of the train was a distance of perhaps two hundred feet. As though drawn by an invisible power the presidential party from the special car where they had been seated only a few moments before in anticipation of a summer's pleasure tour. Soon afterward Mrs. Hunt, Mrs. James and Mrs. Windom were joined by Mrs. Blaine and Mrs. W. T. Sherman. Other friends of Mrs. Garfield quickly arrived, but were denied admittance, and soon the ponderous gates which lead to the executive mansion were closed, and armed military sentinels silently took their places about the house and grounds. These troops were ordered from the garrison at the arsenal in order to relieve the regular police, whose services were needed in the city where the crowds were rapidly increasing in angry excitement, There was only one company of soldiers, but the glance of their bayonets flashing in the sunlight as they walked with measured tread the several paths to which they were assigned, recalled the last hours of President Lincoln, when the same astonishment and horror were reflected on the faces of the crowds that surged about the executive mansion.

The President was carefully lifted from the ambulance and carried to a sleeping chamber in the southeast corner of the building, and was soon surrounded by the most eminent physicians in Washington. Owing to the nervous prostration which followed the shock, the surgeons did not deem it advisable to probe for the ball while the President was at the depot. Upon reaching the White House this nervous prostration seemed to pass away and the President assumed his usual composed manner, greeting members of the Cabinet and other intimate friends who called with a warm pressure of the hand and with cheerful words. Before leaving the depot the President manifested some anxiety about the effect of the intelligence of his wound upon Mrs. Garfield, and, turning to Colonel Rockwell, dictated to him the following dispatch to be sent to Mrs. Garfield at Long Branch:

MRS. GARFIELD, Elberon, N. J.

The President wishes me to say to you from him that he has been seriously hurt—how seriously he cannot yet say. He is himself and hopes you will come to him soon. He sends his love to you. A. F. ROCKWELL.

The cheerful manner of the President throughout the morning and the early hours of the afternoon excited the toward the room where the prostrate form of the President lay. Five members of the Cabinet were then present, Messrs. Blaine, Windom, Lincoln, Hunt and James. In a few minutes Attorney-General McVeagh, who was at his office when the deed was done, had arrived. The President's son Harry, scarcely realizing what had happened, for but little blood fell from the wounds, stood ready to fight or die in his father's defense. The scene beggars description. A beautiful summer morn, warm and tranquil as the face of nature in early spring, encouraged the brightest thoughts and happiest feelings in the hearts of the company that was to journey with the President. Now their countenances were black with sorrow. "President Garfield assassinated," exclaimed Secretary Hunt. "Impossible." No, if a meteoric stone had singled him out as its victim it could not be more improbable. Secretary Lincoln quickly gave the order for the troops stationed at the arsenal to hold themselves for immediate orders. The same was done by the secretary of the navy, who directed that the marines should be held for similar orders. Meanwhile word was sent to Surgeon General Barnes, Drs. Norris, Lincoln and Woodward requiring their immediate presence at the depot. With the messengers trooping over the pavements it was not long before every part of Washington was informed of what had happened, and the fact became generally known. Then a crowd soon assembled, and in less than ten minutes Sixth street and B street were packed with people, and the news of the horrible affair flew from mouth to mouth and spread over the city like wildfire. An attempt was made to rush into the building and cries were raised to lynch the assassin, but a strong force of policemen, summoned by telephone, had arrived promptly on the scene and preserved order. In the meantime the President had been carried to a room upstairs and the physicians summoned.

After remaining for about an hour in the depot it was decided to remove the President to the White House. Accordingly, a police ambulance was sent for, and the wounded man, attended by Colonel Rockwell, was driven home. The events above related were not generally known until some time after they had occurred.

Except the orderly crowd that assembled in front of the White House and police headquarters there was nothing to indicate that a national tragedy had been enacted that would startle the whole civilized world. The people first became convinced that something had happened out of the usual course by the rapid driving of a carriage through Pennsylvania avenue, clearing the way for the ambulance which followed, carefully driven and attended by a guard of mounted police. From mouth to mouth the intelligence spread. "The President is assassinated; was shot at the depot as he was going into the cars." There were no loud demonstrations, no disorderly language. The astonishment following the startling announcement deepened into unbelief, and the people seemed paralyzed with the horror of the moment. Still, the crowd followed the ambulance that entered the broad carriageway leading to the executive mansion. Policemen already guarded the gates and kept the crowd back, but through the fence and gateway the ambulance was seen to pause before the open door of the White House, while the large, fine form of the President was tenderly lifted from the vehicle, with the pallor of death stamped on his countenance. Glancing upward to the windows he saw some familiar faces, and with a smile, which those who saw it will never forget, he raised his right hand and gave the military salute, which seemed to say: "Long live the republic."

THE WOUNDED MAN AT THE WHITE HOUSE.

geons and friends that the ball had not touched any vital part, and that when the man had gained sufficient strength and composure an effort might be made to find the ball. Directions were given that the President should see as few persons as possible, and that he should be kept from conversation or making any particular effort whatever. After consultation it was determined by the surgeons that at 3 o'clock, if the condition of the President would permit, they would probe for the ball. When the hour arrived it was found that the President was not in condition to undergo the operation, and from this time he began to show symptoms that were regarded as very unfavorable—internal hemorrhage having been distinctly recognized.

During the afternoon, although suffering intensely from his wound, the President several times gave exhibition of his well-known good nature and genial disposition. At one time, while Secretary Blaine was sitting at his bedside, the President, turning his head, said: "Blaine, what motive do you think that man could have had in trying to assassinate me?" "I do not know, Mr. President; he says he had no motive; he must be insane." To this the President smilingly answered: "I suppose he thought it would be a glorious thing to emulate the pirate chief." At another time, when one of his sons was sobbing at his bedside the President said: "Don't be alarmed, Jimmy, the upper story is all right, it is only the hull that is a little damaged." When Colonel Rockwell announced to him that Mrs. Garfield had started on a special train from Long Branch, he said with evident feeling: "God bless the little woman; I hope the shock won't break her down."

ARREST OF THE ASSASSIN.

Immediately upon hearing the pistol shot Officer Kearney, who remained at his post of duty near the B street entrance after the President entered the building, ran into the large reception room, and was in time to see the assassin running toward the east door, which opens on Sixth street. Before reaching this door the assassin turned back to make his way out of the north door, where he was met and arrested by Officer Kearney. The officer met the prisoner on the steps and said to him: "I must arrest you." "All right," said the assassin, "I did it and will go to jail for it. I am a stalwart, and Arthur will be President." Officer Kearney took his prisoner into the large waiting-room, where he was joined by one of the railroad officers and escorted to police headquarters. On the way he gave Kearney a card on which was written: "Charles Guiteau, of Illinois," that being the prisoner's name. Guiteau is described on the books at police headquarters as follows: "Charles Guiteau, arrested at 9:25, July 2, 1881, for shooting President Garfield; aged thirty-six; white; born in the United States and a lawyer by profession; weight, 130 pounds; has dark-brown, thin whiskers and sallow complexion; dressed in a dark suit with black slouch hat."

Mrs. Sarah V. E. White, the lady in charge of the waiting-room at the depot, was the person who first reached the President after he was shot. She thus describes the shooting and arrest of Guiteau: "I saw the whole thing. The man came in from the door, entering the ladies' room from the main waiting-room, as the President entered the middle door from B street. When he had approached within five feet of the President he fired, aiming, I thought, at the President's heart, and missed him. The President did not seem to notice him, but walked right on past the man. He fired again and the President fell. He fell right at the turn of the second row of seats. I was the first to reach him and lifted up his head. The janitor rushed in and called the police. I held him until some men came and lifted him up. He did not speak to me or to any one until a young man, who, I think, was his son, came. After he had vomited I think he said something to him. When he was lifted upon the mattress he spoke or groaned. The man who shot him said nothing; no words at all passed between them. The man walked deliberately out of the center door, where somebody headed him off. He turned and started back the way he came, and was seized at the door by the police. I have seen the man once or twice before. One time in particular I noticed him, a few days ago. He promenaded up and down just as he did to-day, wiping his face and apparently excited. I thought he was waiting for some friends. This morning he waited here half an hour walking up and down. There were few people in the room when the shot was fired. All the passengers had gone out. I think there was a gentleman near the door."

The following letter was taken from the prisoner's pocket at police headquarters, showing conclusively his intention to kill the President:

JULY 2, 1881.

To the White House:

The President's tragic death was a sad necessity, but it will unite the Republican party and save the republic. Life is a flimsy dream, and it matters little when one goes. A human life is of small value. During the war thousands of brave boys went down without a tear. I presume the President was a Christian and that he will be happier in Paradise than here. It will be no worse for Mrs. Garfield, dear soul, to part with her husband this way than by natural death. He is liable to go at any time any way. I had no ill-will toward the President. His death was a political necessity. I am a lawyer, a theologian and a politician. I am a Stalwart of the Stalwarts. I was with General Grant and the rest of our men in New York during the canvass. I have some papers for the press, which I shall leave with Byron Andrews and his co-journalists at No. 1,420 New York avenue, where the reporters can see them. I am going to the jail.

CHARLES GUITEAU.

Mr. Andrews, to whom allusion is made in the foregoing letter, is the Washington correspondent of the Chicago Inter-Ocean. Upon learning of the shooting and the allusion made to him in the prisoner's papers, Mr. Andrews repaired to police headquarters and that he never heard of nor met Guiteau until he saw him under arrest to-day. The prisoner's statement, addressed to Mr. Andrews, was retained by the police authorities, and is a bulky package of manuscript written in a heavy, coarse hand, apparently covering twenty-five or thirty pages of letter paper.

The following letter was found on the street soon after Guiteau's arrest, with the envelope unsealed and addressed, "Please deliver at once:"

"To General Sherman or his first assistant in charge of the War Department:

"TO GENERAL SHERMAN: I have just shot the President. I shot him several times, as I wished him to go as easily as possible. His death was a political necessity. I am a lawyer, theologian and politician. I am a stalwart of the stalwarts. I was with General Grant and the rest of our men in New York during the canvass. I am going to the jail. Please order out your troops and take possession of the jail at once.

"Very respectfully,
"CHARLES GUITEAU."

On receiving the above General Sherman gave it the following indorsement:

"HEADQUARTERS OF THE ARMY,
"Washington, D. C., July 2, 11.35 A. M.

"This letter was handed me this minute by Major W. J. Twining United States Engineers, Commissioner of the District of Columbia, and Major William G. Brock, Chief of Police. I don't know the writer, never heard of or saw him to my knowledge, and thereby return it to the keeping of the above-named parties as testimony in the case.

"W. T. SHERMAN, General."

MRS. GARFIELD ARRIVES FROM LONG BRANCH.

Mrs. Garfield arrived from Long Branch early in the evening. When Mrs. Garfield alighted from her carriage, weeping, and followed by her daughter, Mr. Blaine broke completely down and wept for several minutes.

Mrs. Garfield was escorted by her son James up the stairs, the boy, a lad of fifteen, holding her tightly by the waist and constantly whispering words of comfort in her ear. Upon entering the apartment over which the shadow of death was beginning to hover, all present silently retired, and the dying President and his wife were left alone. This was at precisely 6:50 They remained together for fifteen minutes. At the end of that time the doctors were again admitted to the room.

THE PRESIDENT ON SUNDAY.

The President rested comfortably most of the time Sunday, suffering only from what he calls "tiger's claws" in his feet, and a slow but constant improvement in his condition was reported. In the evening, however, he became restless, his pulse increased and he exhibited other unfavorable symptoms, and the gravest apprehensions were excited. Expressions of sympathy for the President and Mrs. Garfield were received in the course of the day from a number of foreign rulers and from persons in all parts of the United States. The assassin Guiteau was informed falsely that the President was dead, and he expressed satisfaction at the announcement.

Dr. Hammond and other New York physicians were telegraphed for and a special train placed at their disposal at Jersey City. Mrs. Garfield, although suffering intensely, kept up with extraordinary fortitude, and was the only person admitted to the President's room by the physicians. Vice-President Arthur arrived in the morning, having been summoned by the Cabinet. He was in consultation all day with members of the Cabinet, and at night visited the White House. The President was asleep and it was not deemed prudent to awaken him. General Arthur, however, saw Mrs. Garfield and remained for some time with the members of the Cabinet who were on watch near the President's room. In their sermons clergymen in all parts of the country referred in feeling terms to the attempted assassination of President Garfield and prayed fervently for his recovery.

THE PRESIDENT ON MONDAY.

The symptoms developed in President Garfield's case on Monday were both favorable and unfavorable. The hope permitted and encouraged by the first official bulletin of the day was converted into a great fear by the later intelligence that the symptoms of Saturday had returned and that tympanites was again noticeable. For several hours in the earlier part of the evening hope was practically abandoned on all sides. The bulletin issued at 10 o'clock at night pronounced the patient slightly improved; at midnight the Cabinet officers had left the White House, and the President was sleeping quietly. Instead of the usual noise of firecrackers and pistol-shots which characterizes the Fourth, Washington was as silent as the grave.

Telegrams in countless numbers came pouring into the executive mansion and the state department from the United States, from Canada, from every country in Europe. The President and his Cabinet were especially touched and gratified by the evidences of affection and sympathy which came from all parts of the South. Hundreds of telegrams, coming from every State and representing both sexes and all classes of the people, were received. It was utterly impossible, in the excitement and anxiety of the present crisis, to acknowledge these telegrams or to express to the writers the gratification which their good wishes and warm sympathy gave to the President and his Cabinet. The secretary of state, therefore, furnished the following, with a request that it be given the widest possible circulation:

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
WASHINGTON, JULY 4—11 P. M.

To the Press:

On behalf of the President and Mrs. Garfield I desire to make public acknowedgment of the very numerous messages of condolence and affection which have been received since Saturday morning. From almost every State in the Union, from the South as bountifully as from the North, and from countries beyond the sea, have come messages of anxious inquiry and tender words of sympathy in such numbers the newspapers to express for the President and Mrs. Garfield the deep gratitude which they feel for the devotion of their fellow countrymen and friends abroad in this hour of heavy affliction.

JAMES G. BLAINE, Secretary of State.

THE PRESIDENT'S CONDITION ON TUESDAY.

On Tuesday the following official bulletins, issued from the White House, showed the President's condition during the day:

WASHINGTON, July 5—8:30 A. M.

The President, since 6 o'clock this morning, has rested quietly. Doctors Bliss and Reyburn have reported to members of the Cabinet, informing them of a marked improvement in the general character of observable symptoms and an improved tone of the pulse.

WASHINGTON, July 5—1 P. M.

The favorable condition of the symptoms continues. There has been no recurrence of the vomiting. Pulse, 110; temperature, 101; respiration, twenty-four. The President lies at present in a natural sleep.

(Signed) D. W. BLISS,
J. K. BARNES,
J. J. WOODWARD,
ROBT. REYBURN.

WASHINGTON, July 5—2 P. M.—General D. G. Swaim has just left the President's room, and says: There was an hour yesterday at which unfavorable symptoms set in. The corresponding hour has passed to-day without such symptoms having appeared. There is a decided gain, which we had no right to expect even so late as daylight this morning. The President has slept quietly and naturally at short intervals. His mind is perfectly clear. He described his symptoms with the utmost precision and clearness. There may be some increase of pulse and temperature again this evening, but we have every reason to believe that there will now be a steady gain with each day.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—The condition of the President to-night is even more favorable than indicated by the last official bulletin. For the first time since the shooting the attending physicians talk with a certain degree of confidence in his recovery. Prior to the issue of the 9 o'clock bulletin last night, the physicians had abandoned all hope of recovery, and they had determined to inform the members of the Cabinet that death would certainly ensue within forty honrs if the examination they were about to make last evening did not furnish decided evidence of improvement. Happily, the changed condition of the distinguished cufferer furnished the evidence hoped for, and since that time there has been a steady and remarkable improvement. At 9 o'clock last night the pulse was 124, with the temperature and respiration correspondingly high. This morning's examination showed a decline in the pulse to 114, and later in the day to 104, with other favorable conditions that increased the hopes entertained for recovery. To-night the pulse marked 106, temperature, 100.9 degrees, and respiration twenty-four. This was better than the physicians expected, particularly as all the other indications were reassuring. During the day the President received considerable nourishment, and upon two occasions asked for food. He was given chicken broth in two ounce doses, and received 18 ounces in all of this kind of nourishment. He grew tired of the broth, which he said did not satisfy his cravings of hunger, and he was given bouilion in small quantities.

There is limited inflammation in the track of the assassin's bullet, but it is what the physicians term a healthy inflammation, natural to the wound, and an indication that the healing process is going on. There is no tympanitis. His strength has improved, and at times he shows a disposition to change his position by his own efforts, using his elbows to raise the body. He is forbidden, however, to make any exertion whatever, and his attendants watch him vigilantly to prevent this. His sleep through the day has been natural and refreshing, and no morphia has been administered during the past twenty-four hours. There have been two movements of the bowels to-day, both spontaneous, which show positively that the intestines are not injured, and are in a healthy condition.

The doctors say that the condition of the President, while still critical, furnishes very decided evidence that he will be able to pass successfully future stages of the crisis unless something not now anticipated should take place. The weather has been very hot to-day, but the President did not complain on this account. He has now reached that point where it can be said that every hour increases his hold on life. Of course, the doctors will give no assurance whatever as to the future, but their cheerful manner and encouraging conversations to-night have almost convinced all who have been watching with painful solicitude about the President's chamber that he will serve out his term of office.

WASHINGTON, July 5—Midnight.—Information just received from the President's sick-room is to the effect that the favorable symptoms noted at the date of the last official bulletin are still maintained.

THE PRESIDENT ON WEDNESDAY.

WASHINGTON, July 6—5:30 A. M.—Colonel Rockwell, one of the watchers during the latter part of the night, reports the President to have passed a quiet night. The President, this morning, says that he felt comfortable refreshed with the rest he obtained during the night.

WASHINGTON, July 6—9:30 A. M.—The President has passed a most comfortable night and has slept well. His condition has remained throughout as favorable as when the last bulletin was issued. The pulse is becoming less frequent and is now ninety-eight; temperature, 98.4; respiration, twenty-three.

(Signed) D. W. BLISS,
J. K. BARNES,
J. J. WOODWARD,
ROBT. REYBURN.

WASHINGTON, July 6—11 A. M.—The condition of the President since the last official bulletin has further improved. His pulse is now down to

AN ACCOUNT OF THE ASSASSIN.

WASHINGTON, July 2, 1881.

Charles J. Guiteau, the would-be assassin, hails from Chicago. He came to Washington in February last and has remained engaged, as is supposed, in an effort to secure the appointment of United States consul to Marseilles, France. At the jail, to which he was taken at half-past 10 o'clock this forenoon, about one hour after the shooting, he gave his name as Charles Guiteau, of Chicago. In appearance he is a man about thirty years of age, and is supposed to be of French descent. His height is about five feet five inches. He has a sandy complexion and is slight, weighing not more than 125 pounds. He wears a mustache and slight chin whiskers, slightly tinged with gray. His sunken cheeks and widely separated eyes give him a sullen, or, as the jailer describes it, a "looney" appearance.

Colonel Burnside, the disbursing officer at the postoffice department, says he knew Guiteau when he was a baby in his mother's arms. His father, J. W. Guiteau, was an old resident and respected citizen of Freeport, Ill., where he held many offices of trust. He married a very beautiful woman, with whom and the younger children he joined the Oneida community. He afterward returned to Freeport, where from 1874 up to last September, the time of his death, he served as cashier of the Second National bank. There were three children. An older brother, William Guiteau, for a long time practiced law at Davenport, Iowa, but is now practicing his profession in Boston, Mass., where also he is at the head of large insurance interests. A younger sister, Flora, was a very promising girl, having a very decided talent for music. Charles Julius Guiteau, who to-day is in jail for the murder of the President, was an odd boy. When the family left the Oneida community Charles, then fifteen or sixteen years old, was left behind.

He afterward went to Chicago and studied law, being cared for and supplied with money by his father. After completing his studies Guiteau went to Europe, where he traveled several years, imbibing socialistic and other eccentric doctrines. A few years ago he returned to this country and lectured on the second advent of Christ. He published a pamphlet, in which the egotism of the man was plainly shown. He spoke of himself as a messenger of God to announce His coming. His lecture here in Lincoln hall on this subject was a failure. Julius—we used to call him Julius, but I see he has dropped that part of his name—is now about forty or forty-two years old. From what I knew of the boy, his education in the Oneida community and his utterances on religion, I was not at all surprised at his committing the act this morning. I understand from people employed at the White House that Guiteau had forced himself upon the President before. He was an applicant for the consulship at Marseilles and a few days ago obtained access to the President and acted so rudely that the President had him removed. I have no donbt that, feeling offended by this act, he determined on the course which culminated in the terrible tragedy of this morning. Guiteau was hanging around the Republican headquarters, No. 241 Fifth avenue, New York, during the campaign last fall. He made a few speeches, but his efforts did not seem to be appreciated by the committee. He was poor and seedy looking, and borrowed some money from Mr. Jewell after the election and a few days before the committee broke up he asked Governor Jewell for a recommendation for a consulate. He especially urged that if he could secure a consulate a certain rich lady would marry him.

WHAT HIS LANDLADY SAYS OF HIM

Mrs. William S. Grant, who keeps a boarding house at Nos. 922 and 924 Fourteenth street, northwest, and with whom Guiteau boarded for the last thirty days, took the following advertisement on Saturday morning to be inserted in the Post:

WANTED—CHARLES GUITEAU, OF Illinois, who gives the President and Secretary Blaine as reference, to call at 924 Fourteenth street and pay his board bill.

What is remarkable about this is that when Mrs. Grant called to insert the advertisement, which was about a couple of hours after the President had been shot, she was ignorant of the occurrence.

CHICAGO, July 2.

Guiteau's idiosyncrasies while a resident of Chicago brought him into unenviable notoriety on more than one occasion. He was of unwholesome appearance, and was regarded as of weak mental capacity and partially insane. His manner was a queer combination of obsequiousness, humility and querulous self-assertion. He was disliked, and nobody seemed to want him around.

He was constantly trying to get himself before the public in one form or another. He was insanely anxious to get into print without apparent object. He was expert only in one line of business, and that was beating boarding houses. He came to Chicago ten or twelve years ago, and did a little shyster law work around the justice's courts. Those with whom he came in contact speedily rated him for what he was worth and their estimate of him may be summed up in the expression that he was cracked. That there was a screw loose in his mental machinery seemed to admit of no question. He was voted a nuisance and was tolerated only because he was believed to be harmless. He was visionary and erratic. There was a certain earnestness in his manner which might deceive one on first making his acquaintance, but he invariably showed his eccentricity in the course of a few minutes' conversation. When he first came to this city he was quite young, and his eccentric course was attributed to the freshness of youth, which would wear off with age. The disease, however, was deeper; but before that fact was discovered he had married a Miss Scoville, a sister of George Scoville, a lawyer, now in business in Randolph street. He preyed on boarding houses for two or three years without getting himself into serious trouble until 1874 or 1875, when he was run out of town.

Bringing up in New York he re-to practice law. Among the persons victimized was the proprietor of the St. Nicholas hotel, who allowed Guiteau to run up a big bill. His exploits as a hotel and boarding house beat finally got into the papers. The New York Herald wrote him up extensively. This seemed to be the chance that Guiteau had long sought. Previous to that day he had not appeared in the public prints, but when the Herald denounced him at length he proposed to sue Mr. Bennett for libel, and did institute proceedings against him, which were compromised in some form or other.

He afterward returned to Chicago and reaumed his career of dead-beating. He was exposed by the Times two or three times, but continued on his course. He threatened suit, and visited the Times office several times. His visits grew tiresome, and one day he was given the privilege of going downstairs in double-quick time or being thrown over the railing. He preferred to go down the easiest way, and did not bother the office again for months.

Guiteau at times assumed the appearance of a pious person, and at such times he was a regular church-goer, Sunday-school teacher, and general missionary.

A Lunatic After Mr. Blaine.

WASHINGTON, July 5.—Daniel McNamara, supposed to be insane, appeared at police headquarters to-day, and said he was from King William county, Va., but had been living in Philadelphia. He announced that he had been inspired by God to come here and kill Secretary Blaine. He asked where the secretary lived, and exhibited a revolver. He is not clear whether his mission is to assassinate Secretary Blaine or General Arthur. He has been sent to the insane asylum. He stated when examined that he had been inspired by the spirit to kill General Grant during the latter's administration, but was defeated in that object, and said that if an opportunity were given him he would explain the manner in which Guiteau was prompted to assail the President.

PHILADELPHIA, July 5.—Daniel McNamara, who was arrested to-day in Washington, lives in Philadelphia at Sixth and Catharine streets. He came from Ireland when he was fourteen years old. He served through the rebellion and afterward for five years served in the regular army. On the twenty-second of last October he was sent to the Philadelphia almshouse, but left there on the following day. Last January he was arrested for throwing a brick through a back window, his purpose being to secure a commitment to jail. The authorities disappointed him by sending him to the insane asylum, where he remained for several months. Recently he has been employed at the Baldwin locomotive works, but lost his place a week ago. Then he conceived the idea of going to Washington to get a pension, and spoke to his relatives of visiting Secretary Blaine to secure that gentleman's influence in his behalf. He left Philadelphia on Monday afternoon to go to the capital, and before going spoke in strong terms in denunciation of Guiteau's crime. McNamara always had extravagant ideas of his own importance, and when discussing politics always became greatly excited.

Is Horseshoeing Useless?

A recent issue of Frazer's Magazine contains an article by Sir George W. Cox, in which he estimates that the English custom of horseshoeing costs the nation annually as much as $45,000,000, which might be saved if the horses were allowed to go unshod. He quotes authorities from Xenophon, who marched his horses unshod from Cunaxa over the Armenia Highlands to the walls of Trebizond, down to the "free lanciers" of the present day, and contends that it is safer, cheaper and better to let the horses go unshod over the hardest roads, and especially in the slippery streets in London. He estimates that over twelve million dollars would be saved in the farriers' bills alone; and he calculates further that the working life of a horse would be trebled by the change, so that a horse which is now worn out at twelve years would live to twenty-six. The figures seem somewhat startling and have hardly been sufficiently proved to be trustworthy. Meanwhile, it is said that a medical man in Waterbury, Conn., has not put shoes on his horses for two years, driving them winter, summer, spring and autumn with bare feet without any trouble. The doctor's theory is that nature has provided for the horse; that a horse can travel over all kinds of roads; that the hoof will be moist, and that the frog coming to the ground keeps the hoof properly spread, and free from founder and other diseases.

Periling Her Beauty.

The sentiment of the honeymoon is a frail thing, and after a while a man flops right through it like a brick through a cobweb. A three-months'-old bride was rattling away in her usual loquacious style, when her husband, forcing himself to appear not too severely tortured, said:

"Don't you feel as if you were periling your beauty by talking so much?"

"Why so, John?" she asked with some surprise.

"Because, precious, this is summer-time and you might get your tongue sunburnt."—Brooklyn Eagle.

In cases of confirmed baldness the new remedy proposed is to remove the scalp, bit by bit, and substitute, by skin grafting, pieces of healthy scalp, taken from the heads of young persons, The success which has heretofore attended operations of this nature in cases of scalp wounds gives a promising outlook for this new mode of curing baldness; and perhaps the day is not far distant when the shining pates of our venerable fathers will bloom with the flowing locks of youth.

"Who Shall Sing Freedom's Song?"

"Who shall sing Freedom's Song?"
Not any man, nor woman fair;
They have been thralls to Pain and Care,
They have been thralls to Wrong.
For song so glad and free
No voice that's learned a note of pain
Can ever touch the proud, glad strain
Worthy such minstrelsy.

"The birds, swift-winged and free?"
Ah! no. So many captives sigh
In gilded prisons, sing and die
Longing for liberty.
"Let drums and trumpets shout."
Alas! they have but hireling tones;
For marching hosts or tyrants' thrones
Their noisy notes ring out.

"Who shall sing Freedom's Song?"
Oh! Winds of Heaven, that ceaseless blow;
Oh! mighty, unbound Winds! you know
The strain so fresh and strong!
No one shall silence you;
Not the blue blade, nor flood, nor fire
Shall stay your course; you cannot tire,
Running the whole world round.

Oh! Winds of Heaven! Sing out!
Sing in the boundless forest trees,
Sing in the scented summer breeze,
Among the wild waves shout!
Sing on the hills and plain—
You that have never owned control,
Sing Freedom's Song from Pole to Pole,
Until Earth learn the strain.

UNDER THE MIDNIGHT LAMP.

I am a doctor, a busy professional man, whose time is money; whenever, therefore, I can save it, I do. Many and many a night have I passed in the train, counting the hours thus gained as a miner does his gold. Upon this point, unfortunately, my little wife and I do not agree; and it is, I think, the only point upon which we do not. Eight hours in a comfortless railway compartment, rolled up in your plaid like a snake in its blanket, instead of in your comfortable sheets, stretched over a comfortable spring mattress—no, she cannot be made to see the propriety of the exchange, nor will she believe that I sleep quite as well, if not disturbed, in the plaid as in the sheets.

The train was just off as I sprang in, and the shock of the start landed me in my seat. Being of a slow, placid nature, I was in no hurry to recover from the shock; and we were fairly off, speeding away as only an English express can speed, before I looked round. I had not the carriage to myself, as I had at first supposed; a lady occupied the further end; and at the first glance, spite of the dim light and the fact of her veil being down, I saw that her eyes, unnaturally large and intense in their expression, were fixed upon me. I at all times prefer a carriage to myself, and if a companion I must have, let it be a gentleman, not a lady; but there was no help for it; the lady was there, and moreover, she was looking at me. "So she may," I said to myself; "that shall not prevent my making myself as comfortable as circumstances will allow." Slowly and deliberately, therefore, I removed my hat, substituting for it a cloth cap, which I drew well down over my ears; then I folded my arms and composed myself to sleep. But in vain; the eyes of my fellow-passenger haunted me; I saw them as distinctly as if my own were open. Was she watching me still? Involuntarily I looked up and round, and my look met hers, full, burning, intense, with far more meaning in it than I could at all fathom. It was getting decidedly unpleasant, and I was growing decidedly uncomfortable; try as I might I could not keep my eyes closed; hers were on me and meet them I must.

In her attitude too, as well as in her look, there was something strange and mysterious. Huddled up in the corner, she seemed to be holding something close pressed to her beneath the long loose mourning cape, bending low over it in a crouching posture. Once or twice, her eyes still fixed upon mine, I saw her shiver; but for that slight convulsive movement, she sat perfectly still and motionless.

Was she cold? I offered her my plaid, glad of an opportunity to break the ominous silence. If she would but speak, make some commonplace remark, the spell might be broken.

"I am not cold."

A commonplace remark enough; but the spell was broken. The mystery that lay in her eyes lay also in her voice.

What should I try next? I looked at my watch—11:30; our train speeded on at a furious rate, no chance of a stoppage for some time to come, and the full, wide-open gaze of my motionless companion not for one moment removed from my face. It was unpleasant, certainly. If I changed my position, face the window instead of her, she must remove her eyes from my face at last. But there was a sort of fascination about her and her look which I preferred meeting to shirking, knowing that it was on me all the time.

There was nothing for it, then, but to give up all hope of sleep, and make the best of my position and companion, whom I now observed more closely. That she was a lady there could be but little doubt; there was that in her dress and appearance that was unmistakable. That she was pretty there could be little doubt either; those great dark, intensely dark, eyes, the thick coils of warm, burnished hair, the small, pale features, seen dimly beneath the veil; yes, she was young, pretty, a lady, and in trouble. So far I got and no farther. How came she to be traveling alone at that time of night and with that look on her face? What could it be that she was holding pressed so closely to her and yet so carefully kept out of sight? From the size and uncertain outline I could have guessed it to be a child; but, then, there was not the faintest motion, nor could she have held a sleeping infant even long in that position. I think that something of curiosity must been betrayed in my look, for her own darkened and deepened into a perfect agony of doubt and fear.

Ashamed, I withdrew my gaze at was about to make a memorandum, when, with a sudden forward movement, she fell at my feet, arresting my hand by the agonized grasp of her own, its burning contact sending through me a painful thrill.

"Don't betray me! Don't give me up to him! Oh, don't! I am so frightened!"

It was but a whisper, breathed out rather than spoken, yet it shuddered through me like a cry.

"I cannot always hide it! I cannot always bear it about with me; it breaks my heart, and I—am so tired."

And letting the hand which still held, pressed closely to her, the mysterious burden that had so raised my curiosity, drop heavily to her side, there lay at her feet and mine a little dead baby, a tiny creature evidently not many weeks old.

Then the woman threw up her veil, and, withdrawing her eyes for the first time from mine, clasped her hands before her, her figure thrown slightly back, and looked down upon it. A pretty picture—the poor young mother, with her pale child's face and deep mourning dress; the wee baby, gleaming so white in its death and baby-robe against the heavy crape skirt on which it lay, a pretty picture certainly for a railway carriage, and lighted by its dim midnight lamp.

"Dead!" was my involuntary exclamation.

She stretched her clasped hands down toward it with a despairing gesture, speaking with low, wild, rapid utterance.

"It was not his look that killed it, but my love. He hated it—my baby, my first-born; for all the love I gave him, he hated it; and that his look might not kill it, I held it in my arms, so close, so close, till it was dead. Oh, my baby, my baby."

The outstretched hands had reached it now, and raised it from the floor to the seat, folding it around until the inclosing arms and the down-bent face hid it once more out of sight.

Was ever luckless passenger more awkwardly placed? the dead child; the prostrate woman; the scene, a public railway carriage; the hour, midnight. I am of a blunt nature. Mrs. Merton often scolds me for my blunt, straightforward speeches; but then she has such a pretty way of beating about the bush, which it would be as absurd for me to imitate as it was for the ass to mimic the tricks of his master's lap-dog. I must go straight to the point as soon as ever I see it. I did so now.

"How come you to be traveling alone, and with a dead child? Are you going home?"

The question seemed to rouse her once more to a perfect frenzy of fear. She turned to me as before, clinging to my hand with small hot fingers, and the old heartbroken cry:

"Don't betray me, don't give me up to him! His look would have killed my baby; it would kill me if I had to meet it. She is safe, for I killed her, and she is dead; and he hates me and I have no home—no home!"

I was in a perfect maze of doubt. Could the pretty soft young creature at my feet be indeed a murderess? and could it be her husband of whom she seemed in such abject terror? My blood boiled; I felt ready to defend her against a dozen husbands. But how?

It was midnight now; we could not be far from London; the guard might be popping his head in at any moment. I jumped to a sudden conclusion.

"Were you going to any friend in London?"

"I know nobody in London."

"The poor little thing is either mad or her husband is a brute," was the mental exclamation.

"Then you must come home with me to my wife; she will see after you."

An upward glance of wild, agonized supplication:

"She won't betray me, or—take baby from me?" And once more the wee dead thing was lifted up into the arms that seemed almost too frail to hold it, and hidden away beneath the long mourning cape.

I took her home. Mary received her with a look of amazement that made me smile, but that found no expression in words. When, taking her aside, I told her all I knew, she wrung her hands in sheer sympathizing pity.

"Murdered her own baby—her first-born! Oh, how sad, how dreadful!" And involuntarily she glanced toward the door that hid from us our own little ones, safely cradled and asleep. Then she went back to our strange guest, who sat huddled up in my own big easy-chair, the dead baby still at her bosom.

"I must get her to bed," said Mary, with a quick, determined nod; and she really did contrive to do so by soft, tender, cooing words, and solemn assurances of safety for herself and baby, whom she kissed and cried over, and considered as she might some living object of solicitude, much to the little mother's comfort.

"And you won't betray me; and he won't come and take her from me, or hurt us with his angry look? Oh, dear, how nice it is to lie down! I am so tired, and baby is so cold; but I think I can sleep now a little and—forget."

She was half asleep already; the heavy lids had drooped together, the small, pale face had drooped downward upon the little downy head that lay against her bosom.

"Her husband must be sent for," I said, resolutely, when we found ourselves once more alone; and I glanced at an envelope I had taken from the stranger's pocket:

"Mrs. TREMAYNE, Grantle Lodge, Grantley."

Mary stared at me aghast.

"Her husband, who hates her, and would have killed her baby! Oh, John, you would not be so cruel! She seems so frightened of him, poor thing! You may be sure he is some horrid, wicked tyrant. And if she really killed her baby—oh, dear, how sad it is. Whatever will become of her!"

"But, my dear, if she has a husband or friends, we must restore her to them. Why, she is little more than a child! It's very strange, very, and sad; but the mystery must be cleared and the baby buried."

unfeeling beyond anything she could have conceived.

"Of course her husband is a madman who will murder her as soon as he gets her into his hands. You know, John, that husbands are always murdering their wives."

"Middle-aged wives, dear, or elderly, whose lives are heavily insured. I shall telegraph at once."

"Then her death will be at your door, sir—mind that!" And too indignant to waste upon me more words, away went Mary to take a last peep at our own sleeping babes, at the dead baby about which there was so much mystery and the poor young mother whom she had doomed to a violent death.

She was still bending over her, and had called me up to the bedside to notice the extraordinary length of the lashes and the beauty of the face in repose, when we were startled by a knock at the front door.

"It's the husband, I know it is. Oh, John, don't betray her, don't give her up; you wouldn't be so cruel."

"Nonsense, child; watch by her till I return. If she awakes say nothing about—"

"Her husband. As if I should."

Our household having long since retired, long, indeed, before my return, I myself opened the door.

The street lamp lighted dimly two figures; one tall, stout and muffled.

"Mr. Merton?"

I answered in the affirmative.

"You have kindly given shelter to a lady?"

"Just so."

The speaker nodded to his companion, who touched his hat and vanished.

The other stranger had now entered the hall, and grasped my hand.

"Mr. Tremayne?" I asked, hesitatingly.

"Captain Tremayne. How is she?"

"Asleep, under my wife's care; sleeping as peacefully as a child."

"Thank God! So young—at such an hour—in such a state—"

I saw a long shudder run through the tall, powerful frame.

"And the child?" he added, after a pause, in a horror-stricken whisper. "She had it with her?"

I hardly knew what to answer; but he had thrown off his heavy ulster and traveling cap, and now stood before me, as handsome, as pleasant and honest-looking a young fellow as I ever saw, and my heart warmed to him. He was no assassin, or ruffian, or cowardly bully, whatever Mary might say. The shadow of a great horror, that lay in the blue, mellow eyes, had been laid there by terror, not crime.

"The child is dead," I said, softly.

"It died two weeks ago, died suddenly in convulsions in her arms, and the shock turned her brain. She was doing so well, poor little thing; but afterward she grew delirious, and in her ravings she accused herself and me. I could do nothing; she would not have me near her, but beat me off with her hands, as if she could not bear the sight of me. And I was so fond of her and she of me!" Here the man broke down. He walked to the window, then turned and asked, abruptly: "May I go to her?"

I thought of Mary and hesitated.

"She is sleeping so peacefully just now; and if she awoke suddenly and saw you—"

"She shall not see me," he broke in, eagerly. "I will be so quiet; but I must see her. I nursed her through a long illness a year ago, and she would have no one near her but me; and now—"

Under the heavy military mustache I saw his lip quiver; he paused, then added: "I must go to her!" not in command, but in yearning appeal, both in voice and eyes.

"Will you wait here a minute? I will see whether she still sleeps."

She still slept, the heavy peaceful sleep of a tired child, Mary keeping a stern watch and guard over her. I beckoned her out of the room.

"Well!" with fretful impatient eagerness. "You have seen him? What is he like? Is he horrid?"

"Judge for yourself; he is in the dining-room. He says he must see her—he must come in."

"That he shan't, the cruel wretch; or it will be over my prostrate body!" tragically.

"Well, go and tell him so."

"I will!" And away, nothing daunted, went Mary. I smiled. She will no more resist the pleading of those handsome blue eyes than did her husband. He will win her over with a look." I was right; she soon returned, and not alone.

"He will be very quiet, and she need not see him. I thought it would be better"—all this apologetically.

He crossed the room as noiselessly as a woman, stooped over the bed in silence, then sat down beside it. Mary shaded the lamp so that the room was in twilight, and so we all three sat down to wait.

For more than an hour we waited, then Mary stole out. Captain Tremayne looked up as the door opened and closed; then, with a quick sigh, laid the brown curly head down upon the pillow as close as possible to that of the poor young wife without touching it, and his hand moved up toward hers, where it lay on the coverlet, but without touching that either, for fear of waking or disturbing her.

It was not until the first gray streaks of daylight were struggling in through the window beside which I sat, and there was a slight stir; she was awaking at last.

"Hugh!" she breathed—dreamily at first, then urgently—"Hugh!"

"Yes, dear."

She turned her face toward his where it lay beside her. She was only partially awake as yet, her eyes were still closed; but the hand on the coverlet crept up softly toward him, fluttered over his face, rested one moment carelessly on the brown curls, then, with a long, contented sigh, her arm stole round his neck.

"Husband, kiss me!"

"His presence has saved her," was my mental comment; "there is nothing now to fear;" and, unnoticed, I left the room.

Chilled and cramped with the long sitting after the night's journey, I was not sorry to find the sitting-room bright with lamp and firelight, the kettle singing on the hob, breakfast as comfortably laid out for two as if the hour had been 9 instead of 6, and Mrs. Merton as neat and fresh and trim as if that midnight tragedy had been all a dream. Let cavilists sneer as they may, there is nothing for a man like a wife, if she be a good one. I myself may have had my doubts on the subject—wives are but women after all, and must therefore be trying at times, even the best of them. But I certainly had no doubts whatever as I stretched out my feet to the blaze, and resigned myself cheerfully to being petted and waited on.

"Well?" questioned Mrs. Merton, when my creature comforts had all been attended to, and not before. I told her how matters stood; she was delighted.

"And so they are fond of each other, after all? and his being unkind to her and her poor little baby was only a delusion. How dreadful!—how delightful, I mean! Poor fellow!—so young and handsome and nice! I felt so sorry for him."

"He must have traveled down in the same train as she did."

"Oh, no; he told me all about it. He had been summoned up to town on business, and left home yesterday morning. In the evening the nurse left her, as she imagined, asleep, to fetch something from the kitchen."

"Have a gossip there, you mean."

"John, solemnly, you don't like nurses; you know you don't."

"My dear, I am a married man, and, moreover, an M. D. A well-balanced mind must hate somebody or some class of bodies, and, as a rule, medical men hate nurses."

"Nonsense, John! Well, Mrs. Tremayne got away from the nurse, went downstairs, and being traced to the station, where she had taken a ticket to London, Captain Tremayne was telegraphed to, and was stopped as he got into the train on his way home. Some one must have seen you leave the station."

"As he came to look for her here somebody must have brought him; two came to the door."

"It will be all right now that he has found her and is fond of her; she will get quite well, and he will only have to comfort her for the loss of her poor little baby."

I wipe my pen, blot the MSS. and rise. My story is done, and as it is the first it will probably be the last of which I shall be guilty.

Mrs. Merton looks up from the glove she is mending. "The story done! Why, all you have written is only the beginning of the end. You could not surely have the heart to break off in that unsatisfactory manner. Not a word about Captain Tremayne's gratitude, or the hamper they sent us at Christmas, or the birth of their little son last year, and the pretty way in which she coaxed you to be godfather, though her uncle, the duke, was only waiting to be asked; or how she insisted upon our bringing baby and Johnny and Freddy, and how baby—"

But I seized my hat and gloves. Mary is, as I have said, the best of wives, if just a little trying at times, and her baby the most wonderful of all created babies—but I have an appointment at twelve!—Tinsley's Magazine.

Big Water on the Mississippi in 1844.

The following is taken from an article on the "Levees of the Mississippi," in Scribner: Life in the Mississippi swamp is unique, but perhaps never so much so as during that memorable summer. The shallowest water, for indefinite miles in any direction, was two feet deep, the nearest land, the "Hills of the Arkansaw," thirty miles away. The mules were quartered on the upper floor of the gin-house; the cattle had been all drowned long ago; planter, negroes and overseer were confined in their respective domiciles; the grist-mill was under water, and there was no means of preparing corn for culinary purposes except a wooden hominy-mortar. The hog-and-hominy diet (so highly extolled by some people who have never lived on it) was adopted of necessity, the former being represented by mess pork, salter than tongue can tell. There were no visitors, except now and then a sociable snake, which no doubt bored by swimming around indefinitely in the overflow, and craving even human companionship, would glide up on the gallery of some of the houses. There was no means of locomotion except the skiff and the humble but ever-serviceable dug-out—nowhere to go and nobody within a day's journey otherwise or more comfortably situated. The only sense of sympathy from without was had from remote and infrequent glimpses of the gallant steamer J. M. White, which, leaping from point to point, made better time from New Orleans to St. Louis than was ever made before or for many years after.

That year nineteen plantations out of twenty failed to produce a single pound of cotton or a single bushel of corn, and when the flood was over and the swamp Noahs came out of their respective arks, they were, to say the least, malcontent. They were not ruined, of course, but they had lost a whole year's gross income. Moreover, the prestige of the swamp as a cotton country was wofully diminished. The planters in the "hills," as the uplands are denominated, began to hold up their heads, no longer overcrowded by the extraordinary crops alleged to have been heretofore produced in the swamp.

The swamp planters set to work to redeem the disaster, and to provide, as far as possible, against its recurrence. With the purpose of retrieving their financial fortunes they took some unique measures. There is a tradition that, at a public meeting held in Greenville, Miss., in October, 1844, among other more commonplace resolutions, one was gravely and unanimously adopted to the effect that a demand of payment within twelve months from that date of any debt, great or small, upon any planter who had been overflowed that year, should be considered distinctly "personal"—a clear case for pistols and coffee. The code was certainly a curious institution, but probably this is the only instance in which it was expected to do duty as a stay-law.

How to Fish.

"What's the matter with my stick? Let go, you nasty thing! Here's another one! Quick!"

"Pull him in, can't ye? You've got a bite. Haul up!" cried Mr. Spoopendyke, trying to untangle himself from his line and help his wife. "Lift him out of the water!"

"He won't let me," squeaked Mrs. Spoopendyke, holding both arms out at full length. "Take him off! Scat! Go 'way, you monster!"

"Lift your pole straight up in the air!" shouted Mr. Spoopendyke. "Hoist the dod gasted thing right up!"

Mrs. Spoopendyke exerted herself and disclosed an eel, dangling.

"It's a rattlesnake!" she yelled. "Don't go near him! Fire! fire! murder! police! police-e-e!"

"Hold your yawp, will ye?" bawled Mr. Spoopendyke. "Get him over the dock so I can catch him! What yer holding him out there for! Waiting for him to dry? Stick that pole straight up in the air, I tell ye!"

Mrs. Spookendyke threw the pole over her shoulder and flopped the ee into Mr. Spoopendyke's countenance.

"Dod gast the measely eel!" he howled, as he spit it out. "Stop waving that slam basted lightning rod like a flag, will ye? Hold it still, I say? Think you're a tree?"

"Don't touch him! Throw him overboard! He'll sting you to death!" gurgled Mrs. Spoopendyke, and, forgetting that the pole still exercised an influence over the eel, she gave it a jerk and it slipped through Mr. Spoopendyke's fingers. That gentleman made a spring for it, and swashed into the water.

"Heu! blab! baa! waggle, gin, hic, ga, gaggle!" sputtered Mr. Spoopendyke, as some lightermen fished him out.

"Did you catch cold, dear?" inquired Mrs. Spoopendyke, with solicitude, as they made their way home.

"If I did I landed it," growled Mr. Spoopendyke, blowing mud like the exhaust of a tug.

"Anyway, I caught an eel, didn't I?" asked Mrs. Spoopendyke, carrying out the woman's idea of comforting a man with the only thing he don't want to hear about.

"Oh! you caught it!" ripped Mr. Spoopendyke. "You're a fish woman, you are. All you want now is glass sides and some bubbles running through you to be an aquarium! Another time we both go fishing you stay home! You hear?"

And with this novel mathematical suggestion Mr. Spoopendyke hunted himself to his domicile and took a sweat.—Brooklyn Eagle.

"On the war path" is the way the Opera House Clothing Co. of Springfield puts it. They are offering their immense stock of men's and boy's Summer clothing at a wonderful reduction in prices, for instance, $10 and $12 suits at $6 and $7, $15 suits at $8, $18 at $10, &c., and they never advertise anything but facts.

"Brandy, brandy, bane of life,
Spring of torment, source of strife,
If I could half thy vices tell,
The wise would wish you safe in h—ll."

Such is the refrain from the lips of the poor deceased toper, who would fly from his enemy if possible. Recollect it is a diseased liver that craves relief. Instead of brandy or any other stimulant, use Simmons Liver Regulator, and it will afford relief.

FINE JOB PRINTING AT THE JOURNAL OFFICE.

Our Presidents in Rhyme.

First stands the lofty Washington,
That nobly great, immortal one;
The elder Adams next we see,
And Jefferson comes number three;
The fourth is Madison, you know,
The fifth one on the list, Monroe;
The sixth an Adams comes again,
And Jackson seventh in the train;
Van Buren eighth upon the line,
And Harrison counts number nine;
The tenth is Tyler in his turn,
And Polk eleventh, as we learn;
The twelfth is Taylor that appears,
The thirteenth, Fillmore, fills his years;
Then Pierce comes fourteenth into view;
Buchanan is the fifteenth due.
Now Lincoln comes, two terms to fill
Obedient to the people's will.
Then Johnson, Grant and Hayes in turn,
A country's favor fairly earn.
Next Garfield takes the reins of power,
And safely holds them till this hour.

A STORY WITH A MORAL.

It was not long ago that a gentleman said to me—he was in wine—"Johnny, I will take your best bouquet—that big one on a tray, fit to be the bridal bed of Eve—if you will carry it to this address."

"All right, boss," was my response, as I took his $10 bill, and observed a rather devilish light in his eye, while he wrote a name on a card. It was a beam of the light that shone in the eye of Cain as the discriminating flame of heaven shot past his offering and blazed on Abel's altar. However, I wasn't particular about what was going on in his mind, and he slipped the card in the bouquet, and I started off to deliver it. Stopping close by to change my note and eat a bit of lunch, a good many people gathered near the great prize bouquet and began to talk about it and to smell it, and so, whether some jealous rival stole that card, or whether I had dropped it on the street, the card was missing when I took up the salver of flowers again.

I hastened back to the place where I had met the gentleman. He had gone away in a carriage. I told my trouble to the hotel clerk, the genial Gillis, and he said, "Pshaw! take it to his wife. He is no sporting man."

Now, that gentleman I knew, by accident of passing his house, and I had often admired the inflexible, the solitary, the lofty and self-reliant quality in him. He was kind to his inferiors, manly to his equals, haughty to his superiors. About once or twice a year he showed liquor in his eyes, as if Cain had bred on Abel's stock, and a little liquor brought out the consanguinity. I said to myself: "These flowers will wither for which I have been paid. I believe he meant to send them to his wife, and I will take them."

I rang the door-bell of his house and asked for the lady. Shown into the parlor I saw my buyer's picture over the mantel. The house was not expensively furnished, but looked like the abode of perseverance in some moderately compensating profession, and slow but gaining conquest on half fortune. A lady entered the parlor and beheld the flowers. She turned to me and said:

"Who are these for?"

"For you, madam."

Her face flushed. "For me? Who has dared send flowers to me?"

I saw I was in for it somewhere, and there was no safety but in consistent lying.

"Your husband sent them, Mrs.——." I had heard his name, and felt that this was his wife.

Her voice faltered. "My husband? How came he to send me flowers? Have you not made a mistake?"

"No, madam. He has never bought flowers from me before. He is not a customer of gallantry. There is no mistake about it."

She seemed all fluttered, like a widow told that her husband had returned to life. Looking now at the flowers, again at his portrait, her eyes dilated, her temples flushed. She walked to me like a woman of authority and under high mental excitement. Looking into my eyes she said:

"What did my husband say?"

He said, madam, "I have not made a present to my dear wife for years. Business cares have come between us. Take her these flowers, that their blossoms may dispel the Winter from our hearts and make us young again."

She turned to the bouquet and rained her tears upon it. An orange bud she took, all blinded so, and hid it in her bosom. She sank upon her knees, and laid her head among the flowers to let their coolness refresh her parched, neglected heart, and sobbed the joy of love and confidence again. I stole away like a citizen of the world.

As I went up the street and stopped at the same hotel, the husband was there.

"Johnny, did you deliver the bouquet?" said he.

"Yes, I took it to your wife."

"To my wife?"

"Yes, boss, you are too good a man to wander as you wished to go. Go home. The ice is broken. Your wife is full of gratitude. Saved by a mistake, embrace the blessed opening made for both of you; plant those rich blossoms on the grave of estrangement, and in the words of the great, good book, 'cling to the wife of your youth.'"

He staggered, looked as though he ought to knock me down, and then rushed from the place.

Next day I met her upon his arm.

"Johnny," he said, "bring her as big a bouquet every week, and save one scarlet rose for me."—New York Tribune.

TAKE
SIMMONS
Liver Regulator!

ASK the recovered dyspeptics, bilious sufferers, victims of fever and ague, the mercurial diseased patient how they recovered their health, cheerful spirits and good appetite; they will tell you by taking Simmons Liver Regulator.

THE CHEAPEST, PUREST AND BEST FAMILY MEDICINE IN THE WORLD for DYSPEPSIA, CONSTIPATION, Jaundice, Bilious Attacks, SICK HEADACHE, Colic, Depression of Spirits, SOUR STOMACH, Heart Burn, &c., &c.

This unrivaled Southern remedy is warranted not to contain a single particle of Mercury, or any injurious mineral substance, but is

PURELY VEGETABLE,

containing those Southern roots and herbs, which an All-Wise Providence has placed in countries where Liver Diseases mostly prevail. It will cure all diseases caused by derangement of the Liver and Bowels.

The SYMPTOMS of Liver Complaint are a bitter or bad taste in the mouth; pain in the back, sides or joints, often mistaken for Rheumatism; SOUR STOMACH; loss of appetite; bowels alternately costive and lax; headache; loss of memory, with a painful sensation of having failed to do something which ought to have been done; debility; low spirits, a thick yellow appearance of the skin and eyes, a dry cough often mistaken for Consumption. Sometimes many of the symptoms attend the disease, at other times very few; but the LIVER, the largest organ in the body, is generally the seat of the disease, and if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and DEATH will ensue.

"I can recommend as an efficacious remedy for disease of the Liver, Heartburn and Dyspepsia, Simmons Liver Regulator.
LEWIS G. WUNDER, Philadelphia."

"We have tested its virtues personally, and know that for Dyspepsia, Biliousness and Throbbing Headache, it is the best medicine the world ever saw. We have tried forty other remedies before Simmons Liver Regulator, but none of them gave us more than temporary relief; but the Regulator not only relieved but cured us."—*Ed. BACK ACHE

POSITIVELY CURED BY

BENSON'S CAPCINE POROUS PLASTERS.

Reasons Why they are Preferred to All Other Porous Plasters or External Remedies:

FIRST.

Because they possess all the merit of the strengthening porous plaster, and contain in addition thereto the newly discovered powerful and active vegetable combination which acts with increased rubefacient, stimulating, sedative and counter irritant effects.

SECOND.

Because they are a genuine pharmaceutical preparation, and so recognized by the profession.

THIRD.

Because they are the only plasters that relieve pain ot once.

FOURTH.

Because they will positively cure diseases which other remedies will not even relieve.

FIFTH

Because over 5000 physicians and druggists have voluntarily testified that they are superior to all other plasters or medicines for external use.

SIXTH.

Because the manufacturers haue received the only medals ever given for porous plasters.

The Stork's Jeremiade.

"One-legged stork, thou standest sad and lonely;
A tear, methinks, I notice in thine eye.
Oh, tell to me, yes, whisper to me only,
What is the sorrow which I think I spy?"

And lo, from out the meshes of the tidy
There came a feeble, mournful sort of squeak;
And while, amazed, I opened my eyes wide, he Opened his mouth, and thus began to speak:

"I am so very tired of being artistic;
My life is one long, patient, painful ache;
I am so weary of these weird and mystic
Positions which they force my form to take.

"They've worked me in all kinds and sorts of stitches,
High art and button-hole, outline and cross stitch,
Standing around promiscuously in ditches,
And looking like a buzzard or an ostrich.

"They've worked me frequently on Java canvas,
On momie-cloth, on flannels thin and thick;
In fact, in every single way they can fuss,
I have appeared, until I'm really sick.

"In crewels, in silk, in worsted, and in cotton,
Now black, now white, now grave, now madly gay,
They've worked me, and one wrong is unforgotten,
They've done me most and worst in applique.

"Sometimes they plant me 'mid some rushes speary,
In attitudes no well-bred stork would take,
Holding one leg up, till I get so weary
I sometimes think my poor strained back will break.

"They've worked me standing, running, sleeping, flying;
Sometimes I'm gazing at a crewel sun;
They've worked me every way, I think, but dying,
And oh, I wish they'd do that, and be done!

"I could forgive them this bitter wronging,
If they would grant one favor, which I beg,
Would gratify but once my soul's deep longing,
Just to put down my cramped and unused leg.

"Know you of any one with sorrows greater?
A creature with a life that's more forlorn?
Hounded forever by the Decorator;
I wish, I wish, I never had been born!"

A silence fell. I gazed; he had subsided;
I listened vainly. All was dumb and still
Upon the tidy, where the stork resided,
With upheld leg, and red and open bill.

RECOMPENSE.

"A letter from George," exclaimed sister Kate, coming in from the post office and holding up for our inspection a large yellow envelope. "And addressed to mother; isn't it funny?"

"To me!" exclaimed mother, in turn, laying down the blue sock she was mending, and smoothing her apron as though she were going to take the baby. "Dear me!"

"Why, how queer!" said Hattie, dropping her book and looking at Kate wonderingly. "George hasn't written to any of us in an age, and never to ma. What secret's brewing now, I wonder?"

"Maybe he and Milly are coming home on a visit," said I.

"Not so early in the spring as this," returned Hattie, sagely; "Milly and house-cleaning can't be separated."

At this moment mother, who had succeeded in tearing off the envelope with eager, trembling fingers, and had commenced reading the letter, suddenly twisted her chair around so as to turn her face from us, cleared her throat, and wiped her eyes on a corner of her gingham apron.

"Anything the matter, mother?" questioned Kate, anxiously, while Hat and I sat in wondering silence.

There was no answer for a moment, then, turning toward us, she held out the letter, saying, "Read it aloud, Kate; Milly is taken very ill with typhoid fever, and George has written for me to come to them. Dear child, I wish it was so I could go."

"Go!" echoed Kate, decisively, "of course you'll go, and take one of us girls along to help nurse, too."

"But the work, my dear. How will you manage?"

"Some way," said Kate. "Let's see; the express goes at half-past six, and it's half-past five now—just an hour. Go and get ready, mother, and Cad and I'll pack your valise."

"But your father—"

"We'll take care of him, never fear, and he'll be home before you go. Hat, you're not fit for much at home except to run errands and keep awake nights, and you can do that there. Get ready as quickly as possible, and help mother; she's so excited she'll be sure to get her dress on hind side before, and forget to lace up her shoes."

My energetic sister had by this time gathered together their clothes, and, bringing the valise from the wardrobe, was packing them into it in a manner which foretold their coming out in a mass of wrinkles; I, meantime, looking helplessly on. By dint of her earnest efforts they were ready in season; and when father came home from his work, he found us hailing a street-car to take them to the depot.

"Now, what's to be done first?" inquired Kate, after we had seen them off, and had reentered the house with something of a realizing sense of the responsibility we had undertaken weighting our minds.

"There's supper to get, of course, and—Nellie can wash the dishes. That's all, isn't it?"

"Mother said something about baking tomorrow," I suggested, with a vague idea that a certain preparation was generally made concerning the bread the evening before its manufacture.

"To-morrow? Well, let to-morrow take care of itself," so promptly that I was at once silenced. "Let's see what's for supper; light bread, cookies, float and cold beef. Very good. The clouds disperse, and the sky is most serene and fair. Set the table, Cad, while I make the tea."

And now, while I am doing that, if the reader will take a little retrospective glance over our lives up to this point, she will no doubt the better understand why we were all so ignorant of household affairs. There was a large family of us—ten children in all: John, master workman in one of the machine shops in the flourishing manufacturing town of which we were resident; Milly, the married sister, and a general favorite; Kate and myself, twins, but totally unlike, both in looks and disposition; Hattie, a studious girl of sixteen; Ross, a boisterous school-boy of fourteen; Nellie, a delicate, petted child of eleven; and three little boys in a row, aged respectively nine, seven and four, whom we call Tip, Earle and Benny. And mother did the work for us all. I don't know how she managed it, but she did. Milly was the only one who had taken to housework, and mother was one of those domestic burden-bearers who never consider their burden so heavy but that they can add another trifle.

Father had never been fortunate, pecuniarily; and, being anxious to give all their children a good education, the labor of saving for this end was added to their other toil. And then, like many another good and unselfish, but unwise, mother, she allowed us our own way, and spoiled us through indulgence; and, as we had often heard her say she would rather do a thing herself than take the trouble to teach us how, we felt as if we were actually conferring a favor upon her by letting things alone.

To be sure we could sweep, dust, wash dishes, and make beds, and were familiar with some of the minor details of cookery; but to be able to keep the domestic machinery well oiled and in constant motion was to us like trying to converse in an unknown tongue. And so now, without any adequate knowledge of work and its responsibilities, we found ourselves with a mountain of difficulties to surmount, and a pretty mess we made of it for a few days, too.

It was not at all difficult to get through supper, for, thanks to mother's provident hands, there was plenty prepared for that meal; but when, next morning, we found the bread was out, the cookies all gone, and not a stray pie for dinner, our troubles began—and they broadened and deepened with every moment, as we became painfully aware that making bread and pastry was a branch of our education which had been terribly neglected; and when, about ten o'clock, father, in blissful ignorance of the novices in charge at home, sent up a sirloin roast and the information that a stranger would dine with us, and fifteen minutes later the washer-woman brought in the clothes for us to iron, I was ready to melt into tears, and Kate was so cross it was dangerous to speak to her.

O, that weary, weary day! But only the beginning of many similar ones that followed it. How we longed for mother's skillful hands to straighten out the tangled threads our awkward fingers had managed to produce. There was something to be done from early morn till late at night; so that no sooner did we fancy ourselves free for half an hour than some duty undone would stare us in the face, or the children would come in with clamoring tongues and empty stomachs, and in a few days I became addicted to chronic fretfulness, while Kate was transformed into a veritable scold. John scowled over the miserable meals, Ross teased us in every vulnerable point, but poor, patient father pitied our often infirmities, and ate what was set before him for conscience's sake.

It went on in this way for about a fortnight, when, after a very trying day, we took our books and sat down for a quiet evening. But, alas for our hopes! Only ten minutes of peace, and then an ominous "ahem" from father caused us to look up.

"Do you know, girls," he inquired, "whether mother mended my pants before she went away? I should like them to put on in the morning. She generally did her mending every week, I believe."

"There!" burst out Kate, shutting her book with a bang, while I, after one desponding glance at the fascinating pages of "David Copperfield," went to examine the mending basket.

It was full to the brim; shirts, socks, little gingham coats with the pockets torn down, and buttons pulled half off, with shreds of cloth hanging to them; father's pants, and Nellie's school dress with a great rent clear across the front. With a doleful sigh I lifted the basket, and without a word we sat down to the unwelcome task.

Nine, ten o'clock came and went, and the basket was not half emptied of its contents. Father, John, Ross and Nellie gaped and stretched, and one by one followed the children off to bed. Eleven, and still we sat, silent and grim as ghosts, solemnly stitching away at the endless rents.

"Cad," said Kate, at last, jerking the words out as if she hated them, "how do you like it?"

"Like what?" I asked in astonishment.

"This life of slavery. This humdrum, everlasting stick-to-it, unsatisfactory existence. With not a speck of spice in the way of variety about it. Just over and over, round and round, until we seek our rest 'low in the ground.'"

"Oh, Kate!" I exclaimed, almost shocked, "not so bad as that; not nearly so bad as that."

"Yes, worse than that with many, very many, Cad Rouncewell. My plain opinion, very plainly expressed, is that women are fools."

"Why, Kate!"

"Don't 'why, Kate' me. Just look at the mending basket. It has been filled and emptied year after year; filled by our carelessness and emptied by our mother's slavish toil, and we, great, healthy, overgrown girls, sat calmly by and saw her do it. And she, weak, unselfish woman that she is, hadn't snap enough about her to rap us over the head for our ugliness."

I opened my mouth to say something, but she made a dab at me with her needle, and I desisted.

"Don't expostulate!" she exclaimed, "I hate it. Look at yourself as you are, and as you have been ever since you were born, a little, useless bit of furniture, and see if you don't look ugly. I have been taking just such a view of myself ever since we've found ourselves trying to fill mother's place, and found we couldn't, and I've got so full of indignation at myself for being so blind, and at mother for being so foolish, that I shall burst if I don't out with it."

"But we can't help it now, Kate," I ventured to remonstrate.

"No, of course we can't, you goose. The past isn't ours, but the present is, and the future may be. That's what I'm coming at, exactly. We must not let mother and father die, yet awhile."

"Die!" I exclaimed, shocked beyond expression.

"Yes, Caddy, I didn't notice it any more than you have, until the past two weeks; but it seems to me now, that I could count every furrow in father's careworn brow, and every thread of mother's whitening hair. They are old beyond their years, Caddy. They have been worked to death, and because they loved us so well as to bear it all patiently, we never saw it."

Kate's voice was all of a tremble, and I burst into tears.

"Mother is an intellectual woman," she went on in a moment, "with a mind capable of rare development. But how much time do you suppose she has had for reading and reflection beyond the wants and necessities of her large family? And don't you know, Cad, how often we have excused ourselves from reading aloud to her, letting her sit digging away into this very basket, solitary and alone, through the long evening hours? I fairly hate myself when I think of it."

I did, too, by this time, and I said so.

"But, Katie," I added, "isn't there a bright side to it somewhere?"

"We can make one," she answered, decisively. "I have been thinking of that; how would it do to work and get the house-cleaning all done before she gets home? It will be vacation next week, and Ross and Nellie will be here to help us."

To this plan I readily assented, and then we went to bed. When we arose next morning it was with very different views of life and its stern realities from what we had ever cherished before. But we were determined to enter into the conflict armed with a strength higher than our own, and through that to conquer. And we did. Two weeks more, and the house wore a new aspect from garret to cellar; everything was as fresh and clean as could be, and well repaid we felt for all our toil. One spot in the house was our especial attraction, and that was mother's and father's room; hitherto a bare, sparsely furnished apartment, with the same stamp of self-denial upon it there had always been upon everything that was individually their own; but now the most cheery, tastefully arranged of any room in the house. We girls had planned the renovation, and John—dear, good, honest fellow—had lovingly paid the bills. And now, with all in readiness for her coming, with a well-cooked meal upon the table, with an air of thrift and neatness upon everything, which gave us the utmost satisfaction, we looked for our mother home. But when she came—when we saw the dear face looking eagerly out of the hack window to catch a glimpse of home and its treasured inmates—the revulsion of feeling was too much for us, and we ran behind the door to hide our tears. Such a foolish thing, but we did not stay there long. She called us as she came in, and we came out of our hiding place all tear-stained as we were and greeted her. And such a time as we had taking her over the house and witnessing her delight and surprise, mingled with little soft-hearted rebukes for working so hard while she was gone! But when she came upon her own room, and her eyes fell upon the bright new carpet, the bed with its snowy spread and ruffled pillows, the easy-chair and dressing-table with all its little appointments, it was really refreshing to hear her exclaim over the extravagance we had been guilty of, and all for the sake of a woman who was fast growing old. But oh, when we told her we had done it all that she might dwell in perpetual youth; when we whispered in her ear the lesson we had learned by putting ourselves in her place; when we told her what we proposed to do in the future, that she might live, not as a slave, but as a queen among her children, how her heart melted into tears, and with what manifest love she clung to us!

And as the years still come and go we are reaping a blessed recompense! The rich reward of our struggle with idleness and self-indulgence we see before us in the faces of our loved and loving parents, where sits a sweet content and beams a look of youth once more. They share with us our pleasures and our entertainments; we share with them the otherwise solitary hours, and in the interchange of thought and feeling find wisdom we could have gained from no other source. Rejoicing in the knowledge that we are smoothing for them the rugged pathway of mortality, we feel our recompense to be incorruptible, being assured that it is as gold laid up in the treasure-house of God, and bringing forth an hundred-fold.

THE GIGANTIC CRIME OF CRIMES.

Some time ago the Convocation of the province of Canterbury, England, called for evidence—from clergymen, recorders, governors and chaplains of prisons, of lunatic asylums, governors of workhouses and superintendents of police—as to the results of the use of liquor. The evidence returned is one of complexion. "I can trace," said one clergyman, "nearly every case of family destitution to intemperance." Another says, "There would be no real poverty here, except from some illness, if there were no drunkenness." The governors of workhouses replied as follows, following the exact order in which they are printed: "Twelve years' experience shows that two-thirds of the inmates of this house are victims of intemperance." "Eighty per cent may be given as the proportion of paupers who are the victims of intemperance." "I should say that three-fourths of the inmates of this house have been victims of intemperance." "Without hesitation, I should say that seventy or eighty per cent of the paupers come to that state through drink." And so it goes on, "eighty per cent," "eighty out of one hundred," "three-fourths," in terms that very soon range themselves into a grim tautology. One master of a workhouse says, "I have been relieving officer eleven years, and during that time I never knew a teetotaler applying for parish relief."

What is needed in the kitchen, have in the kitchen, so far as possible. If there is no place for these things, make a place. So of the dining-room. Have your tablecloths and napkins there, and not up stairs in a bureau drawer. In brief, put the requirements of an office in the office, and, as I said of the kitchen, if you have no place for them make a place. A small cupboard may be hung against a wall, which will prove a great convenience. Instead of talking and wishing for conveniences, have them. In nine cases out of ten, if you want a thing in downright earnest, you'll get it. Only never ask to have an extension to the back part of the house when you have front rooms that you don't use! American women have a mania for extensive houses, until they are worn out in their efforts to take care of them.

There is a captive bear at the Arkansas Hot Springs which finds occasional solace in a bottle of beer proffered by some good-natured person. A recent visitor, who had been much amused at seeing Bruin draw the cork and drink from the bottle with evident satisfaction, determined to treat as often as the bear desired, taking a glass himself for every bottle the captive put under his belt. At the end of two hours the man had succumbed to nineteen glasses and was borne away on a shutter, while the bear strolled back and forth at the end of his chain with a serene and benevolent expression upon his countenance.

According to a funny writer the non-setting hen reasons like this: The more eggs and the better, the more chickens; the more chickens the more hens; the more hens, the more competitors; the more competitors, the cheaper will eggs become; the cheaper eggs become, the lower my position in the social scale. "No, I won't! So there's an end on't."

"Mr. ——, you seem to be evolving that translation from your inner consciousness." "Well, Professor, I read in my devotions last night that 'by faith Enoch was translated,' and I thought I would try it on Horace."—College Journal.

Go Slow.

When you a pair of bright eyes meet,
That make your heart in rapture beat;
When one voice seems to you more sweet
Than any other voice you know,
Go slow, my friend, go slow;
For brightest eyes have oft betrayed,
And sweet voice of youth and maid
The very falsest things have said,
And thereby wrought a deal of woe;
Go slow, my friend, go slow.

When you to greed for money yield,
And long the mighty pow'r to wield
That's always found in golden field,
With senseless pomp and pride and show,
Go slow, my friend, go slow;
For thousands, tempted by the glare
Of wealth, have fallen in the snare
Set for the thief. And now despair,
Regret and shame have brought them low;
Go slow, my friend, go slow.

The good old earth is never wrong;
Each of her works takes just so long;
Months pass before a happy throng
Of daisies in the meadow grow:
Go slow, my friend, go slow.
And spring gives life to summer's flowers,
And summer's sun and summer's showers
Prepare the fruit for autumn's bowers,
And autumn frost brings winter snow;
Go slow, my friend, go slow.

HANDY HINTS FOR HOUSEKEEPERS.

A poultice of fresh tea-leaves moistened with water, will cure a sty on the eyelid.

For earache, dissolve asafetida in water; warm a few drops and drop in the ear, then cork the ear with wool.

The true physiological way of treating burns or scalds is to at once exclude the air, with cotton batting, flour, scraped potato, or anything that is handiest.

Use fresh water. Water that has stood in an open dish over night should not be used for cooking or drinking purposes, as it will absorb many foul gases.

Mix a little carbonate of soda with the water in which flowers are immersed, and it will preserve them for a fortnight. Common saltpeter is also a very good preservative.

Take a new flower pot, wash it clean, wrap in a wet cloth and set over butter, will keep it as hard as if on ice. Milk if put into an earthen, or even a tin one, will keep sweet for a long time, if well wrapped in a wet cloth.

Common soda is excellent for scouring tin, as it will not scratch the tin and will make it look like new. Apply with a piece of moistened newspaper and polish with a dry piece. Wood ashes are a good substitute.

To cure bunions, use pulverized saltpeter and sweet oil. Obtain at a druggist's five or six cents' worth of saltpeter; put into a bottle with sufficient olive oil to dissolve it, shake it up well, and rub the inflamed joints night and morning, and more frequently if painful.

Flies may be successfully disposed of without the aid of poison. Take half a teaspoonful of black pepper in powder, one teaspoonful of brown sugar, and one teaspoonful of cream. Mix well together and place them in a room where the flies are troublesome and they will soon disappear.

Red ants may be banished from a pantry or store-room by strewing the shelves with small quantities of cloves, either whole or ground. We use the former, as not being so likely to get into food placed upon the shelves. The cloves should be renewed occasionally, as after a time they lose their strength and efficiency.

The following drink for relieving sickness of the stomach is said to be very palatable and agreeable: Beat up one egg very well, say for 20 minutes, then add fresh milk one pint, sugar to make it palatable; boil and let cool; drink when cool. If it becomes curd and whey it is useless.

According to La France Medicale, borax has been employed with advantage in cases of hoarseness and aphonia occurring suddenly from the action of cold. The remedy is recommended to singers and orators whose voices suddenly become lost, but which by these means can be recovered instantly. A little piece of borax the size of a pea is to be slowly dissolved in the mouth ten minutes before singing or speaking. The remedy provokes an abundant secretion of saliva, which moistens the mouth and throat. This local action of the borax should be aided by an equal dose of nitrate of potassium taken in warm solution before going to bed.

A thoroughly qualified medical man has recently, in the course of his practice, come upon what he believes and uses as a specific remedy for small pox. The remedy is the bi-tartrate of potash, the common cream of tartar of the drug store; two ounces dissolved in boiling water, with the juice of a lemon and sugar added. Let the patient drink as much as he likes, but no less than a wineglassful every hour. In some of his cases this medicine has exhibited the most remarkable curative effects. It will purge, but as it is perfectly harmless this will not matter, and it does not appear to be the cause of cure, the remedy acting specifically on the virus, the pustules collapsing, leaving no pits, and a perfect cure following in a short time.

All kinds of burns, scalds and sunburn, are almost immediately relieved by the application of a solution of soda to the burnt surface. It must be remembered that dry soda will not do unless it is surrounded by a cloth moist enough to dissolve it. This method of sprinkling it on and covering it with a moist cloth is often the very best. But it is sufficient to wash the wound repeatedly with a strong solution. It would be well to keep a bottle of it constantly on hand, made so strong that more or less settles to the bottom. This is what is called saturated solution, and really such a solution as this is formed when dry soda is sprinkled on and covered with a cloth. It is thought by some that the pain of a burn is caused by the hardening of the albumen, and the soda relieves the pressure. Others think that the burn generates an acrid acid, which the soda neutralizes.

Papa: "That picture shows the story of Prometheus and the vulture that fed on his liver. Every day the vulture devoured it, and every night it grew for him to eat again." Sympathetic child: "Poor old vulture! How sick he must have been of liver every day!" Rome (N. Y.) Sentinel.

"Oh, give me anything made of beans," exclaimed a Boston man taken sick in the West, when asked what he would have to eat. They obeyed his request and gave him castor oil.

"Procrastination is the thief of a good time," was the lament of the small boy who got up too late to take the excursion train.

A real christian is a man who prays on Sunday and then helps the Lord to answer his prayers all the rest of the week.

The poor are only those who feel poor, and poverty consists in feeling poor.

NOTE OF WARNING.

"Think not, Americans, our country's destiny is secure; that naught can mar the hereafter. In despite of all that I have pictured, and I have but touched the inspiring theme, we know enough, if not to fear, at least to guard. The billow is most beautiful when about to break. It is the ripe fruit that falls! The sun, reaching the zenith, descends. Nations, like men, are mortal. The track of time is strewed with the wrecks of empires. It is not extent of dominion, nor population, invincibility in arms, unbounded wealth, prosperity and peace that will give stability to a government or preserve liberty to the people. Aye! these may be the seeds from which may grow our downfall. No martial hosts may conquer us, but there are other foes, more subtle, insidious and fatal. We have swiftly matured, we have reached pre-eminence, while our history has just rounded a century. We are entering a luxurious age—the age when enervation, subserviency to wealth and power, beget antagonistic classes and precede corruption, degeneracy and decay. The stern patriot sees on every side subjects for the severest censure. It is not wise to disregard the lessons that earth and the past teach. Truth and justice, obedience to authority, reverence for law, purity of the ballot, enlightened discussion, the punishment of corruptionists, a jealous watchfulness of the encroachments of power, exalted statesmanship, and a firm reliance on God, these are the fortifications that will render our republic impregnable. With these she may light with her glory a thousand years! Abandon them, and she will survive but a few generations! May the republic that was saved from dismemberment by the valor be perpetuated by the virtues of the people!"—Daniel Dougherty.

A SPIDER STORY.

If you anchor a pole in a body of water and put a spider upon it, he will exhibit marvelous intelligence by his plans to escape. At first he will spin a web several inches long and hang to one end while he allows the other to float off in the wind, in the hope that it will strike some object. Of course this plan proves a failure, but the spider is not discouraged. He waits until the wind changes, and then sends another silken bridge floating off in another direction. Another failure is followed by several other similar attempts until all the points of the compass have been tried. But neither the resources nor the reasoning powers of the spider are exhausted. He climbs to the top of the pole and goes to work to construct a silken balloon. He has no hot air with which to inflate it, but he has the power to make it buoyant. When he gets his balloon finished he does not go off upon the mere supposition that it will carry him, as men often do, but he fastens it to a guy rope, the other end of which he attaches to the isl- and pole upon which he is prisoner. He then gets into his aerial vehicle, while it is made fast, and tests it to see whether its dimensions are capable of the work of bearing him away. He often finds that he has made it too small, in which case he hauls it down, takes it all apart, and constructs it on a larger and better plan. A spider has been seen to make three different balloons before he became satisfied with his experiment. Then he will get in, snap the guy rope, and sail away to land as gracefully and as supremely independent of his surroundings as could well be imagined.

SUMMER TREATMENT OF CALLA LILIES.—The common practice is to remove the pots to a shed or any place where they will be dry, and lay them upon the side, where they may remain until time for repotting in the autumn. Of course the roots become dry. Another plan is to remove the plants from the pots to the garden, where they will remain in a half dormant condition until autumn. No water must be given and no culture is required. In the autumn repot in a good, rich soil, and give plenty of water, but don't water too freely until signs of growth. By the latter plan flowers are secured earlier in the winter.—Vick's Floral Guide.

No prettier compliment can be given than that which comes from the warm heart and quick wit of the true Hibernian. Mike was laying pavement brick in the hot sun, and the lady of the house mixed up a nice, cool drink and carried it out to quench his thirst. After a long-drawn "swig," he wiped his mouth on his sleeve and said: "Ye'll be in heaven sivin years before the divil'll find it out."—New Haven Register.

When a sanctimonious clergyman said to one of his humblest parishioners, who was surrounded by little ones enough to make a rainy Sunday congregation, "My friend, He who sends mouths sends also food," the poor man replied, "That may be, but the trouble is that he sends the mouths to one family and the food to another."

Squire's Daughter: "What is this we hear about your father and mother quarrelling so, Peggy?" Peggy: "They've each had a little money left 'em, miss, and I think feyther he wants the lot. Anyways, they can't agree nohow whether her money is his'n, or his hern, or his'n and hers hern."

Women are sometimes won by valor, sometimes by diplomacy, other times by money, often by style, a few by affection, and some by sympathy, and a Hartford girl was won by a banana peel. She heeled one, grasped at space, flopped into a bachelor's arms, and now they are engaged.

The Journal.

SATURDAY, JULY 16, 1881.

Now is the time for young men, or old, to "Go West." The railroads are cutting passenger rates, and tickets for Chicago can be bought at Boston for $13 or $14.

THE Legislative committee on the revision of the statutes adjourned sine die on Wednesday, after fixing the pay of its members at $5 per day. The committee has done up its work with a good degree of promptness, and has set a good example in this respect for the Legislature, when it meets in extra session to act upon the committee's work.

DR. TANNER must take a back seat on the fasting business, his fast of 40 days having been beaten by John H. Griscom, who on Tuesday completed a fast of 45 days at Chicago. During this time Griscom lost 49¾ pounds, drank 32 ounces of water a day, and says he suffered no pain, and was no hungrier at the end of the time than if he had fasted but a day or two. His manner bore out this assertion, and he evidently endured the trial much better than Tanner. Griscom, like Tanner, thinks many ailments may be cured by fasting, and says there is much to be learned on this point. It will be a long time before people in general will take up lengthy fasting as a remedial agent, we imagine. There are not many stomachs like Tanner's and Griscom's.

A HOT WAVE from the West is gradually working its way toward the Atlantic coast, and unless it gets demoralized on the way we may expect some scorching weather before many days. There were 30 cases of sunstroke at Cincinnati Monday, nearly 20 of them being fatal. On Wednesday, there were 96 burials in the city, more than half of them the result of the heat, and the mortality has never been exceeded save in the cholera season in 1866. A boiling thermometer and numerous sunstrokes are also reported in other localities. We can safely count on some melting heat during the next few weeks, to balance the cool weather we have been having, and people will do well to make preparation for it and look carefully after their diet, if they would avoid sudden sickness.

EIGHT HUNDRED more Mormon converts arrived at New York last week from Europe, bound for the "Promised Land" in Utah. The work of gathering up victims is pushed steadily forward among the poor and ignorant peasants of the Old World by numerous missionaries, and the steady growth and spread of the Mormon power is but little understood and not at all appreciated, by the people of this country. Utah is practically in their hands; they are masters in Arizona, Idaho and Wyoming, and are rapidly occupying Montana and Washington territories, while they are a growing power in Nevada and Colorado. They intend to permeate the whole country with their pernicious doctrines, and to overthrow the social conditions based on Christianity, as well as our free institutions, and upon the ruins establish the Mormon hierarchy in supreme control. This is undoubtedly their ultimate aim, and they will accomplish it in time, unless the government handles the evil differently in the future from what it has done in the past.

MATTERS seem to be culminating at Albany. The Administration Republicans held a caucus last week Friday, 65 members being present, making a majority of the Republicans. Mr. Depew withdrew his name, for the purpose of promoting harmony and ending the long struggle, and E. G. Lapham and Warner Miller, both members-elect of the 47th Congress, were nominated for Senators. The Conkling men were disconcerted by this movement, not anticipating Depew's retirement, and they made an appeal for another caucus, on the ground that it would not be safe to elect two Congressmen to the Senate now, as, in the event of an extra session being called, their places in the House could not be filled at once, and the party would lose two votes. Their appeal was declined, however, and on Thursday the Conkling men voted with the Democrats in favor of adjourning sine die to-day, the vote standing 62 to 61. Their vote has begun to break, Warner Miller coming within six votes of an election Thursday, and it is believed that Miller and Lapham will be elected by to-day. Miller is an Administration Republican and Lapham a Conkling man. Both are respectable men of no particular note, and are a pitiable showing for a State which might be represented by Wheeler, Cornell, Evarts, Fish, Curtis, or any two of a dozen other men of recognized ability and reputation.

Denis Kearney prefaced the resolutions on the Sand Lots, condemning the assault upon the President, in a speech in which he mingled some sense with his customary tirade. He said: "Those who cannot give life must not take it away. The oath of the perjurer and the dagger of the assassin are twin brothers and difficult to escape. A barrier must be set up against both if we are to continue a republic. The national holiday to-morrow will be turned into a day of mourning. It ought to be. The common people all over the country will feel deeply the blow. It is aimed at their liberties."

Portions of Iowa were visited by very heavy rain storms last Saturday, Sunday and Monday, which flooded the country, washed away buildings, bridges, and miles of railroad embankments, and caused an immense amount of damage. In Marshall county alone the loss is estimated at $375,000. Several lives were also lost. It is estimated that in some places 10 inches of rain fell in six hours.

Some excessively curious women in Winfield, Kan., held a lamp so near a new-born baby's face to discover the color of its eyes that the little one's sight was destroyed.

THE PRESIDENT.

The condition of President Garfield is now such as to justify the strongest hope that he has passed the gravest dangers, and will recover. It has been a week of pain and occasional despondency for the sufferer, but his splendid powers of endurance, his grand courage and his strong will power, with the best of nursing and medical attendance, and, back of all, the prayers of the whole country for his recovery—all these have told in the right direction, and though his condition is yet critical, it is very hopeful. The danger of secondary hemorrhage seems to have been passed, and every day that now passes lessens the risk of blood poisoning. Circumscribed peritonitis has existed since the second day. On Monday the President's temperature went up to 102.8, and it was feared that the inflammation was spreading. But the temperature gradually receded, and on Wednesday fell to the normal point for the first time. It is now believed that Monday was a turning point, and that the inflammation will now gradually subside. The President is of course very weak, but he takes and assimilates nourishment, the wound is suppurating naturally, and the physicians do not now hesitate to say that he will probably recover. Said Dr. Hammond of New York Wednesday, "I expect the President to recover, and I find renewed confidence in every hour."

Notes.

Vice President Arthur returned home to New York Wednesday.

The assassin's bullet will go a long way toward assuring President Garfield a second term, if he recovers.

Thursday was observed in Kentucky and Arkansas as a day of fasting and prayer for the President's recovery.

"We would be glad to furnish a coffin for the assassin Guiteau," writes a Crawfordsville (Ind.) firm to Dist. Atty. Corkhill.

Guiteau was at one time a member of the Bible class in Beecher's church, and borrowed $7 from the teacher, never returning it.

The terrible strain is wearing upon Mrs. Garfield, but she bears up wonderfully well, like the true woman she is, though it is feared she may break down.

Somebody in St. Louis wrote Secretary Blaine that he had vowed to kill Guiteau himself, for the suffering he had caused President Garfield, "and don't you forget it."

After numerous experiments, a successful refrigerating apparatus is now at work in the White House, which supplies the President's room with 18,000 cubic feet of pure dry air per hour, at a temperature of about 54.

Dr. Susan A. Edson, a homœopathic physician of large experience, is the President's night nurse. She served a great deal in hospitals during the war, is familiar with gunshot wounds, and attended Mrs. Garfield through her illness.

The subscriptions to the fund for Mrs. Garfield amount to $145,000, more than half of which has been paid in. Should the President recover, it is doubtful whether he would accept the money, with the obligation to the donors which would be thereby incurred.

Ex-Senator Conkling was in Washington Thursday on business, and called at the White House, leaving his card for Mrs. Garfield, with a friendly message of hope. He was one of the last to express his sympathy after the assassination, and he doubtless sees his mistake now.

President Garfield's Ohio relatives say that, with the exception of an attack of fever and ague years ago when a boy, and occasional touches of dyspepsia in late years, he has never been ill. His habit has always been to live on plain, substantial food, and he has never indulged in late suppers.

It is now stated that Guiteau determined to murder the President May 18th, and had been diligently seeking an opportunity since that date. He would have shot him in the depot when he started for Long Branch with his wife, but Mrs. Garfield looked so feeble he had not the heart to do it in her presence.

Under existing laws Guiteau can only be punished with eight years' imprisonment, in case the President recovers. It would be far better to consider him insane, and confine him in an asylum for the remainder of his life. The English suggestion of life imprisonment, with occasional severe floggings to remind him of his wickedness, is a good one, if it were practicable.

As Garfield rises in the public esteem Conkling falls. In this the public judgment is faultless. These two men are representatives of directly opposite tendencies in American politics—purity on the one hand and corruption on the other.—Memphis Avalanche (Ind. Dem.)

The South admires bravery and determination of character, and cannot but recognize manifestations of these qualities in the President's course with Conkling and the star route ring. He has likewise given evidence of a resolution not to meddle with Southern affairs. With these opinions of his past, with such expectations for the future of his presidency, can it be thought strange that the desire for Garfield's recovery is so strongly felt and expressed? We verily believe that the attempts on the President's life will work out the most marked results yet observed in the reconciliation of the two sections.—Selma (Ala.) Times.

The cry of the assassin, "I am a stalwart of the stalwarts, and Arthur is now President," may have shown madness, but it was certainly madness with method. If he be insane, it reveals the influences which have disturbed his brain—influences for which every man is responsible who feeds and fans to fury the fire of party. The deliberate stimulation of this tendency is a crime against liberty. The ability to restrain and modify it is the real power of self-government. If we cannot accomplish its restraint in this country, the republic is impracticable. Abolition of the spoils system, which is the direct cause of this national calamity, is now the most essential and important public duty.—Harper's Weekly.

A Western engineer proposes to use the telegraph lines for electric lighting purposes on all railway lines. The lamps are to be suspended from the poles, which average about thirty to the mile.

There will be no preaching at the Baptist church to-morrow. Sunday school and prayer meeting at the usual hours.

The Odd Fellows enjoyed one of Landlord Stone's excellent suppers at the Nassowanno House last week Friday evening.

A portion of the Boston & Albany dry bridge over Commercial street is being rebuilt, with iron stringers instead of wood.

Complaint is made that ambitious sportsmen are shooting pigeons in the village which are the private property of some of our citizens, who are considerably indignant over the matter.

Palmer National Bank stock is looking up. Fifteen shares were sold at auction Tuesday at 131½, S. W. French being the purchaser. This is the highest point the stock has ever reached.

Division Superintendent Grover of the Boston & Albany road was in town Thursday forenoon, examining the employes at this point to discover if any are troubled with color blindness.

The case against Lawyer Barker, formerly of this place, was before the Superior court at Springfield Thursday, but on account of the absence of one or two witnesses, it was postponed until next October.

The New London Northern Railroad begins to-day selling excursion tickets every Saturday to New York and return for $3.50, the fare one way. The tickets are good to return only on the Sunday or Monday night boats.

The farmers are making hay while the sun shines, and are giving employment to all the men they can find. The hay crop will not be as heavy as expected early in the season, though there will be a good supply, and of good quality.

The Wide Awake base ball club played the Thorndikes last Saturday, on the grounds of the latter club, and beat them by a score of 14 to 12, in 7 innings, the Wide Awakes refusing to play any longer, on account of dissatisfaction with the umpire.

Over two hundred people were entertained by Mr. and Mrs. E. S. Gibbons at the meeting of the ladies' social union of St. Paul's church, at their residence Wednesday evening, and it is needless to say that all had a pleasant time. Something over $20 was realized from the sale of ice cream in the evening.

The Boston & Albany Railroad now charges 50 cents for carrying a bicycle in a baggage car for any distance under 50 miles, adding a cent to the charge for each additional mile above 50. This will not be agreeable news to those wheelmen who are in the habit of occasionally making a long trip on their machines, and returning by railroad.

Judge Robinson last Saturday fined Joseph Benway of Three Rivers $5 and costs for an assault on Nora Bonville. On Monday Joseph Ball of the same place paid costs, $6.45, for an assault on Vallary Forte; and on Thursday Henry Stuart of Brimfield was sent to the house of correction for 90 days, for an assault on his wife while crazy drunk on cider.

The excursion to Shelter Island, under the auspices of the Sunday school of the Congregational church at Warren, next Thursday, gives the people of Palmer an opportunity to spend a day at this favorite resort, leaving Palmer at 6.42 a. m.; returning arrive at Palmer at 8.43 p. m. Tickets and information regarding the trip can be obtained of W. R. Milligan at his store.

The young business men of the place had a game of base ball on the park Thursday afternoon, those south of Central street, captained by W. C. Dewey, being arrayed against the North-siders, under J. A. White. In the 8th inning the score stood 15 to 14 in favor of White's nine, when the latter kicked against a decision of the umpire and refused to play longer. The game was then declared in favor of Dewey's side, 9 to 0.

The heavy shower which visited us Monday noon was a "soaker," and no mistake, while the clouds darkened the sky to such an extent that it became necessary to resort to lamp-light in order to see anything in the house. The rain, however, made a marked and agreeable change in the air, which was so warm in the forenoon that the thinnest clothes were burdensome, but in the evening it was necessary to resort to woolen garments to be comfortable.

Rev. E. M. Haynes, who was at one time the popular pastor of the Baptist church in this place, and is now pastor of the Baptist church at Whitehall, N. Y., received the honorary degree of D. D. from Dartmouth College at its late commencement. The Whitehall Chronicle, in announcing the fact, says: "Mr. Haynes is a very close and diligent student, not only of Scriptures, but of the subjects that engage the best and most advanced thought of the age. He keeps abreast with the progress of modern culture, which is illustrated in his discourses, always evincing deep thought and often rising to eloquence in expression." His numerous friends in this vicinity will say amen to all this, and congratulate him on the honor which has been so worthily bestowed.

The monthly meeting of the executive committee of the Palmer Improvement Association was held at the residence of R. L. Goddard Monday evening. The association has made a beginning in its work by renewing the worn-out concrete walk across the lower end of Central street, and the stone walk on Church street will be raised as soon as men can be obtained to do the work. Nothing will be done at present about putting in a cross-walk to the depot, in view of the possibility that the railroad authorities may take some action which will save the expense to the association. As soon as the necessary estimates can be obtained, the association will do something about putting up signs on the street corners, if it has funds enough to do so. The most pressing need of the association at present is a larger membership, which means more money, and increased means for usefulness. Every citizen of the place, male and female, ought to be a member of the association, which has for its object the improvement and beautifying of the village in which we live—an object, surely, in which all should feel an interest.

"There is no new thing under the sun," said the wise Preacher of old; and we are often reminded of the prophetic truth of his words as we learn how the ancients were perfectly familiar with so many things which have been regarded as modern discoveries. Take, for instance, the supposed-to-be modern practice which some clergymen occasionally indulge in, of preaching other men's sermons. Even this little trick was well known to our ancestors, and they disapproved of the idea to such an extent that they refused to pay the minister for preaching such discourses. An illustration of this fact is to be found in the record of a town meeting held in Palmer "Aug. ye 23d, 1754," which reads as follows: "At a meeting of the Inhabitants of this Destrict Legaly Convened & asambled at ye publick meeting house in sd Palmer ye meeting being opened andrew Rutherford was chosen Moderator on the third article in ye warrent for sd meeting voted that Mr Knibblow be allowed foure pounds Sixteen Shillings which is Eight Shillings Lawfull money for Each Sermon he Preathed on Sabeth Days in this District Except three Sarmons which we can prove he preachead other mens works."

One of our nice young men drove to a neighboring village last Sunday night, and, directing his horse's steps toward the house of a young lady, alighted and went inside for an evening's pleasant converse. When the sad hour came for parting, he came forth into the outer world to find that his horse and carriage had disappeared, without any trace of their whereabouts. Here was a predicament; but the y. m. was equal to it. The young lady's father was aroused from his dreams and the case stated to him, and it was decided that he should hitch up and bring the y. m. home, which he proceeded to do. Then, engaging the fleetest horse to be found, and summoning one of our sheriffs to his aid, the y. m. started in pursuit of the thieves. Quick time was made back to the scene of the evening's occurrences, and at the suggestion of the officer it was decided to look around the village some before going further. Acting upon this advice, a short hunt brought the searchers to a livery stable, where the lost animal was found calmly chewing the cud of contentment, having been brought to the barn by somebody who had found him wandering around the street.

Moral — (1) Mischievous boys abound; therefore hitch your horses with a padlock when out for an evening. (2) A stern chase may not always be a long chase, if it only be a strong chase.

Editor of the Journal: — One is impressed, upon reading the letter signed "Veritas" in your last issue, with the old adage that a bird when hit will flutter a little, and, without doubt, time will make "Veritas" feel better. It will probably appear that no one is actuated by spite toward Dr. Ruggles, but that the feeling really is, that he has laid himself open to just criticism by causing so much trouble to the town for so long a time about a valueless piece of land, and also that no member of the "legal fraternity" was instrumental in calling the late town meeting unless acting in behalf of, and at the request of good citizens, who feel justified by the large majority of voters who sustained their position. Should "Veritas" pursue his studies in the direction of the "legal fraternity," he may find that the selectmen last Spring, for some reason, passed by the gentleman who has acted for some years as counsel for the town, and who has never been suspected of acting professionally against the interests of the town during that time, and engaged as counsel another gentleman, who had been attorney for Dr. Ruggles in his claims for one of the town's highways, and that somehow or in some way some of the selectmen have been induced to agree with Dr. Ruggles about that road. Also, that several former clients of the last mentioned attorney, since he became the town's counsel, have received a material advance over their previous awards for alleged damages caused by the laying out of Water street. "Veritas" seems a little sensitive about "the backbone" of some of the selectmen, and it has been suggested that the apparent lack of firmness was caused not only by the warlike Frenchmen but also by the influence of the succulent and seductive strawberry. Who but the happy recipients can tell of the power of this juicy, luscious fruit? It has been ascertained that one of the "legal fraternity" did ask Selectman Loomis that the ditch in front of his residence be properly graded, so that the large accumulation of water after showers would run off, offering to pay himself all the expense incurrred. The selectmen courteously replied "that it would be attended to soon." If neglect to properly grade Main street is an exhibition of "backbone," "Veritas" is entitled to due praise for bringing the fact to public notice, and the interested member of the "legal fraternity," now the season for strawberries is passed, will doubtless be willing to suffer annoyance for any reasonable time. It must be pleasant to be the son of a selectman, but no one will consider any of the town fathers responsible for the words and actions of their too forward children. INQUIRER.

Perkins, D. D.; 8, Music. A full report of the exercises will be published in the STANDARD of next week, and extra copies will be printed so all can have them who wish.

It should not be forgotten in an hour that when Protestants, Catholics and Jews have held special services to implore the Almighty to restore the President to health, the little sect known as Mormons have rejoiced in the national calamity, and that when all good citizens, regardless of party, denounced the assault upon the President and exhibited the gravest concern as to the result, a little clique of disorganizers adopted resolutions apparently for the sole purpose of declaring to the American people that they are utterly indifferent to the fate of the Chief Magistrate. The former have declared themselves outlaws; the latter have published their hostility to our form of Government. What shall be done with the Mormons and Socialists? Are they entitled to citizenship?—Boston Journal.

Four men broke into the house of Johanna Sullivan, a middle aged woman, at Sandisfield, Berkshire county, last Saturday night, and chasing her into the open air, brutally tarred and feathered her, besides jumping on and kicking her so that her life is almost despaired of. The assault is thought to have been provoked by the woman's habit of getting herself and neighbors into the local courts by petty suits. Two of her assailants have been arrested, and officers are hunting for the others.

Prospectors returning from the Holy Cross country in Colorado, and especially from the head of Cross Creek, report that the ground is covered with red snow. In the almost inaccessible defiles of Mount Shasta in California is the only other known place in the United States where this is seen. In polar regions it is a familiar sight. The phenomenon is due to the presence of minute red animalcules in the snow.

The assets and liabilities of the Woman's Bank in Boston have been summed up, and the result is a dividend of 5 per cent to the depositors. This was the institution which was to pay such high rates of interest that the depositor would get back an amount equal to her principal in a few months, and all that came afterward, including the principal, would be clear profit.

Prof. Gardner of Albany, in a paper read before the State University Convention at Albany Tuesday, stated that 20 per cent of the entire voting population of this country, and 45 per cent of Southern voters, could not read their ballots. Harper's Magazine for August is magnificently illustrated. It opens with a frontispiece—an illustration for Margaret Veley's poem "Almond Blossom"—drawn by Abbey and engraved by Cole, in a marvelously delicate style. Mr. Abbey contributes also a fine full-page illustration of Herrick's poem, "The Parcæ; or, Three Daintie Destinies." Henry P. Johnson contributes a timely and interesting paper on "The Surrender of Cornwallis," which is richly illustrated, and Samuel Adams Drake's series of papers on the White Mountains is concluded. Mr. Gibson's drawings illustrating this part are remarkably effective. Mrs. Champney's Portuguese papers are also concluded in this number. Among the illustrations for this part are some excellent views of Cintra, Coimbra, and the convents of Santa Clara and Alcobaca. T. B. Aldrich concludes his charming sketch of Tangeir, entitled "A Day in Africa," beautifully illustrated. One of the most important contributions to the number is Frederick G. Mather's paper, "Water-Routes from the great Northwest." This paper is especially timely in connection with the opening of the New Welland Canal; and all questions of interest as to the future ascendency of the Erie Canal or the St. Lawrence system, as well as the bearings of Mississippi transportation and railway competition, are very thoroughly discussed. The article is amply illustrated with maps and plans. A brief paper of a retrospective character, entitled "Then," written by James T. Field during his last illness, is one of the most delightful things in the number. Richard M. Johnston contributes a humorous sketch, entitled "The various Languages of Billy Moon." Another short story, contributed anonymously, "Miss Pickett," is a strong delineation of New England character. The serial novels by Thomas Hardy and Miss Woolson are continued. Hugh Craig contributes a suggestive article, entitled "Assassins and Nihilists," and William Pope Dabney tells a significant anecdote of President Madison and his discussion with a Baptist preacher concerning the ratification of the Constitution. Poems are contributed by Miss Sarah O. Jewett, Mrs. Louise Chandler Moulton and Miss Margaret Veley. Mr. Curtis writes most charmingly of the Newport belles of a century ago, of the Greek Play at Harvard, and of Edwin Booth's welcome in London. The other editorial departments are as full and interesting as usual.

Good Company ($3 a year; Springfield, Mass.) Number 22 opens with a long, complete story, filling seventeen pages, by Ellen W. Olney, entitled "A Pair of Silk Stockings." It has another of the Arctic papers by Lieutenant Frederick Schwatka under the heading, "In the Land of the Midnight Sun." There is an article by Mrs. Gen. Lew Wallace, "The Land of the Pueblos; The Pimos;" an instalment of the serial story now in course of publication, "Mildred's Caprice;" a number of poems, and various miscellaneous articles.

A Philadelphia clergyman was called upon recently to marry a couple who had no license, and declined to tie the knot, but finally yielded to the solicitations of the groom, upon his promise to call the next day with the certificate and cash. He never appeared, however, but went to his home in West Virginia, and the clergyman gets even with him by publishing a notice of the marriage, adding the words, "No cards; no cake; no cash; no certificate."

The partly decomposed body of a middle-aged man was found suspended by one foot in the branches of a tree at Southwick last Sunday, the severed head lying on the ground. It is supposed to have been a case of suicide. A wallet was found, containing a board bill made out to George N. Mayo.

For artistic posing of the sitters, Hardy's studio, 310 Main street, Springfield, has a very fine reputation. You ought to see some of the pictures done there.

Try Carter's Little Nerve Pills for any case of nervousness, sleeplessness, weak stomach, indigestion, dyspepsia, &c.; relief is sure. The only nerve medicine for the price in the market. In vials at 25 cents. 2w17

Physicians recommend as a fine Bourbon Whiskey the G. O. Taylor brand, bottled by the old and honorable house of Chester H. Graves & Sons, Boston. For purity and excellence this Whiskey is unsurpassed. To be obtained of druggists and grocers.

If the functions of the liver are in any way disordered, the whole body, and not only the body, but the mind sympathizes with the disturbed organ. Bilious complaints are more common than any other disease; and to remove the bile, as well as to regulate the liver, you only have to take Simmons Liver Regulator, which will impart new life and vigor to the whole system.

During the past cold Winter many of our people suffered, and sickness was caused by the poorly-constructed, gassy furnaces that seem to be in so many of our houses. It is universally conceded that this expense of sickness can be wholly saved by having a first-class durable gas-tight Boynton furnace, that is unequaled for producing large volumes of pure, warm, healthy air. They are the best furnaces in the country, and are manufactured by Richardson, Boynton & Co., of New York.

A safe and sure means of restoring the youthful color of the hair is furnished by Parker's Hair Balsam, which is deservedly popular from its superior cleanliness. 1m15

Ode to a Rolling-Pin.

Oh, piece of mechanism marvelous!
I gaze upon thee with a sense of awe;
Though but a simple stick thou seemst to us,
Mightier art thou than the arms of war.
For woman is the queen whose sway all own—
Since earth began it ever thus hath been;
Within her happy home she finds her throne,
And thou her scepter art, O rolling-pin!
She acts the fairy and thou art her wand
For making things delicious. Women find
That toothsome dinners far surpass a band
Of fellow-feeling to make men-folks kind.
But should a man from this mild sway break loose
And late at night in street or club-room roam,
And be too much confused to make excuse
For his long absence when he reaches home;
Or should he say he visited the lodge,
Which business detained in session long,
And hope by the aid of this old dodge
He may avoid the charge of doing wrong;
Oh, then will disappointment be his lot!
Then will he have to suffer discipline!
The royal rage, for him, will make things hot,
And thou wilt come in use, O rolling-pin!
And though repentance in time's steady flight
May heal his wounds so that he can again
Put on his hat, not soon will come the night
When he thy power will venture to disdain.
For all men fear thee if thy power they know,
And yet they love thee, too, for thou hast been Man's dearest friend as well as deadly foe—
Thou rulest all mankind, O rolling-pin!

—Boston Post.

NO NEED OF DROWNING.

An English gentleman, says the New York Tribune, has lately published a letter showing how persons ignorant of swimming may keep themselves afloat in the water for a time and with little exertion. The method of preventing drowning described is one understood by all swimmers, but, unfortunately, known to few people who cannot swim, and is what is called "treading water." All animals practice it instinctively. A cat, dog, horse or cow, finding itself out of its depth, has no difficulty in keeping its head above the surface, by making nearly the same motions it makes in walking; while a man who cannot swim throws up his arms, makes a few spasmodic motions and drowns. Yet the brute has no advantage over the man in the water. On the contrary, the advantage of physical conformation is with the man, for his hands and feet are admirably shaped to act as paddles and keep him afloat. The human body is a little lighter than the quantity of water it displaces, and, consequently, some portion of it will keep above the surface in accordance with the law of specific gravity. All that is necessary to do to escape drowning is to manage the hands and feet so that this portion shall be the head. If the arms are kept under water, the head can be kept up, but, if the arms are thrown up, the head goes under. Swimming requires practice and confidence, and is an art few acquire; but every man, woman and child that can walk on land can tread water without any prior instruction or practice.

MOODY ON "DUTY."

I have an old mother away down in the Connecticut mountains, and I have been in the habit of going to see her every year for twenty years. Suppose I go there and say:

"Mother, you were very kind to me when I was young—you were very good to me; when father died you worked hard for us all to keep us together, and so I have come to see you because it is my duty."

I went then only because it was my duty. Then she would say to me;

"Well, my son, if you only come to see me because it is your duty, you need not come again."

And that is the way with a great many of the servants of God. They work for him because it is their duty—not for love. Let us abolish this word duty, and feel that it is only a privilege to work for God, and let us try to remember that what is done merely from a sense of duty is not acceptable to God.

A nice-looking old lady, with a snowy circle of lace about her head, sat in a car the other day and drew up her skirts nervously lest the cataract of tobacco juice that was pouring from the mouths of two loafers next her should deluge them. "Conductor," she asked timidly, when he came in, "isn't it against the rules to spit on the floor of the car?" "No, ma'am," replied the gallant conductor, "spit wherever you like."

A Red Bluff sportsman relates the following story: "While out hunting, I was bitten by a rattlesnake on the back of the left hand, and having heard that if powder was burned on the bitten part it would be an antidote to the poison, I immediately poured a small quanity of powder on the bitten place, struck a match and set fire to it: the result was that I felt no inconvenience and experienced no pain or trouble whatever from the bite."

In Paris false ears are a new manufacture for the toilet. Ladies who think they have ugly ears place these artistic productions under luxuriant tresses of false hair, fasten them to the natural ears, and wear them for show. False hair, false teeth, false breasts, false hips, false calves, false ears—what next?

A really good man had rather be deceived than be suspicious: had rather forego his own right than run the venture of doing even a hard thing. This is the temper of that charity of which the apostle says it shall never fail.—Bishop Butler.

Fenderson was at the theater the other night. "It was a burlesque, a take off, wasn't it?" asked Smith. "Yes," said Fenderson, "that's what it was, I guess. They had taken off about everything they dared to."

"Gentle Annie."—Yes, it will be proper to work a monogram on the liver pad which the young ladies are getting up for the pastor of your church.

The "reversed" New Testament is what a woman called for in a Boston bookstore.

The fool thinks he has argued a case when he offers to bet.

BENEVOLENT MR. WIXHAM.

At a meeting of the Ladies' Benevolent Society, held the other day, it was resolved that a committee of four ladies be appointed to canvass for donations, and in the course of their peregrinations this committee dropped into Mr. Wixham's office. He received them as a gentleman should, and after the usual formalities, one of them began:

"Mr. Wixham, we are asking aid for benevolent purposes."

"Ah, yes. Benevolence is a bump which should be cultivated. Are you looking for poor folks?"

"We are."

"Very proper—very proper. You all have children of your own?"

"Oh, yes."

"All of them are well fed, well clothed and well cared for, are they?"

"Yes, sir."

"I presume their stockings are promptly darned, buttons in their places, and they say their prayers when they go to bed. Am I correct?"

The women looked at each other in a sly way, and then at him, and one of them said:

"We shall be happy for any contributon."

"Yes'm, yes'm. You don't want this contribution for your own families?"

"No, sir!" answered four voices in chorus.

"Well, I am somewhat inclined to benevolence. Hardly a day passes that I don't do something for charity. Here's an old account of twenty-six dollars against Mr. ——. I know he's hard up, and having a close time to get along, and yesterday I canceled the debt."

One of the canvassers turned red, white and blue and looked out of the window. That was her husband, but Wixham didn't know it.

"And yesterday I found a poor, forlorn-looking little boy out here crying with hunger and cold. He said his name was Tommy ——, and he lived at No. 26 —— Street. He hadn't been washed or combed for a week, and I felt sad for him. I was going to take him home and feed him, but he slipped away."

Another woman suddenly looked out of the window, and her pulse ran up to one hundred and twenty a minute, but Wixham was as innocent as a lamb of any knowledge that it was her boy.

"Then you won't aid us?" queried the spokesman.

"Oh, yes, certainly I will. I was simply figuring to see how much I could spare. I signed a note with Mr. —— last Fall, and I had to pay it yesterday. That makes me feel rather poor."

The third woman didn't turn red, but green, but Wixham couldn't have possibly known that it was her husband.

"Let's see. Let's see. I want to give you all I can spare. Mr. ——, on —— Street, owes me four months' house rent, and I'll give you an order on him for twenty dollars."

The four women rose up. They rushed in a solid body for the door. They went out in a heap. Some were red, and some were pale, and all mad. They tried to speak, but they couldn't, and as they hastened to get away from each other, Wixham held up the half-written order, and gasped:

"How very, very singular! Perhaps they thought they couldn't collect the money."—Exchange.

BEAUTIES OF EDITING A PAPER.

Editing a paper is a pleasant business—not too pleasant, but just pleasant enough.

If it contains much political matter, people won't have it.

If the type is large, it don't contain much reading matter.

If we publish real stories, folks say they are nothing but lies.

If we omit them, we have no enterprise.

If we have a few jokes, folks say we are nothing but end men.

If we omit jokes, folks say we are farmers.

If we publish original matter, they damn us for not giving selections.

If we give selections, people say we are lazy for not writing more and giving them what they have not read in some other paper.

If we give a complimentary notice, we are censured for being partial.

If we don't, all hands say we are awfully ghastly.

If we insert an article which pleases the ladies, the men become jealous, and vice versa.

If we attend church, they say it is for effect.

If we remain in our office attending to our own business, folks say we are too proud to mingle with other fellows.

If we go out, they say we don't attend to our business.

If we don't pay up promptly, they say we are not to be trusted.

If we pay up promptly, they say we stole the money.

RULES FOR BOYS.

Boys, do you wish to make your mark in the world? Do you wish to be men? Then observe the following rules:

Hold integrity sacred.
Observe good manners.
Endure trials patiently.
Be prompt in all things.
Make few acquaintances.
Yield not to discouragements.
Dare to do right; fear to do wrong.
Watch carefully over your passions.
Fight life's battles bravely, manfully.
Consider well, then decide positively.
Sacrifice money rather than principle.
Use all your leisure time for improvement.
Attend carefully to the details of your business.

A GREAT ENTERPRISE.—The Hop Bitters Manufacturing Company is one of Rochester's greatest business enterprises. Their Hop Bitters have reached a sale beyond all precedent, having from their intrinsic value found their way into almost every household in the land.—Graphic.

Food for the brain and nerves that will invigorate the body without intoxicating is what we need in these days of rush and worry. Parker's Ginger Tonic restores the vital energies, soothes the nerves and brings good health quicker than anything you can use.—Tribune See other column. j

TAKE
SIMMONS
Liver Regulator!
ASK the recovered dyspeptics, bilious sufferers, victims of fever and ague, the mercurial diseased patient how they recovered their health, cheerful spirits and good appetite; they will tell you by taking Simmons Liver Regulator.
THE CHEAPEST, PUREST AND BEST FAMILY MEDICINE IN THE WORLD for DYSPEPSIA, CONSTIPATION, Jaundice, Bilious Attacks, SICK HEADACHE, Colic, Depression of Spirits, SOUR STOMACH, Heart Burn, &c., &c.
This unrivaled Southern remedy is warranted not to contain a single particle of Mercury, or any injurious mineral substance, but is
PURELY VEGETABLE,
containing those Southern roots and herbs, which an All-Wise Providence has placed in countries where Liver Diseases mostly prevail. It will cure all diseases caused by derangement of the Liver and Bowels.
The SYMPTOMS of Liver Complaint are a bitter or bad taste in the mouth; pain in the back, sides or joints, often mistaken for Rheumatism; SOUR STOMACH; loss of appetite; bowels alternately costive and lax; headache; loss of memory, with a painful sensation of having failed to do something which ought to have been done; debility; low spirits, a thick yellow appearance of the skin and eyes, a dry cough often mistaken for Consumption. Sometimes many of the symptoms attend the disease, at other times very few; but the LIVER, the largest organ in the body, is generally the seat of the disease, and if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and DEATH will ensue.
"I can recommend as an efficacious remedy for disease of the Liver, Heartburn and Dyspepsia, Simmons Liver Regulator.
LEWIS G. WUNDER, Philadelphia."
"We have tested its virtues personally, and know that for Dyspepsia, Biliousness and Throbbing Headache, it is the best medicine the world ever saw. We have tried forty other remedies before Simmons Liver Regulator, but none of them gave us more than temporary relief; but the Regulator not only relieved but cured us."—Ed. Telegraph and Messenger, Macon, Ga.

HOP BITTERS NEVER FAIL.
If you are a man of business, weakened by the strain of your duties, avoid stimulants, and use Hop Bitters.
If you are a man of letters, toiling over midnight work, to restore brain nerve waste, use Hop Bitters.
If you are young, and suffering from any indiscretion or dissipation; if you are married or single, old or young, suffering from poor health or languishing on a bed of sickness, rely on Hop Bitters.
Whoever you are, whenever you fell that your system needs cleansing, toning or stimulating, without intoxicating, take Hop Bitters.
Thousands die annually from some form of Kidney disease that might have been prevented by a timely use of Hop Bitters.
Have you dyspepsia, kidney, or urinary complaint, disease of the stomach, bowels, blood, liver or nerves? You will be cured if you use Hop Bitters.
If you are simply week and low-spirited, try it! It may save your life. It has saved hundreds.

FOUNDED BY GORDON M. FISK.

THE SURGEON'S KNIFE.

WONDERFUL SURGICAL OPERATION—REMOVAL OF URINARY STONES FROM THE BLADDER—SUCCESSFUL.

Mr. Simeon Tietsell, of Saugerties, N. Y., had been treated for seven years by various physicians for what they called Stricture of the Urethra, without benefit. He finally consulted Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who found his trouble to be Urinary Calculi or Stones in the Bladder. The doctor at once removed the foreign bodies with the knife and then gave his great Blood Specific, "Favorite Remedy," to prevent their reformation. The entire treatment was eminently successful, and Mr. Tietsell's recovery was rapid and perfect.

While "Favorite Remedy" is a specific in all Kidney and Bladder diseases, it is equally valuable in cases of Bilious Disorders, Constipation of the Bowels, and all the class of ills apparently inseparable from women. Try it. Your druggist has it, and its cost is only one dollar a bottle. The lucky man is he who puts this advice into practice. Don't forget the name and address, Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y. The doctor would have it understood that, while he is engaged in the introduction of his medicine, "Favorite Remedy," he still continues the practice of his profession, but confines himself exclusively to office practice. He treats all classes of a chronic character, and performs all the minor and capital operations of surgery. 1m18

Farmer John.

"If I'd nothing to do," said Farmer John,
"To fret or to bother me—
Were I but rid of this mountain of work,
What a good man I could be!

"The pigs get out, and the cows get in,
Where they have no right to be;
And the weeds in the garden and the corn—
Why they fairly frighten me.

"It worries me out of temper quite,
And well nigh out of my head.
What a curse it is that a man must toil
Like this for his daily bread!"

But Farmer John he broke his leg,
And was kept for many a week
A helpless man and an idle man—
Was he therefore mild and meek?

Nay; what with the pain, and what with the fret
Of sitting with nothing to do—
And the farmwork botched by a shiftless hand,
He got very cross and blue.

He scolded the children and cuffed the dog
That fawned about his knee;
And snarled at his wife, though she was kind
And patient as wife could be.

He grumbled, and whined, and fretted, and fumed,
The whole of the long day through;
"'Twill ruin me quite," cried Farmer John,
"To sit here with nothing to do!"

His hurt got well, and he went to work,
And a busier man than he,
A happier man, or a pleasanter man,
You never would wish to see.

The pigs got out, and he drove them back,
Whistling right merrily;
He mended the fence, and kept the cows
Just where they ought to be.

Weeding the garden was jolly fun,
And ditto hoeing the corn.
"I'm happier far," said Farmer John,

THE LOST DAUGHTER.

"All these are under two years," said the matron of the Foundling Hospital, as she looked complacently around on the goodly array of babies of all sizes and complexions, ranged on either side of the long nursery.

There were babies plump, rosy and good-natured, as all babies should be, and pale, fretful, puny little creatures, who looked as if they were already disgusted with the life upon which they had entered; black, blue and gray-eyed babies, and babies with eyes of very little color at all.

It would seem that the lady addressed, and who was desirous of obtaining one for adoption, would find no difficulty in suiting herself; but either she did not see what she was in search of, or was too bewildered by so many rival claims, to be able to make any choice.

"Here is a very fine boy-baby," said the matron, pausing in front of a black-eyed fellow, who sat on the knee of its nurse, sucking its fat thumb.

"Yes; but I want a girl, a blonde. Something like this."

As the matron glanced at the photograph that was handed her, which was that of a lovely child of not more than two Summers, she uttered an exclamation of surprise.

"It is a picture of my little girl," said the lady, her eyes filling with tears, "who died a few weeks ago, and whose place I wish to fill, if such a thing is possible."

"We have a little girl in the hospital ward," said the matron, "who resembles this picture so strongly that I should think it was taken for her. Both parents are dead, and, so far as I can learn, there is no one to claim her."

The speaker led the way to a cheerful, sunny upper room, where on one of the little cots a beautiful child was sleeping. The resemblance to the picture was very strong, and to the bereaved mother it seemed almost like a revelation from Heaven.

"Lilian, darling Lilian!" she cried, bending over her.

The child must have been dreaming of its mother; the fringed lids flew open, revealing eyes blue and wondrously bright, while the little arms went up with an eager fluttering.

"Mother!"

Clasping the child to her heart, the lady burst into tears, while the matron looked wonderingly from one to the other.

"She looks enough like you to be your own child."

"She is my own child!" was the tearful response. "Providence has had compassion on my loneliness and sorrow, and given my little Lilian back to me."

* * * * * * *

Blue-eyed, golden-haired Lilian Howard stood irresolutely at the door of her father's study; the color coming and going in her cheeks, and a look of fear and dismay in the sweet face that was never seen there before.

The door being ajar, Mr. Howard heard her step, gentle as it was.

"Daughter!"

Mr. Howard looked gravely and tenderly into the pale, wistful face that confronted him.

"My child, you look as if you were summoned before a stern judge rather than a tender father, who would not knowingly deny you anything that would promote your true happiness."

"You have always been very kind to me, papa, until now," said Lilian, bursting into tears. "But, indeed, indeed, I can never be happy without Charlie!"

Taking his daughter's hand, Mr. Howard led her to a seat in the recess of one of the windows.

"Let us talk the matter over calmly. You are my only child, the pride and joy of my heart. I have given you every advantage that wealth can command, and feel that I have a right to expect you to do better than to marry a man with neither position nor the means to support you in the style to which you have been accustomed. And your mother fully agrees with me."

"But, papa, you always seemed to like Charlie until now. You never objected to his coming here, or my going out with him before."

"I like him still; my personal feelings toward him have not changed in the least. But I find his prospects are very different from what I thought they were. I supposed Mr. Haven to have no family, and thinking so much of the young man as he seemed to do, a distant relative and all, I thought that he would inherit the larger part of his property. But he tells me that he has a daughter, who will have every penny of it, which gives the matter quite a different complexion. It is a little curious that, as much as he has been here, and as intimate as he has been with all of us, that he has never spoken of her."

"But why should you care for money, papa, when you have so much?"

"You are wrong, Lilian. True, I am the owner of considerable property, but the shrinkage in all values has greatly crippled my resources. Go now my child; I have some letters to write. You may be sure that your father has decided wisely. Tell the young man what I have told you, and let that end the matter."

Tying on her hat, Lilian went out for her usual walk; but not even the bright sunshine, and bloom, and the verdure of that beautiful June day could made her heart less heavy. Her eyes were so blinded by the tears that would come, that she nearly ran against an odd-looking, middle-aged man, who came hobbling along the narrow footpath. As he caught a glimpse of the young lady's quivering lips, and tear-wet lashes, he came to a sudden stop.

"Crying, Miss Lilian! What does this mean?"

Lilian looked into the kind, sympathizing face of the speaker.

"Oh, Mr. Haven, papa says that I can see Charlie only once more; and then only to tell him that we can never, never marry."

"Does he?" was the grim response. "I think I shall have something to say about that. Do you love Charlie?"

"Dearly."

"And you think he loves you?"

"I am sure of it."

"Then I see no reason why you two should not marry."

Lilian opened her eyes widely.

"You don't think I ought to disobey my father?"

"I have said nothing about your disobeying your father; that is about the last thing that I should counsel you to do. But Charlie is poor, you know. I have a daughter just about your age, who will inherit all my wealth. Do you think you could be happy in a small, plainly-furnished house, with neither servants, fine dresses, nor any of the beautiful things to which you have been accustomed all your life?"

The golden lashes drooped until they lay quivering upon the flushed cheeks.

"If Charlie were there."

Mr. Haven's face betrayed strange and strong emotion.

"Twenty years ago," he said, tremulously, "lips just as sweet spoke me nearly the same words. As I live, your life shall not be blighted as hers was. Cheer up, my child," he added, "leave the matter to me, and all will be well. I was on my way to your house when you met me. I am going to dine there to-day. Let us go back together."

Mr. and Mrs. Howard were too much accustomed to the vagaries of their wealthy and eccentric neighbor, to be any way surprised at his appearance.

He had frequently dined with them in the same unceremonious manner, his genial and kindly traits of character making him a great favorite with all the family.

The after-dinner talk turning upon the improbability of a recently published story, Mr. Haven said: "I will relate a story, as strange as any that can be found in what is called fiction, and which is strictly true."

"Sixteen years ago yesterday, as it stands upon the records of a certain orphan asylum in a distant country, a lady, young, fair and wealthy, went there for the purpose of obtaining a child to take the place of one she had just lost. In one of the wards was a lovely child, whose parents had both been killed, as was supposed, in a railway disaster, and who so strongly resembled her lost darling that her heart went out toward it at the first glance.

"She took it away with her, giving it her child's place and name, and her husband, who was absent at the time, has never once suspected that it was not the little one that he kissed at parting, and over whose grave the grass has been growing for many a year.

"Six months later the father of this child had recovered in a measure from the accident which had made him a cripple for life, called at the asylum to claim her, but only to learn that she had passed as completely out of his possession as if the grave had hidden her from his eyes.

"The death of a wealthy relative had raised him from poverty to affluence, and he spared neither money nor pains in his endeavors to find her. But the lady who had taken her from the asylum had given a false name and address, all his efforts were fruitless, and it was not until after a lapse of some years, and by the merest chance, that he obtained a clue which led to the discovery of her whereabouts.

"She was then a blooming maiden of fifteen, the inmate of a beautiful and happy home, and the pride and darling of a man for whom he had a high esteem, and who believed her to be his own child. All a father's love sprang up in his lonely heart as he looked upon the sweet face that was the living picture of the wife he had so loved and mourned, but foreseeing the discord and unhappiness that the enforcement of his claims would occasion, he contented himself by placing himself where he could see her occasionally, and watch over her interests.

"But as time passed on, and she reached the age of eighteen, she proved to be her mother's daughter in heart, as well as form, bestowing it as that mother did before her, on a man whose poverty was the only objection that could be brought against him. When he found that her happiness was to be sacrificed, he resolved—"

Here the speaker was interrupted by an exclamation from one of the group. Mrs. Howard had fainted.

During the bustle and confusion that followed, Mr. Haven went out upon the lawn, where he was joined, half an hour later, by Mr. Howard. After conversing together a few minutes the two returned to the house, where they found Mrs. Howard and Lilian. Both had evidently been weeping, but the countenance of the former was composed, though very pale.

"Mr. Haven," she faltered, "for the first time my husband knows that the child so dear to us both is akin to neither. But you are wrong if you think that I intended at first to deceive him. I was among strangers when my own baby died, and he on a business tour of several months' duration. The two were of nearly the same age, and strangely alike, and on perceiving that my husband saw no difference I decided to wait until she had gained too strong a place in his heart to be easily dislodged; every week's delay making my task more difficult, until it became something that I found it impossible to do. And, strange as it may sound to you, so closely did Lilian resemble the little one I lost, and so entirely did she take her place in my heart, that I could never make it seem that she was not mine by birth as well as by affection."

"I can give you the key to this," said Mr. Haven, "as well as to Lilian's strong resemblance to you and your own child. Have you forgotten your twin sister, who bore the same name, and who was discarded by her family for marrying beneath her, as they called it? She was my wife and the mother of your Lilian; for I have not come to disturb the relation that has so long existed between you, but to see that she is not defrauded of woman's dearest right, the right to wed the man who has not only won her heart, but is worthy of it. There is many a millionaire who is not so rich in all that constitutes true manhood as Charles Harlow. My gentle Lilian was nearly heart-broken at the harsh decree which separated her from all her early friends. Give not to her child the same bitter experience, but let her go to the husband of her choice with your blessing as well as mine."

That blessing of her adopted parents followed Lilian to her new life and home, we may be sure. Mr. Haven is very happy in the happiness of his long-lost daughter, who often declares "that she has two papas, and does not know which she loves best."

SOME SIGNIFICANT FACTS.

There are now invested in railroad property in this country upwards of four and a half billions of dollars. Their net earnings for 1879 were upwards of two hundred millions.

This immense property is concentrated in the hands of a few men. The Presidents of four railroads—the Baltimore and Ohio, the Pennsylvania, the Central and the Erie—today control the price of breadstuffs on the Atlantic Coast.

It is rapidly increasing. The funded debt and stock interest have increased in three years over seven hundred millions of dollars; the mileage nearly twenty per cent.

It is exercising an increasing political control. The Central exercises an almost irresistible influence in the New York Legislature; the Pennsylvania a controlling influence in the Pennsylvania Legislature; the Central Pacific a despotic control over legislation on the Pacific Coast.

It has a powerful if not a dominant representation in the United States Senate. Nearly every Senator added during the past three years is interested in railroad enterprises; and the railroad interest is straining every nerve to increase this railroad representation.

It controls three leading newspapers in the metropolis, one in the capital, and many others in different parts of the country.

The telegraphs of the country are concentrated in a single hand, and that the hand of a railroad president.

These facts are worthy of thoughtful consideration.—Christian Union.

TASTE LESS MEDICINES.

"You am de squarest man in Austin," said old Uncle Mose, entering a drug store and taking the old clerk by the hand. The drug man blushed and modestly said he always tried to do his duty as a Christian and an American citizen, regardless of age, race, sex or previous condition. "I knowed right off you was a Christian, sah. No man in de drug business 'ceptin a follerer ob de Lord would hang out sich a sign as you hab got. Hit shows you am a Christian fust and a pizen mixer arterwards. I was just spellin' it out. Hit am de best advice eber I got in a drug store." "What sign are you talking about, Uncle?" asked the somewhat bewildered druggest. "Dat ar," said the old man, pointing to a placard on the wall, which read: "Tasteless Medicines." "Dat ar am de best advice in de world, taste less medicines. I nebber had tasted no medicines, nohow, and dat ar am de chief reason I'se alive and kickin' yit. But you am de fust Christian druggist eber I struck," and the old man strolled out just in time to avoid stopping with his head a package of hair restorer, that the infuriated druggist hurled after him.

THE INFLUENCE OF CLEAN LINEN.

The influence of clean linen on mankind is a study by itself. No man can be positively moral in soiled linen, as no man can retain his self-respect who has to button up his coat to conceal his lack of a shirt. The fact that the tramp wears either dirty linen or no linen at all, has more significance than appears upon the surface. It is a symptom of his disease. The man who cares for clean linen cannot become a tramp. If every tramp could be habilitated in a clean shirt and be induced to wear it, tramping would disappear from the face of the earth. How much the disuse of linen has to do with the rough character of a frontier civilization, who shall say? When the school teacher appears at the Howling Wilderness, every miner instinctively rushes for a starched shirt and collar, and then civilization begins to have sway. The shirt may be said to be the emblem of civilization, and perhaps the best denotation of our civilization is, the linen age.—Alliance.

THE WAY TO HEALTH.

The only true way to health is that which common sense dictates to man. Live within the bounds of reason. Eat moderately, drink temperately, sleep regularly, avoid excess in anything, and preserve a conscience "void of offense." Some men eat themselves to death, some drink themselves to death, some wear out their lives by indolence, and some by over-exertion; others are killed by the doctors, while not a few sink into the grave under the effects of vicious and beastly practices. All the medicines in creation are not worth a farthing to a man who is constantly and habitually violating the laws of his own nature. All the medical science in the world cannot save him from a premature grave. With a suicidal course of conduct, he is planting the seed of decay in his own constitution, and accelerating the destruction of his own life.—Scientific American.

Nemesis.

The editor is sitting
In his chamber 'neath the roof,
And of article on tariff
He is weaving out the woof.
On the table do his brightly
Burnished boot-heels gently rest,
While an 18-carat watch chain
Hangs across his ample vest.

An aged man and pallid,
Slowly climbs the iron stairs;
And at every labored footstep
Softly to himself he swears.
In his pocket is a "statement,"
Brightly gleams his azure eye—
He will get a full retraction
Or "find out the reason why."

That editor's still working
At his article so learned,
No footfalls break the silence,
The lights are downward turned.
The office bulldog's playing
With some fragments of Spring pants—
The old man with the statement
Wasn't given half a chance.

E PLURIBUS UNUM.

Our young readers may just now like to ponder the famous national motto. "From many, one," is the literal translation. But what is the full meaning? By most persons it is taken in the sense of "One composed of many, "One made up from many." The Union is one government formed by welding many States; as a bouquet is made by combining many blossoms; as a cable is formed by twisting many strands. And this is corroborated by the fact that more than a hundred years ago, and for perhaps half a century before we were a nation, E Pluribus Una was used as a motto of well-known English magazines. A magazine was a novel form of publication in those days; and the sense of the motto evidently was, "Here is a new sort of book, formed by combining many articles: written by a union of many writers." From the title-page of a popular magazine this thought might easily have won its way into the minds of the colonists, and have ripened there at the season when a national motto was desired.

Mr. H. C. Adams, a close student of legal antiquities suggests the meaning, "One out of many;" as men call a skillful house-keeper "one of a thousand." Ours is the nation, ours the government of our preference, out of all which the round world bears. He has found, as far back as Virgil, the phrase, "color est e pluribus unus." Horace and Juvenal put questions like this: What is the benefit of extracting only one thorn out of many?—e pluribus unum? Assuming that our Revolutionary fathers searched the classics for the motto, they may have chosen the phrase in this sense. There is some corroboration of this view in the fact that the legends Unum E Pluribus and E Pluribus Unum are found on copper coins struck by some of the States before the days of the Constitution and national coinage. It is not easy to see why a single State should adopt the phrase in the sense of one composed of many. It was first used on national coins in 1796, 1797 and 1798. Yet Haydn says it was adopted as a national motto in 1782. But this year, enjoying national prosperity under a Union which steadily gains strength and cohesion, our people can rejoice in the motto, reading it in either sense.

YORKTOWN.

The scene of the surrender has long been a much-neglected spot. Yorktown is not reached by railway, and is off the line of progress. Some day it may revive its old time prosperity; at least it ought to become more accessible as a point for future pilgrimage. Before the Revolution the town was quite an emporium, the only port from which the Virginia planters shipped their tobacco to England. Baltimore and Norfolk gradually reduced it by competition. Some two centuries or more ago we first hear of it as one of the few outposts or forts in the colony. In 1725 it was the centre of a thriving county—an Episcopal parish of sixty communicants, with a church. Williamsburg, the capital, with its House of Burgesses and growing college, attracting thither the wisdom and fashion of the Dominion, was scarce a dozen miles away. Until Cornwallis stationed himself there, Yorktown had escaped the ravages of war on the Virginia coast, and after its surrender it still contained about seventy houses, not more than two or three having been wholly destroyed. Fifteen years later it had not extended its limits, and we find its population, more than half of which was composed of negroes, numbering about eight hundred souls. The last war, it need hardly be said, left it in a depressed condition, almost beyond recovery, and to-day it contains not more than three hundred inhabitants, among whom are to be found but few descendants of the ancient proprietors. In fact, it seems to be the lot of Yorktown that the more it becomes a historical spot, the less it becomes anything else.—Harper's Magazine for August.

A sudden liking for the study of natural history has evidently animated the providers of gentlemen's furnishing goods, this season. By taking advantage of the attractions offered in the shop windows, a young gentleman may adorn himself with a calico shirt profusely sprinkled with cockroaches, a neck-scarf with insane swine rushing violently over it, a cane with a chicken escaping its shell for a handle, and a general assortment of beasts of the field, birds of the air and creeping things upon handkerchiefs, scarf-pins and sleeve-buttons, with which decorations he will appear more like an advance agent of Barnum's allied shows than a resident of a commonplace community.

HOW THEY RAISE FAMILIES IN TENNESSEE.

About two weeks since, says the Louisville Courier-Journal, a physician living in Jackson county, Tenn., was called at 11 o'clock at night to preside at a child-birth about to take place in his neighborhood. After the child was born the doctor became convinced that there were twins, and the woman was soon delivered of the second child, both girls. Convinced, of course, that there was no further need of his assistance, the physician prepared to take his leave. Before reaching his horse, however, at the gate, he was recalled and delivered the woman of another girl baby. Again the physician took his leave and again he was recalled, bringing to light another girl baby. This was considered remarkable, and the physician was greatly puzzled over the matter. He, however, congratulated the husband on his good fortune and departed for home. He had not gone more than half a mile before he was overtaken by the excited husband of the woman, who in breathless haste informed him that there was still another child to be born. Hastening back, the physician arrived in time to aid in delivering the woman of her fifth child. The physician was then prevailed on by the husband and father to stay during the remainder of the night. He was not slow to accept the invitation, and sat down to await developments. In the course of fifteen or twenty minutes he was again called to the bedside of the woman, and very soon the sixth child was breathing the breath of life. Morning dawned, and the doctor took his leave. Having had no sleep during the night, he threw himself across the bed on his arrival home, and was soon fast asleep. About 8 o'clock he was aroused by his wife, who stated that Mr. B— was at the gate and wanted to see him immediately.

"What's the matter now?" asked the doctor.

"Mary appears to be going to—you know," replied Mr. B.

"What! another one?" exclaimed the doctor, excitedly.

"That's it," said Mr. B—, a smile spreading his mouth from ear to ear.

The doctor mounted his horse and was soon at the house of Mr. B—. He was too late, however, to be of any service, as the seventh child, a girl, was born just a few minutes previous to his arrival. The doctor remained about the premises the remainder of the day, but his services were not again needed.

The seven babies, while not large, weighing from four to five pounds each, appear to be healthy, well-developed children. The occurrence has created considerable excitement in the neighborhood, and the people for miles around flock to see the woman and her babies. The husband is described as being of small stature, in fact, exceedingly thin, while the wife is said to be strong and healthy. The physicians are considerably excited over the affair. A most singular feature of the children is that all of them have blue eyes, and so closely resemble each other that it is hard to tell "which from t'other."

A GOOD SUGGESTION TO HOUSEKEEPERS.—No one knows until she has tried it, says an experienced housewife to one of our contemporaries, how much she may change the aspect of things about the house by using a little varnish. On a sunshiny day take the old chairs and tables out on the porch or by an open door, and, after thoroughly dusting and wiping off with a damp cloth, apply a thin coat of varnish, and so cover up scratches and marred spots of all kinds. It will dry in a very short time, and you will be surprised to see how much good you have done. A flannel cloth, with a very little linseed oil, is good to rub furniture with, but the greatest care must be exercised to prevent any oil being left on the wood to attract dust. It must be rubbed until you would not know, except by the improved appearance, that any oil had been used.

A Christian's amusements must have nothing in them which may be likely to excite any of the tempers which it is his daily task to subdue; any of the passions which it is his coustant business to keep in order. His chosen amusements must not deliberately add to the "weight" which he is commanded to "lay aside;" they should not imitate the besetting sin against which he is struggling; they should not obstruct that spiritual-mindedness which he is told is life and peace; they should not inflame that lust of the flesh, that lust of the eye and that pride of life which he is forbidden to gratify.—Hannah More.

A PLOT to kill the Czar of Russia has come to light by the suicide on the 13th of a young student who had been chosen by the nihiltsts to make the attempt on that day, but who preferred to take his own life. He revealed the names of his 19 associates, who have been arrested; but others will stand ready to take their places. The new Czar has not a very cheering prospect before him.

GUITEAU'S jailer at Washington has been instructed to keep him very closely guarded, and to allow no person to converse with him. No action will be taken on his case until the meeting of the grand jury, which has adjourned to Sept. 12th. It is reported that Guiteau now regrets his attempt to kill the President, and thinks he must have been mistaken in the idea that he had an inspiration to remove him. He says: "It is no use for any one to try to kill him now, for if I could not do it with the chance I had, no bullet can do it."

WARNER MILLER was elected Senator at Albany last Saturday for the long term, to succeed Platt, but Lapham still lacks the four votes necessary to elect him as Conkling's successor, and the disgraceful strife still goes on, the Conkling men feeling very ugly, and apparently determined that no other man shall be elected. They have made an attempt to form an alliance with the Democrats, but it was rejected, so they sullenly persist in their dog-in-the-manger policy, and there is no telling when the break will come.

PRESIDENT GARFIELD is steadily improving, and there is now every prospect of his recovery. Aside from a slight relapse on Monday, caused by overeating, he has shown steady progress toward convalescence, and on Tuesday he sat up in bed some 20 minutes. On Thursday a shred of clothing was discharged from the wound, much to the gratification of the physicians, who feared that some might be lodged in the wound, which would prove irritating. The President is anxious to get out of the White House, and he will probably take a sea trip next month, as soon as he is able to be moved.

As an instrument of destruction, the toy pistol bids fair to rival its full-grown brother, if it is given half a chance. Its use on the Fourth of July has resulted in the death of 13 boys at Baltimore from lockjaw, induced by slight wounds from these innocent weapons, while 13 others are suffering from the same cause. There were also 11 deaths at Washington, three at Rochester, N. Y., and a number in other parts of the country, all from the same cause. The doctors are puzzled that lockjaw should follow such slight wounds, and it is thought the powder in the cartridges must contain poisonous ingredients. However this may be, it is high time that parents should see to it that their boys have nothing to do with so dangerous a toy, and its sale in the future ought to be prohibited.

CONGRESSMAN ROBINSON of Chicopee is the subject of an extended sketch in the Boston Herald of last Saturday, as one of the "coming men" of this State. His record in the Legislature and in Congress is reviewed and deservedly complimented, and the Herald comes to the conclusion, reached a long time ago by Mr. Robinson's constituents, that he is destined to occupy a commanding position in public life. Says the writer: "His strong hold upon one of the most critical and intelligent of American constituencies justifies the anticipation that he will continue to serve the State in the national House for years to come, if not, in the contingencies of political life, called to a senatorship or to the Governor's chair. The capability for progression which Mr. Robinson has shown since his start in public life is ground for believing that he is one of the foremost of our 'coming men.'"

GOV. ROBERTS of Texas has a remarkable conscience. In reply to the proposition from Gov. Foster of Ohio that the Governors of the different States unite in appointing a day of thanksgiving for the recovery of the President, he tardily responds as follows:

"My failure to answer you favorably is not on account of any want of sympathy for the President, but because I do not deem it consistent with my position as Governor to issue a proclamation directing religious services where church and State are and ought to be kept separate in their functions. I doubt not the people of Texas have as strongly wished and will as devoutly pray for the recovery of the President as any people in the United States."

The Governor is correct in his estimate of the Texas people, who are quite indignant over his letter, and propose to observe the day which shall be set apart by the other States. The Governor's conscience needs toning up. It is too delicate by half.

Mississippi County, Mo., is the great watermelon region of the world. Over 4000 acres are this year devoted to watermelons alone, and the yield is about a car load an acre, so that 4000 car loads will be shipped.

Thirty thousand citizens of Georgia have petitioned the Legislature, asking that the question of the sale of intoxicating liquors may be submitted to a vote of the people.

LETTER FROM SPRINGFIELD.

Midsummer Politics—Mayor Haile's Prospects of a Re-election—A Possible Competitor—The Liquor Licenses—Civil Service Reform Notes—The Summer Vacations.

Correspondence of the Journal.

SPRINGFIELD, JULY 20th, 1881.

It is early to begin to talk city politics for the Fall campaign, but as the heat of Summer increases some of our discontented bosses get together in back rooms and cool places, compare notes and look over the situation. Mayor Haile has done so much, and is in the main so popular, it would appear to be hard sledding to get up much enthusiasm against him; there are those, however, who say he must go. It is true that the Mayor sat heavily down upon those instrumental in presenting his name in the caucus that nominated him last Fall; he beat his predecessor several lengths in ignoring the hand that made him; but the trouble was, the clique that crowded him to the front possessed such poor material for the offices at his command, he felt compelled to select from the opposition, or rather from those with whom he was the second choice for mayor. The prospect is that if re-elected it will be by the votes of those who last year wanted the other man. That is, the play presented at ex-Mayor Power's second term is to be repeated; the party against him at the first election, is the one to elect him the second time. It is presumed that the Republican caucus will nominate Mayor Haile without opposition, and that he will receive the support of both the Republican and Union newspapers. If the opposition to his re-election takes definite form, it will be in the nature of a citizen's movement, with R. F. Hawkins for standard bearer. "Dick" has been held in abeyance for several years, with large promises that when the right time comes his claims shall be considered; reminding me of a fellow I know who worked several Summers for a neighbor, who at the commencement of the season would agree to give him eight dollars a month anyway, and ten if he did well. At last the servant declared that he would have ten dollars next Summer whether he did well or not. Possibly Mr. Hawkins may think he has been kept on promises long enough, and propose to sail in now anyway. He has the makings for an admirable mayor; he is a good business man, a sound Republican; and were he to run against the present mayor it would not be hard for his friends to enlist a large following. As against Mayor Haile, with no Democrat in the field, Mr. Hawkins would take the Democracy by the foretop, which with the soreheads would make quite an army.

There is a growing sentiment that the restricted license system of the present city government is a sham, and possibly this will be the issue at the next election. It is not exactly the square thing to require a license from half the liquor sellers, and allow those to whom they refuse one to sell without it. The city government should either license all who apply, or protect those who pay for the privilege against those who do not. Whether the present government is doing what it can in this direction is the question at issue. But this aside, Mayor Haile has done remarkably well; he is enthusiastic in watching the city's needs, and has an intelligent idea of what is necessary to be done. His enthusiasm no doubt prevented the Connecticut Legislature from granting the privilege of damming the river at Enfield Falls at its last session, and in devotion to what he regards the best interest of his constituents, no mayor before him has done better. It would seem unwise, therefore, to think of throwing away his experience the past year and breaking in a new man just at present; but there is no knowing what people will do when they get their backs up.

Political reform receives a determined setback in the office of the Republican, by the election of Miller to succeed Senator Platt, in New York, and the half-breeds are soundly berated because they have so quickly shown that they are human, after having been eulogized as angelic. The civil service bantling has been doing nicely since the attempted murder of President Garfield, but this relapse in New York threatens serious, though not fatal, consequences. The editor of this journal is of sanguine temperament; he expects to live to see the dawning millenium, when the lion and the lamb will lie down together, and the party in power cheerfully pass over the most lucrative offices of the government to the minority. Poor fellow, I fear his sands of life will run out before this comes to pass. Human nature will undergo a fearful somersault before the day of ideal civil service reform is ushered in. It is funny, though, to see how the crazy brain of Guiteau is held responsible for the "spoils system" by our modern reformers. They might as well make the demented Daniel Pratt, of presidential aspirations, responsible for the comet. The time will never come in this republic when we shall not have political parties, and while we have parties the affairs of the government will be administered by the majority party. If the day prayed for ever comes, when a man in office shall feel that his place is secure so long as he does his work well, however desirable in some respects such a thing might be, it will be after a Republican form of government has passed away. With a monarch on the throne such a state might be conceived, at least, while the monarch could manage to keep his head on his shoulders, but not so long as the ruler is elected by the people.

The annual exodus, when our citizens hie away to the mountains and the shore for recreation and a change of air, has not set in as early as usual this season. But few are missed among us, and with the advent of dog-days it is expected the Saratoga trunks will be hauled out for their Summer service. More of our people are crossing the ocean for their vacation this Summer than usual; the quick time and low fare makes an ocean voyage very popular, and as returning tourists tell of the wonders of the Old World, it is not strange that the interest to take the trip increases, with those blessed with the necessary means. A large portion of the pleasure of Summer travel, however, is in anticipation and imagination. Really, the Summer is the best season in the year to stay at home, if one is hunting for comfort. But since anticipation enters largely into all our joys, it is well perhaps to think over the enjoyment that suffocating cars, small, ill ventilated rooms, tallow candles and husk mattresses, with the cobs on, are expected to bring. * *

New Ulm, a Minnesota town of 3500 inhabitants, was almost annihilated by two clashing tornadoes last week Friday. In a few moments, more than a hundred buildings were destroyed, at least fourteen persons killed and many wounded. The damage is estimated at from $350,000 to $500,000.

Mrs. Platte of Louisville, Ky., who fell on a stove, burned all the flesh from one side of her head, and scorched part of her skull so badly that it began to crumble, still lives, and the injured bones seem to be undergoing a process of restoration.

LOCAL NOTICES.

The oil stove that caught fire last week wasn't "Monitor." It never acts that way. Moral—Buy the "Monitor." The best is the cheapest.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

New moon next Tuesday.

The flies are growing sticky.

Now for dog days. They begin next Monday.

John Foster's residence is receiving a fresh coat of paint.

Smith & Co. have a new awning over the front of their grocery store.

George Griffin has broken ground for a new house on his Park street lot.

Miss Mary W. Foster has gone to Easthampton, L. I., for the Summer.

Rev. C. R. Tenney of Mattapoisett will preach at St. Paul's church to-morrow.

J. F. Morton of Newton Center will preach at the Baptist church Sunday afternoon.

Mrs. H. G. Cross has gone to Lanesboro, for an extended visit in the Berkshire air.

G. L. Hitchcock has returned this week from a ten days' trip to his home in Maine.

Mrs. H. S. Davis is just back from a four weeks' visit at Mr. Gilbert Harrington's, up in the Berkshire hills.

A party of citizens enjoyed a ride in Weeks's barge Monday evening, followed by a supper at the Weeks House.

Miss Kate Howe is at New Bedford for a month's rest. Walter Gamwell takes her place in the telegraph office during her absence.

The receipts at the post office for the past quarter were as follows: Stamps, $996.37; box rents, $44; waste paper and twine, $2.50; total, $1042.87.

There is to be a trot on the park next week Saturday afternoon, between horses owned by R. L. Goddard, J. F. Holbrook and Joseph Thompson, mile heats, best 2 in 3.

F. F. Marcy is building two double-tenement houses at Thorndike, each 29 x 41, for the Thorndike Co., and has the contract for a two-story house 32x43 for the same company.

The Ladies' Benevolent Sewing Society of the Congregational church will meet with Mrs. Charles Holbrook next Thursday afternoon and evening. Ice cream will be served in the evening.

M. E. Daniels and wife, and W. C. Hitchcock, go up to Newell's Pond to-day, to camp out for a season, taking along with them a newly-constructed boat, in which to do their sailing and fishing.

J. G. Tuttle, for some time clerk in Phinney's market, has become salesman in Park's grocery store, and is succeeded in the market by Frank Allen. Frank Davis, late clerk for Mr. Parks, has moved to Goshen.

Main street has been cleared of stones again this week, much to the comfort of those who have had to ride over them. This is a job that needs to be done about once a month, to keep the street in proper condition.

Blankets have been necessary for comfort some nights the past week. And then again, on some other nights the temperature has been such that coverlets made of airy nothingness have been somewhat burdensome.

Just try this recipe, if you want something nice for breakfast: Two-thirds cup of sugar and 2 or 3 eggs beaten together, 1 cup of sweet milk, 4 of flour, 3 teaspoonfuls baking powder, 1 pint blueberries or huckleberries. Bake in gem irons.

New floor beams are being put in the south end of the hospital at the State Primary School, and a new floor is to be laid throughout. The grade of the grounds at the south end of the building is also being lowered, in order to allow the needed ventilation under the floor.

Five carloads of Norwich people passed through here Wednesday, on an excursion to Lake Pleasant. About 150 attended the Warren excursion to Shelter Island Thursday, the rain in the morning doubtless keeping many at home who would otherwise have attended. Only one or two from this place joined the party.

Dr. Cross has procured one of Morrison's patent chairs for use in his dental rooms, which, with its numerous double and twisted joints, enables him to easily place a patient in any desired position, at any height, thereby adding greatly to the facility and ease of operating on the teeth, as well being very comfortable for the patient.

Several of Sheriff Northrop's friends met at his house Wednesday evening to help him celebrate his birthday. In order to impress the occasion still more indelibly upon his memory, they combined forces during the evening, and after a sharp tussle succeeded in "flooring" him and marking off the number of years upon his person in the good old-fashioned way. "Herb." gave them a hard pull, though, and they found it no easy matter to thus trifle with the majesty of the law.

W. N. Flynt & Co. of Monson have begun work this week on a new dam on the hill west of the State Primary School, for the purpose of increasing the water supply at that institution. The drinking water has for many years been taken from the "west spring," so called, on this hill, but the supply has for a long time been unequal to the demand. The new dam will be some 150 feet long, and 18 feet high at the highest point, and will make a reservoir of from 1,000,000 to 1,200,000 gallons capacity, while the water will be conveyed to the institution in a 4-inch iron pipe, in place of the present 1½ inch lead pipe, thus insuring an ample supply of excellent water. The dam will cost about $7000.

A Grand Army Post, No. 107, was organized in this place Monday evening, some 40 members of the Wilcox Post of Springfield coming out to exemplify the work at Wales Hall and install the officers, who are as follows: C. P. Stone, Commander; H. R. Stoughton, S. V. C.; H. H. Paine, J. V. C.; John H. Smith, Adjt.; C. W. Cross, Quartermaster; Dr. Wm. Holbrook, Surgeon; H. E. W. Clark, Chaplain; Chas. Murdock, Officer of the Day; E. C. Sexton, Officer of the Guard; Wm. T. Griswold, Sergeant Major; D. W. Taft, Quartermaster Sergeant. The post starts off promisingly with 28 members, and this number will doubtless be increased by additions from the neighboring towns.

SHALL WE HAVE A GAS COMPANY?

Unless superior advantages of location, and rare facilities for the transaction of business, are utterly delusive as promoters of municipal thrift, Palmer is bound to grow. At present, surely, the signs of the times all point in this direction. The record of the past ten years is one of steady improvement from first to last. A stranger passing through our streets to-day would see on every hand indications of prosperity which could not fail to impress him in a most favorable manner. Our village is fast extending itself in every direction, and many of our recently erected dwellings must be recognized as perfect models of elegance, comfort and taste. Numerous branches of industry have been established, and there are unmistakable indications that they have all come to stay. With a host of enterprising men like those engaged in the carpet, straw and foundry business among our manufacturers, a score or more of energetic, money-making merchants, and other citizens of large means whose public spirit is in no danger of going to seed, we may safely judge of the future by what we have witnessed in the past.

We have now reached that stage when some attention to our needs as a community is imperatively demanded. The JOURNAL has often called attention to the pressing need of a larger supply of water, and one that could be made available for the extinguishment of fires, to the most disastrous of which our village is now constantly exposed. This is a matter, however, the grave importance of which is so universally recognized that there is no occasion for its being further discussed. Another and kindred necessity is a supply of gas for lighting our houses and places of business. In this particular also we are far behind our neighboring villages. Steps are now being taken to introduce this convenience among us. The National Petroleum and Water Gas Co. of New York has recently made a survey of the place, and estimates that $25,000 will construct the works and lay the necessary pipe to supply us with gas sufficient to meet the demand of a number of years. This company has a first-class reputation, having constructed its works in innumerable cities and towns, and given entire satisfaction in every instance. In the matter of convenience and economy, gas produced by this system is said to easily stand at the head. It costs less than half the expense of coal gas, and can be used for light or heat without emitting any offensive odor. The company proposing to put in the works has so much confidence in its success that it would be willing to furnish the entire capital were it not for a desire to interest our citizens and thus insure a more general use of the gas. As it is, it proposes to organize a company with a capital of $30,000, only 75 per cent being paid up, of which capital it has already subscribed for $10,000. If in addition to the benefits it will confer upon the village it can also be made to pay handsomely as an investment, there ought to be no doubt whatever as to the result of the undertaking.

This is certainly a matter in which our people can afford to take an active interest, so far at least as to give it a careful investigation and test its merits to their entire satisfaction. If it should prove all that is claimed for it, its introduction would add an attractive feature to our village as a place of residence, and materially enhance the value of our real estate.

WALES.

The Wales base ball nine play the Palmer nine to-day at Palmer.

THREE RIVERS.

There will be preaching in the Baptist church Sunday morning by J. F. Morton, of Newton Center. Sabbath school as usual.

WILBRAHAM.

Tax payers are happy over a tax rate of only $7.50.

Prof. C. H. Raymond is camping out at Lake George.

Dr. Colt and wife of Brooklyn, N. Y., are visiting in town.

BONDVILLE.

There will be a lawn party at Abraham Murdock's next Wednesday afternoon.

The selectmen of Belchertown have laid out a new street from the depot to the Belchertown road, through the old Canterbury farm, and also accepted the new street west of the depot.

BELCHERTOWN.

Quite a goodly number of Summer visitors are in town.

Calvin Bridgman and wife have gone to Saco, Me., for a few weeks of sea air. Mr. Bridgman is quite feeble in health, but it is hoped by his many friends that he may return to his home restored to health.

There was a grand display of fireworks on the park last Monday evening. They were purchased by M. P. Walker for the evening of the 4th, but on account of the sad news regarding the President were kept until this week.

Jefferson Clough of this town, but of late superintendent of the Remington works at Ilion, N. Y., has made a contract with the Chinese government to superintend an arsenal at Shanghai the next three years. He will leave here some time in the Fall.

The taxes this year amount to $15,687, the rate being $16.40 on $1000. The following persons pay over $100: A. W. Stacy $220, Myron P. Walker $191, W. H. Bridgman $141, C. L. Randall $132, Lyman Sabin $125, Freeman Alden $114, Dorman Sanford $111, Tertius Cowles $109, L. D. Fuller $108, Jefferson Clough $106, Calvin Lane $103, Willis Phelps of Springfield $102, Harrison Root $101.

WARREN.

Business at the boot shops and also at the pump works is quite brisk.

About a hundred tickets were sold for the excursion to Shelter Island.

Mrs. E. H. Hitchcock is spending a few weeks with her sister in Palmer.

The employes of the B. & A. R. R. at this station have been examined for color blindness.

Mr. Luther Bridges died very suddenly on the 20th, it is supposed of paralysis of the heart.

The families of Dr. Buck and Henry Greene are spending a month at Hampton Beach.

The telephone company have extended their wires to this place, with an office at E. Fairbank's store.

The new iron bridge, which the B. & A. R. R. are putting on in place of the old wooden one at the lower village, is nearing completion.

D. G. Ashley, formerly a local preacher, but now of the Knowles Pump Works, has commenced holding preaching services on the Sabbath at the little church at West Brimfield.

INDIAN ORCHARD.

The Orchard is rather sickly this month.

There is some talk of a celebration here if the President recovers.

Some of the Orchard and Jenksville young men contemplate an athletic club.

Some badly needed repairs on the west end of Main street, near the bridge, have lately been made.

Work on the Chapman Valve Mfg. Co's. new brass foundry is but slowly progressing, owing to the scarcity of masons.

A letter came to the post office the other day addressed to "Indian Orchard, Ludlow County, Mass." Ludlow will put on airs over it, most likely.

Andrew Hawk, a Swede working for a Mr. Lynch on the road to Springfield, became insane last Sunday evening and was lodged over night in the lock-up and taken to the city in the morning. He has previously on several occasions shown symptoms of an unsound mind.

It is a wonder that so many of our young men are drawn into the meshes of the artful beauties, when it is known that some of the girls who work for a living pay $50 apiece for satin enough to make one dress. "We boys" will, if such things are the rule, be compelled to give up all dreams of married life till our ship comes in. "Us girls" should take warning accordingly.

MONSON.

Has our village improvement society expired?

Geo. B. Walker and family of Florida were in town this week.

Moulton's ice cream rooms are quite popular these warm evenings.

Rev. E. H. Byington has gone to Underhill, N. H., on a three weeks' vacation.

Rev. Mr. Sumner will occupy the pulpit of the Congregational church next Sunday.

Erastus Davis has bought of Joseph Mullen 15 acres of land and the buildings thereon for $1100.

G. W. Farrington, L. C. Flynt and H. C. Norcross made the leading scores in glass ball shooting this week.

A patent suit has just been decided in the U. S. Court in favor of Merrick, Fay & Co. The amount involved was quite large.

If some of our street lamps were lighted these dark nights, they would be appreciated by those who have occasion to be out late.

W. N. Flynt & Co. have the contract for the stone work on the new mill, 176 by 54 feet, to be built between Warren and West Warren.

Messrs. Franklin & Potter are meeting with a deal of success in introducing their pianos and organs, and received a new invoice of instruments this week.

The New Orleans Minstrels had a fair house at Central Hall last week Friday evening, and gave a good entertainment. Their brass band was very fine, and the clog dancing and tumbling special features.

Rev. A. I. Dutton of East Longmeadow has been elected a trustee of the academy in place of Rev. Mr. Kittredge, resigned. C. W. Holmes, Jr., Alfred Norcross, Edward Morris, E. H. Byington and C. F. Cushman have been appointed a committee to solicit subscriptions for an increase of the academy's permanent funds.

WARE AND VICINITY.

Poll taxes $2.50, or $2.40 if paid before August 1st.

Work has commenced on Mr. Corser's house on Foundry avenue.

Dr. W. F. Davis, a Ware boy, now located in Adams, has been visiting his friends here the past week.

The upper story of the old market building moved to North street is being fitted up for two tenements.

There was a slight fire in the gas house of No. 4 mill at Gilbertville Wednesday night; but little damage done.

The building for the gun manufactory is completed. The engine and boiler and some of the machinery will be in place this week.

Rev. Mr. Field, who has been in Georgia the past season for his health, has been spending a few days with his friends in Ware.

Geo. H. Coney, in addition to his large sales of lumber for building purposes, cut up over forty thousand feet last month for boxes, etc.

One of our former townsmen, H. M. Coney, who was a member of the revision committee of the Legislature, received for his services $130, and mileage fees of $20.

H. E. Johnson came near being wrecked on his way to Gilbertville a few days since, the horse becoming frightened at the road repairers' team and springing forward, breaking the carriage somewhat, but no one was hurt.

The garden of Daniel Ward was visited by thieves a few nights since, who not only stole his peas and beans, but destroyed the vines. It would seem as though it was time some active means were taken to suppress such rascality.

Charles Phipps, who has sold his place here, is soon to remove to New Salem, where he has purchased a small farm. Mr. Phipps has lived here for 56 years, and has become so identified with the interests of the town that he will be greatly missed should he move permanently away.

Mrs. J. W. Robinson and a lady friend had a narrow escape from an accident a few days since. While riding across the bridge about two miles south of the village a plank broke, letting both the horse's fore legs through at the same time, while the ends of the plank flew up in an unpleasant manner. The horse was however a gentle one, and quietly settling back upon its haunches reared out and went on, without a scratch to horse or carriage.

C. C. Hitchcock returned from his extended western tour, looking brown and hearty, on Wednesday morning. During his absence he made a canoe voyage of about 150 miles down the Wisconsin river, which is said to abound in some of the most picturesque, romantic and wonderful scenery in the Northwest. A package of ferns for the microscope, from Cold Water Canyon, Dells of the Wisconsin, were duly appreciated by the editor of the STANDARD.

We clip the following from the Brockton Daily Enterprise: "The school committee have decided to engage J. F. Lewis of Ware as principal of the Whitman Grammar School, giving him the preference among the 14 candidates who applied for the position. * * * * * * The committee believe they have made what will prove to have been an excellent choice." We think so too, as Mr. Lewis is one of our most wide awake, energetic young men, and we congratulate him on securing so good a position in this growing young city.

Cummings, Carter & Co's. market was burglarized Wednesday night, and about $300 in money taken. The party effected an entrance through the bulkhead doors by breaking a pane of glass, reaching through and unbarring the door. They then went up stairs to the safe in the office, which was found unlocked, the lock not injured, however. In the morning a paper pattern, similar to the key of the safe, was found in the key hole, and another upon the floor. They took the money compartment, which was locked, into the basement, where it was burst open with a hatchet. The question was asked in the morning, "What do we have a night police for, if not to watch the places of business upon the streets?" A bystander quickly answered, "To draw the salary." It is said that our police cannot be everywhere at once. This is true, but he need not stop, when on his beat, for long conversations with questionable characters. He need not frequent the liquor saloons, except in the way of the discharge of his duty, and he can hardly have the face to make arrests for offences if he were guilty of the same himself.

DEDICATION OF THE NEW LIBRARY BUILDING.

Tuesday was a gala day for Ware, on account of the dedication of the new library building, the munificent gift of two of our liberal-hearted citizens. The building is 45 by 50 feet, with gables on Main and Church streets and in the rear, some 40 feet high, with a tower on the Main and Church street corner 14 feet square and 70 feet high. It is built of common selected brick, laid in red mortar, with trimmings of Portland brown stone, Longmeadow freestone and Philadelphia moulded brick; and is, we believe, conceded by all to be the finest library building of any outside the cities in this part of the country. On entering the building the first thing that attracts the attention is the counter, running across the entire room about ten feet from the front, with the desk for the librarian near the center and the cases for the books just back of it. Only half the number of cases that can be placed upon the floor are in position, these being sufficient to hold about 8000 volumes, or nearly double the present number in the library. On the right of the entrance is a waiting room, 12 by 17 feet, with comfortable seats arranged around it, and just in the rear of this is a room 12 by 14, in which are kept the books of reference, with a library table supplied with writing material and paper for notes, and seats where any one may readily consult the various encyclopædias and other books which are not allowed to be taken from the building. Over these two rooms is one large room, from which there are two openings into the main room with circular balconies in front of them. This room, it is suggested, may be used as an art gallery for paintings or statuary. On the left of the main entrance is the natural history room, 12 by 15 feet, which it is expected will contain a collection of nearly or quite all the birds of this locality, as well as shells, geological specimens, and other works of nature. Over this room is a straight balcony, forming a gallery 10 by 30 feet, which may also be used as an extension of the art gallery already mentioned. The large room, 40 by 36, in the basement, intended as a reading room, which may be reached from the outside on the front, as well as by stairs from the librarian's room, is not furnished as yet. The whole interior is elegantly finished in brown ash, the main room being heavily trussed with the same material. The frescoing is simple but tasteful, and the whole appearance is one of refined taste and harmony. During the afternoon the building was thronged by our citizens and invited guests, who were enthusiastic in their praises or free with their criticisms as their tastes differed. There has been much delay in the finishing of the furniture and surroundings, and throughout the afternoon the click of the hammers of the workmen was heard upon the fence surrounding the building, which, by the way, is one of utility and symmetry.

At eight o'clock in the evening the dedicatory exercises were held in the East Congregational church, which was well filled by an appreciative audience. A platform was erected in front of the pulpit, which was completely hidden by a mass of tropical and other choice plants, which were continued across the entire back of the platform, the front also being adorned with plants and ferns. The pulpit was occupied by Rev. A. E. P. Perkins, D. D., Rev. W. G. Tuttle, Hon. Wm. Hyde and F. D. Gilmore, Esq., president of the library association. The exercises were opened by an organ duet by Messrs. Geo. G. Hall and Edward N. Anderson, followed by prayer by Rev. W. G. Tuttle. There was some misunderstanding in reference to the address by Calvin Hitchcock, Esq., his name having been put upon the programme without his knowledge or consent, and he was not present at the exercises. The president of the association read the letter he wrote the association offering them the lot of land on which the building now stands; and also the letter from Mr. Hyde, offering the funds for the erection of the building. Mr. Hyde then made a few remarks on the presentation of the building, saying that he was formerly as modest as Mr. Hitchcock, but he had outgrown it and now he hoped to meet his fellow citizens face to face. He gave a brief history of the old manufacturers' and mechanics' library, which was organized in 1824 and continued in use until 1861, but for want of a home or any suitable place for it to be kept it was passed around from one place to another until it was a wonder that any of the books were left. But at the incorporation of the present association in 1873 there were found to be about 400 volumes, which were passed over to the care of the present association. He referred to the thorough manner in which the building had been put up and spoke in the highest terms of commendation of the building committee, who have spent much time in looking after the details. He also spoke of the satisfaction he felt that the library of the Young Men's Association now had a home, an abiding place, around which the interests of the members and the public might cluster.

Fred. D. Gilmore then responded, giving some account of the origin of the Young Men's Library Association, which began in a debating society "formed in boyish sport," but by the hard work of its members, done however in a spirit of genuine love for the work, has grown to its present magnitude. He also mentioned the fact that the general law in regard to public libraries, passed in 1872, was based on the petition of this society for a special act of incorporation permitting the town to appropriate money to support a library remaining under the control of the society, provided its use was made free to the citizens of the town. Letters were read from the following invited guests who were unable to be present: Governor John D. Long, Councilor R. D. Wood and J. T. Stevens, Esq.

Rev. A. E. P. Perkins, D. D., then gave the address, in which he alluded to the fact that we could, in the books of the best authors, seem to hold converse with them in their best moods, without danger of being repulsed by them, and that we could bring the interview to a close whenever we wished without the fear of giving offense. He also spoke of the various works which should be contained in a public library—those that would instruct, cultivate, promote morality, and also works that would afford recreation, but the latter not in such quantities as to crowd out those of a higher aim. He spoke of the great care that had been exercised in the selection of our books, and with gratitude that the selections had been in so good hands, whose aim had been to have only that which should be pure and ennobling upon the shelves. In speaking of the benefits of this building to the community, he said no building for any business purpose could have been placed upon this corner that would have so increased the value of real estate in the town as this. The exercises then closed with the singing of the dedication hymn, written for the occasion by Edward N. Anderson.

Jeremiah Winchell, who last Winter visited the house of James H. Bunce in Egremont for the purpose of ravishing Harriet Morrison, and killed her while struggling with Bunce over a gun the latter had seized for protection, was on Thursday sentenced to 7½ years in State prison.

Six desperadoes boarded a train on the Chicago & Rock Island Railroad at Winston stasion, Mo., last week Friday night, murdered the conductor and a passenger, and robbed the safe in the express car of a large sum.

The men of Nebraska will vote next year on a constitutional amendment allowing women to vote, and a systematic agitation of the woman suffrage question has already been commenced there.

The queen of a band of gypsies encamped at Erie, Penn., owns railroad stock, a farm near Dayton, O., and horses worth $60,000. Her name is Amelia Wells and her age is 60 years.

NEWS FRAGMENTS.

August Magazines.

The Midsummer Holiday Scribner justifies its title, no less than six articles being directly adapted to the season. "The Isle of Peace," by Susan Coolidge of Newport, is a description of that most elegant of watering places, including "things new and old," from the year-old Casino and the fox (or rather anise-seed) hunting, back to Bishop Berkely. In "By the Sea in Normandy," we have by contrast a French coast resort—Etretat—the daily life of which is lightly chronicled by Mary G. Loring. Another timely article is "Ice-Yachting on the Hudson," the most experienced ice-yachters being agreed that no better season could be chosen for this sport than from the 15th of July to the 1st of September. A nice sultry day, with the thermometer in the nineties, is the most enjoyable time either to take the trip or to read about it. An out-of-the-way spot in Louisiana, on the Gulf of Mexico—the island of Petite Anse—is described under the title of "A Little World," by A. C. Redwood, who also illustrates it. This little community is noted, among many things, for "the smallest newspaper in the world," of which a facsimile is given. Mr. Schuyler's "Peter the Great" has its usual quota of text and pictures. This history will be concluded in the October number. The fiction includes the first half of the new story by the author of "An Earnest Trifler,"—"The Daughter of Henry Sage Rittenhouse," a happy title, which will be found singularly appropriate. A three-part story, by Mr. Boyesen, also begins, with the piquant name of "Queen Titania." "The Village Convict," a short story of unusual force and feeling, is contributed by a new writer, C. H. White, and five more of "Uncle Remus's" amusing fables of negro folk-lore complete the "Rainy Day" which the "little boy" has been spending with that veracious Æsop. For the essays we have the first article of E. C. Stedman's important series on "Poetry in America," and the second of Albert Stickney's papers on "The People's Problem," which current events continue to make timely. Among those who contribute poems are H. H., Dr. J. G. Holland, R. W. Gilder, and Roger Riordon, the artist. The other departments of the magazine contain their usual quota of interesting matter.

The August Atlantic is specially noteworthy as containing the first chapters of "Dr. Breen's Practice," a serial story by Mr. Howells, which will continue through several numbers. It has all the charm of description and felicity of characterization for which Mr. Howells's best stories are distinguished, and promises to be no less delightful than "The Lady of the Aroostook." Mrs. Mary Hallock Foote contributes to this number of the Atlantic the first part of a story entitled "In Exile." It is to be completed in the September number, and those who have been delighted by her marvelous designs for Longfellow's "Skeleton in Armor," the "Hanging of the Crane," and Hawthorne's "Scarlet Letter," will be glad to see that she is as skillful with the pen as with the pencil. Mr. Stedman prints here his striking poem, "Corda Concordia," read at the opening of the session of the Summer School of Philosophy at Concord, July 11th. Mr. Whipple contributes an exceedingly interesting paper, "Reeollections of James T. Fields." John Durand writes an interesting chapter on "French Domestic Life and its Lessons;" Richard Grant White furnishes an interesting paper "On the Acting of Iago;" Octave Thanet writes a second paper on the "Indoor Pauper;" Rev. James Freeman Clarke reviews Parton's "Life of Voltaire," which he pronounces "a standard work of great value, a storehouse of facts for the history of Voltaire and his time.—Henry James's "Portrait of a Lady" is continued through four engaging chapters; M. G. Van Rensselaer writes of "The New York Art Season;" there are poems by H. H. and Edgar Fawcett; a review by Mr. F. H. Underwood of Ward's English Poets; some excellent short essays in the Contributors' Club; and a chapter of notes on the important books of the month. Houghton, Mifflin & Co., Boston.

The Nursery for August comes to hand promptly as usual, and with all the attractiveness ordinarily found in this most charming magazine for the young. With its high tone, its neat appearance and great diversity of reading matter, the children must be hard to please who are not satisfied with the monthly treat the Nursery regularly presents its readers. Published by Nursery Publishing Company, 36 Bromfield St., Boston. Price $1.50 a year.

The Story of the Gate.

Across the pathway, myrtle-fringed,
Under the maple, it was hinged—
The little wooden gate;
'Twas there, within the quiet gloam,
When I had strolled with Nelly home,
I used to pause and wait

Before I said to her good night,
Yet loth to leave the winsome sprite
Within the garden's pale;
And there, the gate between us two,
We'd linger, as all lovers do,
And lean upon the rail,

And face to face, eyes close to eyes,
Hands meeting hands in feigned surprise
After a stealthy quest—
So close I'd bend, ere she'd retreat,
That I'd grow drunken from the sweet
Tuberose upon her breast.

We'd talk—in fitful style, I ween—
With many a meaning glance between
The tender words and low;
We'd whisper some dear, sweet conceit,
Some idle gossip we'd repeat,
And then I'd move to go.

"Good night," I'd say; "good night—good by!"
"Good night"—from her, with half a sigh—
"Good night!" "Good night!" and then—
And then I do not go, but stand;
Again lean on the railing, and—
Begin it all again.

Ah! that was many a day ago—
That pleasant summer time—although
The gate is standing yet;
A little cranky, it may be,
A little weather-worn—like me—
Who never can forget.

The happy "End?" My cynic friend,
Pray save your sneers—there was no "end."
Watch yonder chubby thing!—
That is our youngest—her's and mine;
See how he climbs, his legs to twine
About the gate and swing.

THE QUEEN OF ALL.

Honor the dear old mother. Time has scattered the snowflakes on her brow, ploughed deep furrows on her cheeks, but is she not sweet and beautiful now? The lips are thin and shrunken, but those are the lips which have kissed many a hot tear from the childish cheeks, and they are the sweetest lips in the world. The eye is dim, yet it glows with the radiance of holy love which can never fade. Ah, yes, she is a dear old mother. The sands of life are nearly run out, but feeble as she is, she will go further and reach down lower for you than any other on earth. She cannot leave you; you cannot enter a prison whose bars will keep her out, you can never mount a scaffold too high for her to reach, that she may kiss and bless you in evidence of her deathless love. When all the world shall despise and forsake you, when it shall leave you by the wayside to die unnoticed, the dear old mother will gather you in her feeble arms and carry you home and tell you of your virtues, until you almost forget that your soul is disfigured by vices. Love her tenderly, and cheer her declining years with holy devotion.—New Orleans Ledger.

How Glass Eyes are Made.—Glass eyes, as now made, consist of two distinct shells, the exterior and the interior or lining, which is fitted to the eye stump. The end of a hollow tube of crystal is heated and blown into a ball, which is colored to imitate the white of the eye with enamels applied while the glass is still in a vitreous paste. The imitation is exact. The workman makes the eye clear, white, bilious or bloodshot, in exact accordance with the other. A round hole is then made in the centre to receive the globe of the eye. In making this globe the iris is first formed out of several amalgamated enamels. In the centre the pupil is fixed in black enamel and finished with the delicate tracery of those fine fibres found in the natural eye. The eye globe is then soldered into the exterior shell and the optic is finished.

To Cure a Felon.—Dr. T. C. Brannon in the Therapeutic Gazette, prescribes the following treatment for this painful malady: "Take of soft lye soap and flax-seed a sufficient quantity, stirring the meal in slowly with a spatula or case-knife, manipulating thoroughly, so as to form a salve or poultice. Corn meal is a good substitute for the flax-seed. Envelop the finger in this, applying snugly, and occasionally pressing it to bring it in closer contact. Renew the poultice every 12 to 24 hours. Don't try every prescription you may hear of. Depend on this. It will, if applied in time, abort the disease; if adopted later, it will bring it to a small head (if too far advanced to be scattered) when it may be picked almost painlessly."

Old Uncle Mose went into Levi Schaumburg's store, on Austin avenue, to buy a silk handkerchief, but was almost paralyzed on learning the price. Levi explained that the high price of silk goods was caused by some disease among the silk worms. "How much does you ask for dis here piece ob tape?" asked the old man. "Ten cents," was the reply. "Ten cents! Jewhilikins! so de tape has riz too—I s'pose de cause ob dat am, because dar's somefin de matter wid de tape wums. Dis seems ter be gwine ter be a mighty tough year on wums, anyhow."—Texas Siftings.

"Have you any fresh eggs?" "Yes, mum, plenty; them with the hen on 'em." "With the hen on them?" "Yes, mum, we always puts a hen on our fresh eggs to distinguish of 'em. Beg pardon, mum, don't think you understand. Hen the letter, not 'en the bird. Hen for noo-laid, mum. Take a dozen, mum? Thank you!"

A New York miss of sixteen Summers, who attends a private school in that city, was told by her teacher to translate into French the sentence: "I do not wish for a silk dress." The teacher was astonished when the pupil promptly responded: "But you may bet your sweet life that I do."

The other evening a gentleman's button caught hold of the fringe on a lady's shawl. "I am attached to you," said the gentleman, laughing, while he was industriously trying to get loose. "The attachment is mutual," was the good natured reply.

THE CARELESS USE OF ICE.

It is only in this country that ice enters so largely into the apparent comfort of its inhabitants, and a very dangerous comfort it is. Dyspepsia and a number of other evils follow directly in the train of the consumption of ice. To the great pitchers of iced water so temptingly displayed on hot days may be traced a number of maladies, for it is evident that no person can without danger suddenly and violently lower the temperature of his stomach by filling it full of water at 32° Fahrenheit. That valuable organ will certainly resent the insult, especially if followed up by repeated injuries of the same kind. In the tropics, where the use of ice has more temptations surrounding it than in any other part of the world, the inhabitants most carefully avoid it. You cannot get a Cuban to indulge in iced water. People who have been foolishly addicted to the habit of using ice will, after visiting the West Indies, forever eschew the dangerous practice. A party of men who recently visited San Domingo on business (who would go there for any other reason?) on their first arrival mourned greatly the absence of ice. "Ah!" said they, "when the English steamer runs in here we will go aboard and have a treat in the shape of a good iced brandy and soda." The steamer arrived in due course. The ardent foreigners jumped into the boat of the captain of the port (a negro gorgeously arrayed in uniform covered with gold lace) and, barely saluting the captain, rushed to the saloon for the coveted refreshment. It was duly absorbed and the whole party were rendered ill in consequence. None of them have ever touched ice since that time. In the West Indies it is only the colored race that patronizes ice—to the white people it is not only no luxury, but a dangerous enemy. Ice has its uses; in the hospitals it is invaluable; for the preservation of provisions, especially fish, it is useful, although detrimental to flavor, if allowed to touch the meats to be preserved; but as an article of human consumption it should be avoided. It is only with us that this takes place. Abroad, ice is simply a luxury only resorted to at times; even in California the residents are wary of it. In short, ice is a very good friend in moderation, but a bitter enemy when the intimacy is too absorbing.—New York Hour.

HOW FOWLS GRIND THEIR FOOD.

Fowls have no teeth to grind or masticate their food with, and the best they are able to do is to pick it and swallow it whole. Kernels of grain are swallowed by them, aud as they are surrounded by a tough pellicle or skin, which the juice of the stomach of the animals will not readily dissolve or digest, they can obtain no nourishment at all from the grain if this tough pellicle was not broken. Now, if we dissect the gizzard of a fowl of any kind, we have a lot of small gravel stones, which are usually the hardest kind of flint, granite or sandstone. Surely here is a pocket edition of farm grist mills.

Fowls swallow their food, broken or not, and it enters the crop or first stomach and remains in it until it has become softened more or less, when a little at a time, as grain runs into a grist mill, is forced into the gizzard among the gravel stones. This gizzard is a strong, muscular stomach, and plays night and day when there is grist to grind, similar to a bellows, contracting and expanding, thus forcing the gravel stones into the grain and breaking it into fragments and triturating the whole mass, after which it is in a suitable condition to be quickly digested.

A NEW SANITARIUM.

The Atlantic-Sanitarium and Health Institute is the name of a new institution in New York city, which has recently been established and is operated on strictly business principles by a joint stock company, having paid up capital of $500,000. It was established by some well-known medical gentlemen for the treatment and cure of all character of diseases.

The Hartford, Conn., Post published a letter from its New York correspondent a short time since, and we are pleased to learn that the subject of the letter, Dr. R. C. Flower, is the president of this Sanitarium and feel that under his auspices it must flourish. We hear the doctor is to be at the Massasoit House, Springfield, Wednesday and Thursday of next week to meet several patients from this vicinity who cannot travel so far as New York. His reputation is national and from facts we have learned of his special work, we must say he is fully entitled to the adjectives which that well-known paper, the Philadelphia Record, applies to his cures, "wonderful, matchless and almost incredible."

A writer in an Illinois paper says: "The average Western farmer toils hard early and late, often depriving himself of needed rest and sleep—for what? To raise corn. For what? To feed hogs. For what? To get money with which to buy more land. For what? To raise more corn. For what? To feed more hogs. For what? To buy more land. And what does he want with more land? Why, he wishes to raise more corn—to feed more hogs—to buy more land—to raise more corn—to feed more hogs—and in this circle he moves until the Almighty stops his hoggish proceedings."

A Fool Once More.—For ten years my wife was confined to her bed with such a complication of ailments that no doctor could tell what was the matter or cure her, and I used up a small fortune in humbug stuff. Six months ago I saw a U. S. flag with Hop Bitters on it, and I thought I would be a fool once more. I tried it, but my folly proved to be wisdom. Two bottles cured her, she is now as well and strong as any man's wife, and it cost me only two dollars. Such folly pays.—H. W., Detroit, Mich.—Free Press.

TAKE
SIMMONS
Liver Regulator!

ASK the recovered dyspeptics, bilious sufferers, victims of fever and ague, the mercurial diseased patient how they recovered their health, cheerful spirits and good appetite; they will tell you by taking Simmons Liver Regulator.

The Cheapest, Purest and Best Family Medicine in the World for DYSPEPSIA, CONSTIPATION, Jaundice, Bilious Attacks, Sick Headache, Colic, Depression of Spirits, Sour Stomach, Heart Burn, &c., &c.

This unrivaled Southern remedy is warranted not to contain a single particle of Mercury, or any injurious mineral substance, but is

PURELY VEGETABLE,

containing those Southern roots and herbs, which an All-Wise Providence has placed in countries where Liver Diseases mostly prevail. It will cure all diseases caused by derangement of the Liver and Bowels.

The SYMPTOMS of Liver Complaint are a bitter or bad taste in the mouth; pain in the back, sides or joints, often mistaken for Rheumatism; SOUR STOMACH; loss of appetite; bowels alternately costive and lax; headache; loss of memory, with a painful sensation of having failed to do something which ought to have been done; debility; low spirits, a thick yellow appearance of the skin and eyes, a dry cough often mistaken for Consumption. Sometimes many of the symptoms attend the disease, at other times very few; but the Liver, the largest organ in the body, is generally the seat of the disease, and if not regulated in time, great suffering, wretchedness and DEATH will ensue.

"I can recommend as an efficacious remedy for disease of the Liver, Heartburn and Dyspepsia, Simmons Liver Regulator.
Lewis G. Wunder, Philadelphia."

"We have tested its virtues personally, and know that for Dyspepsia, Biliousness and Throbbing Headache, it is the best medicine the world ever saw. We have tried forty other remedies before Simmons Liver Regulator, but none of them gave us more than temporary relief; but the Regulator not only relieved but cured us."—Ed. Telegraph and Messenger, Macon, Ga.

THE PUREST AND BEST MEDICINE EVER MADE.

A combination of Hops, Buchu, Mandrake and Dandelion, with all the best and most curative properties of all other Bitters, makes the greatest Blood Purifier, Liver Regulator, and Life and Health Restoring Agent on earth.

No disease can possibly long exist where Hop Bitters are used, so varied and perfect are their operations. THEY GIVE NEW LIFE AND VIGOR TO THE AGED AND INFIRM.

To all whose employments cause irregularity of the bowels or urinary organs, or who require an Appetizer Tonic and Mild Stimulant, Hop Bitters are invaluable, without intoxicating.

No matter what your feelings or symptoms are, what the disease or ailment is, use Hop Bitters. Don't wait until you are sick, but if you only feel bad or miserable, use them at once. It may save your life. It has saved hundreds.

$500 will be paid for a case they will not cure or help. Do not suffer or let your friends suffer, but use and urge them to use HOP BITTERS.

Remember, Hop Bitters is no vile, drugged, drunken nostrum, but the purest and best medicine ever made; the Invalids' Friend & Hope," and no person or family should be without them.

D. I. C. is an absolute and irresistible cure for drunkenness, use of opium, tobacco and narcotics. All sold by druggists. Send for circulars.

FOUNDED BY GORDON M. FISK.

THE SURGEON'S KNIFE.

WONDERFUL SURGICAL OPERATION—REMOVAL OF URINARY STONES FROM THE BLADDER—SUCCESSFUL.

Mr. Simeon Tietsell, of Saugerties, N. Y., had been treated for seven years by various physicians for what they called Stricture of the Urethra, without benefit. He finally consulted Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who found his trouble to be Urinary Calculi or Stones in the Bladder. The doctor at once removed the foreign bodies with the knife and then gave his great Blood Specific, "Favorite Remedy," to prevent their reformation. The entire treatment was eminently successful, and Mr. Tietsell's recovery was rapid and perfect.

While "Favorite Remedy" is a specific in all Kidney and Bladder diseases, it is equally valuable in cases of Bilious Disorders, Constipation of the Bowels, and all the class of ills apparently inseparable from women. Try it. Your druggist has it, and its cost is only one dollar a bottle. The lucky man is he who puts this advice into practice. Don't forget the name and address, Dr. David Kennedy, Rondout, N. Y. The doctor would have it understood that, while he is engaged in the introduction of his medicine, "Favorite Remedy," he still continues the practice of his profession, but confines himself exclusively to office practice. He treats all classes of a chronic character, and performs all the minor and capital operations of surgery. 1m18

Hay Making.

The mower is out with his scythe,
And beautiful things are falling!
Waves and billows of shining grass
Roll before him. Behold him pass!
Daisies and clover and wild rose bloom,
Herds-grass and timothy meet their doom;
Buttercups golden your time has come;
Sparrow, this morning so blythe,
In terror and anguish calling!

The mower is out with his scythe,
And beautiful things are falling;
Not with a single tithe,
But in whole ranks they lie,
Pouring out their life on the morning breeeze
That wafts the fragrance o'er land and seas;
While mower to mower is calling,
In a sweep of his arm they die.

All through the summer day,
All through the moonlit eve,
While sparrow and field mouse grieve,
The cutting and tossing and stacking toil
Goes on; and the odorous heaped-up spoil,
Under the midsummer's great white moon,
Waits all night; by the next high noon
Safe in the barn is packed away,
Treasures substantial of well-dried hay.

The mower is out with his scythe,
And beautiful things are falling!
Joys and hopes and affections warm,
Loves and lives that exhale the balm,
Beauty and bloom in wild alarm
To miss the stroke may turn and writhe,
In terror find anguish calling.

But let the breath of the new-mown hay
Teach us a beautiful truth to-day.
Though cut and withered in heaps they lie,
Our real treasures cannot be lost.
They may for awhile aside be tossed,
But cherish a sweet dead memory—
To find true life they needs must die,
And we shall greet them, when night is o'er,
Within the garner to die no more.

LENORE'S OUTING.

"Let Lenore come to the seashore with me," said Aunt Prunella to her sister. "She needs a change."

Pretty Mabel's eyes opened to their full extent as she glanced up from her book, and listened with all her might. Aunt Prunella little knew what a favor she was asking, for around Lenore all the family machinery revolved.

"Oh, why not ask Mabel? Lenore is so useful, I don't see how I can spare her. Baby's so fretful, and she knows how to quiet her."

The little mother said this with a weary sigh, looking up at her rich widowed sister, who did not know what it was to attend to four small children.

Aunt Prunella sprang up in her quick way, and taking the baby, put it in Mabel's lap, at the same time drawing Lenore's tiny figure to her side.

"She must come, sister! See her big eyes and her tiny face—she needs a holiday. Let Mabel take care of baby. Now, no more about it—never mind fretting about clothes; I am going to have my own way and take Lenore with me."

The little mother always yielded in the end to her decided sister, and soon Lenore's big brown eyes glowed with delight as she heard consent given to her aunt's proposition. Mabel had always, when a child, been the favorite; but since Aunt Prunella had come back from her four years' residence in Italy, she seemed to have fallen in love with the quiet, useful Lenore, and this was the result.

A wail went up from the little Alcotts as the carriage rolled away which carried their sister to the station, while to Lenore it seemed as if she were entering into fairy land. Such a holiday had never come before into her busy life, and as she sat in the swiftly-flying train by Aunt Prunella's side, her face fairly beamed at the thought of all the pleasure that lay before her.

She was such a quiet little thing that Mabel had always carried off the palm for beauty; but any one seeing the expressive face now, with its lustrous brown eyes and with the unusual rosy color in the fair cheeks, would have surely looked again. So thought, at any rate, a gentleman who was seated near.

"What a good, happy face!" he whispered to the young lady by his side, who had noticed the direction in which his eyes had been wandering for the last hour. "Don't you think so, Miss Marcelle?"

"Oh!"—rather pettishly—"you clergymen are always looking at 'good' faces; I must confess that I like pretty ones. That girl cannot be called beautiful."

"Tastes differ," Mr. Graham replied, somewhat tersely.

"I'm glad we're here at last. Lenore, hold my bag while I see to the luggage."

Some one passing caught the name. "Lenore—graceful and gentle like the owner," he thought; but the fashionable young woman by his side, with her multitudinous parcels, engrossed his attention so completely that he soon lost sight of the young girl who had so interested him.

But it was not long before he saw her again; and this time he had the pleasure of winning a glance from those soulful eyes that had so taken his fancy, as Lenore shyly bowed in answer to a friend's introduction.

"I like that new friend of yours, Lenore," said her Aunt Prunella. "He's worth a hundred of the affected youths one meets at places like this."

This was some time after they had first met Mr. Graham, and at her aunt's mention of his name the young girl's shy eyes drooped and hid their brown light under their lids, while a faint wave of color stole into the cheeks the healthy sea air had already rounded a little.

Miss Marcelle, the young lady whom Mr. Graham had escorted from the city to her parent's sea-side cottage, seemed to take a great fancy to Lenore. They formed a striking contrast when together, Miss Marcelle's tall, fashionably-robed figure, and the slender, simple-clad maiden, to whom this gay life was as a page right out of a fascinating book.

Lenore scarcely fancied her new friend, but she could not repulse her advances without being rude, and so she seldom went far in her walks upon the sands before she would be joined by her.

As the days passed life seemed more and more to Lenore like a fair dream, for something in her heart told her that the expression which filled Mr. Graham's earnest eyes whenever they met her own, meant that, to him, she was growing to be the one nearest and dearest of all; and she was obliged to acknowledge herself that she, too, had for him a warmer feeling than mere friendship, though as yet no words were spoken.

Aunt Prunella looked on well pleased. She had often heard of the worthy, talented young clergyman, and knew that he was one of those who "practice what they preach."

The time glided pleasantly by, until one day a yacht excursion was arranged, and Lenore and Miss Marcelle went under Mr. Graham's care. The enjoyment was at its height, the dainty noon-day banquet had been partaken of, and they were speeding gaily along, when suddenly a dark cloud appeared on the horizon. No one noticed it at first; but as the moments went on it grew blacker and denser, and it was evident that a storm would soon be upon them.

The vessel was turned homeward, and most of the ladies, with white, alarmed faces, went below. A few of the braver ones stayed on deck. As Lenore sat by the rail watching, with fascinated eyes, the approaching storm, some one came beside her.

"I see you are not much frightened, Miss Alcott," said Mr. Graham.

"Yes, I am a little," candidly replied Lenore.

Looking up, she met such an expression of love and longing in his dark eyes that her own drooped.

Seeing her confusion, he left her; while Lenore vainly tried to still the beating of her heart, which all the time was joyfully crying, "He does love me!"

The hour of suspense passed, and they were soon safe upon the shore again.

"So you enjoyed yourself for all your fright?" said Aunt Prunella, seeing her niece's happy face.

The next day Miss Marcelle called to see Lenore.

"I have a great secret to tell you," she said, "and I know you will be interested. Yesterday, as he saw me home, after he had left you, Mr. Graham asked me something—what it was I'll leave you to guess. You know he has been attentive to me for a long time."

With a white face, Lenore listened. There could only be one meaning to what Miss Marcelle was saying.

Half an hour later, kneeling by her aunt's side, she begged to be taken home.

As Aunt Prunella smoothed back the brown hair, she saw that her niece was in serious earnest; but surmising it to be some lover's misunderstanding, she asked no questions, promising it should be as she wished.

The next day Mr. Graham coming to ask for Lenore, was met with the answer that her aunt and herself had gone that morning. Not until they were on their way to Lenore's home did Aunt Prunella ask and learn the cause of her niece's evident distress. With a brave effort to be calm, Lenore told her what Miss Marcelle had confided to her.

"Well, well, things now-a-days are strange! In my time a young man did not show by every act his fondness for one, and then become engaged to another!"

"Please say no more about it, dear aunt," pleaded Lenore. "It was my own mistake."

So Lenore, much to her mother's surprise and delight, came home a full week before she was expected, and Miss Marcelle was left at the sea-shore (as she had shrewdly expected she would be) with the game in her own hands; for now that Lenore was gone, she thought, Mr. Graham could surely not withstand her fascinations.

Mabel clasped her sister in her young arms. "We've missed you so much, Lenore! Home has not been quite the same without you."

Her loving words brought tears to Lenore's eyes.

She was glad to be home, after all, even though she knew she was not the same Lenore of a couple of months ago.

But none would have suspected, to see the sweet girl moving tirelessly about the little home, that she was suffering. Aunt Prunella (who had decided to remain with her sister during the Winter) thought to herself, "What a brave little thing she is! and what a mistake that young man has made."

Three weeks went by, and one afternoon six-years-old Robbie came in from school with a shining silver piece tightly clasped in his chubby hand.

"Why, Robbie, who gave it to you?" inquired his mother, anxious to learn where he had obtained it.

"Oh, a gentleman—I don't know his name. I met him near the station, and he asked me to show him where to find a lodging-house, so I walked along with him, and showed him where Mrs. Merrill lives. Then he asked me my name, and when I told him he started and asked me if I had any sisters. I told him I had three—one pretty one—that's Mabel, and Lenore and a baby. Then he asked me if Lenore was not pretty, too, and I said I thought she would be if she did not cry so much. Then he gave me the money."

"Oh, Robbie!" exclaimed Lenore, "how could you?"

"But it's true," sturdily persisted Robbie. "Haven't I often seen you crying in your room?"

By this time her mother and Mabel were both regarding her with looks of anxious surprise. Their Lenore unhappy! What could be the matter?

Just then the bell rang, and Lenore escaped to her own room, little dreaming of the summons which was soon to come to her.

"Mr. Graham wants to see you in the drawing-room, Lenore," said Aunt Prunella, a little later.

Then as she helped the girl's trembling fingers to arrange her soft brown locks, she said, softly, "Darling, he is not engaged to Miss Marcelle at all. I have seen him, and he has confided to me that—but go to him, my dear child, and hear his story from his own lips."

Ah, happy moments of explanation in the little drawing-room! How easy it was to forget all the doubt and the pain of the past, with hand clasped in hand in the blissful present.

Thus Lenore's outing resulted in a joyful wedding, and Mr. Graham's flock greeted with cordial welcome the sweet young wife he introduced to them on his return home after his Summer vacation.

It is singular how numerous a man will become if you owe him thirteen dollars and twenty cents, and can't pay him. You will meet him everywhere. He is awful plenty. He rises up before you in the most unexpected places. You even go on a back street, and he is there. But when he owes you eleven dollars and eighty cents, and can't pay it, he becomes painfully scarce. He is not at home, at his place of business, or anywhere. Where he was plenty before, he becomes very few, indeed. Where do all the people go to, anyway, that owe money? Nobody can find them.

A Laramie man who used to own a watermelon patch and a bull dog in Iowa is having constructed for the world's fair a log cabin bed quilt containing 2135 pieces. The blocks are relics of boys' pants, pried out of the jaws of the bull dog during the years that the owner was general manager of the melon patch.

Of all the attachments of a sewing machine the feller is the most pleasing to the girls.

"PERFECTLY PARALYZING."

On the way to Buffalo two young people got on the train east of Cleveland. They were going back to school. They were not silly, ignorant country young people by any manner of means. They represented seminary and college culture, for the young man was on his way back to Cornell. They dropped into a seat, and then talked, and the passengers in the immediate vicinity listened to this highly intellectual interchange of pulsing thought and throbbing sentiment:

"Say, I heard something about you!" exclaimed the impetuous youth.

"Oh, you! what was it?" she replied.

"Shan't tell."

"That is real mean. Who was it told you?"

"Oh, I know," he asserted. "It paralyzed me."

"Well, what was it about?"

"Down there at Chatauqua, that time. Oh, that paralyzed me. Te-he-he."

"What?" she exclaimed, in tones of intense surprise, as though it was the first time she had ever heard of such a place—Chatauqua.

"Aw, yes now, you know. Out there with—"

"With whom? Te-he."

"Oh, pshaw! Te-he-te-he."

"I do not know what you mean."

"Oh, no, you do not. Well, it paralyzed me."

"Well, I don't care, anyway; it is not so."

"Well I got it pretty straight. It paralyzed me."

"Who told you?"

"You'll never tell I told you?"

"No, indeed I will not."

"Well, I got it from Will Blank. It just paralyzed me."

"Oh, I know what you mean now. Well, what of that? Te-he-te-he."

"Aw, well, a good deal of it. Te-he-te-he."

"Why, that was nothing. Te-he-te-he."

"Ah, that just paralyzed me."

"I do not believe you know anything about it, anyhow."

"Yes I do know all about it. Just paralyzed me."

"Well, what did he say about the other?"

"Oh, he told me all about that."

"What did he think?"

"I will not tell."

"Oh, please do."

"Oh, you are too anxious."

"Indeed, I think that I ought to know."

"You will get mad if I tell you." (Then suddenly remembering that he had not made the remark in thirty seconds,) "It paralyzed me."

"No, I will not get mad."

"Yes, you will."

"No, I will not.

"Yes, you will. It will paralyze you."

"No, I won't get mad. Not at you."

"Oh, pshaw! Won't you?"

"Indeed I won't. I will be thankful to you. And I will do something for you."

"Oh, hush! you paralyze me," he said.

"Well, tell me, won't you?" she pleaded.

"If you are real sure you won't get mad."

"Indeed, and I won't. What did he say?"

"Well, he said he didn't care. It paralyzed me." Then with a sudden inspiration of genius he added: "And don't you forget it."

"Are you sure he didn't?"

"He said he didn't. Oh, I was paralyzed. Te-he-te-he."

"Well, I'm glad."

"Yes, I thought you would be."

"Why?"

"Oh, because. Te-he."

"Well, why do you think so?"

"Because."

"But why? Te-he."

"Oh, because."

"Well, you must have some reason."

"Oh, I know. It just paralyzed me, I tell you."

At this interesting point in the conversation the passengers got out at Silver Creek to conceal their emotion. The jester was weeping. The man on the wood-box was swearing under his breath, the fat passenger was purple in the face, and the sad passenger, lifting his hands to Heaven, said:

"Immortal Gods, dwellers on high Olympus! Did I ever in my callowest days profane the sacred quiet of the day with such colossal, Heaven daring, maddening, soul-destroying imbecility? No! a thousand times no, by all the voiceless Gods that guard the gates of eternal silence. No, by thunder, I never did."

"You bet your lips you did," said the woman who talks bass, and without breaking the dead lock the Senate adjourned.—Burdette.

RELIEF OF ASTHMA.

In an excellent article upon "Physical Education in the Popular Science Monthly, Dr. Felix L. Oswald throws out a hint for the relief of asthma, which is so simple that it is worth a trial by the sufferers with that distressing disease. His remedy is a few minutes exercise with the balance stick. He suggests the use of a straight stick, like a broom-handle, about five or six feet long and one inch in diameter, marked like a steelyard with notches at regular intervals. Then gird a ten-pound weight of any sort with a piece of stout wire, one end of it in hook form. Mr. Oswald says, "The exercise consists in grasping the stick at one end, stretching out arm and stick horizontally like a rapier at a home thrust; then draw your arm back, still keeping the stick rigidly horizontal, make your hand touch your chin, thrust it out again, draw back and so on, till the forearm moves rapidly on a steady fulcrum. Next load the stick—i. e., hook the stone to one of the notches; every inch farther out will increase the weight by several pounds. Hook it to one of the middle notches and try to move your arm as before. It will be hard work now to keep the stick horizontal; even a strong man will find that the effort reacts powerfully on his lungs; he will puff as if the respiratory engine were working under high pressure." The weighted stick bearing against the sinews of the forearm overcomes the stricture of the asthmatic spasm, and, with the aid of this mechanical palliative, the distress can be relieved before the actual breathlessness begins. Daily exercise with the stick diminishes the frequency of the attacks, and if begun in time, he thinks, would cure children from the hereditary tendency to it. As there is no radical and complete cure for asthma, the only hope the sufferer has is to palliate it, and if it can be done in this simple manner, it certainly is much more valuable than drugs or doctors.

Just as the pin is bent the man is inclined to pound the upholstering out of the boy that put it in his chair.

Waiting.

Each day, when my work was ended,
I saw, as I neared my home,
A sweet little face at the window-pane,
That was watching for papa to come.

The blue eyes closed one morning,
And I knew that never again
Should I see my baby watching for me,
With her face at the window-pane.

Yet I fancied to-night that I heard her
Call, just as she used to do,
When she heard my step at the open gate:
"Come, papa. I'm waiting for you."

And I think that maybe she's waiting,
As of old, in the soft twilight,
She watched, when the long day's task was done,
To welcome me home at night.

Some time, when my work is ended,
I shall see, as I near my home,
A dear little face in Paradise,
That is watching for papa to come.

THE USE OF SPICES.

Spices make up the æsthetics of eating; they are the finest and most exquisite products of nature, for they contain the condensed aroma of essential oils, produced by the intense rays of the sun. Almost all spices grow on islands, that is the East India Islands, Madagascar, the Mauritius, the Banbu Islands, the Malincas, Sumatra, Java, Ceylon, Japan and the West India Islands; the coasts of tropical countries are also productive of spices.

Spices have a very peculiar effect upon the human system; if taken wisely and in moderation, they certainly promote a flow of saliva, of the gastric juice, and having exerted a pleasant action upon the nerves of the tongue and palate, they communicate a certain warmth to the blood and stimulate the system beneficially.

The peculiar source of the aroma is not always in the same part of the plant, but may be contained in the fruit, the leaves, the bark or the root, according to where the treasure has been deposited.

Of fruits, none is more useful than the pepper, grown in East India and Ceylon, and throughout the East. When the berry of this shrub is ground with its dark cuticle it makes the black pepper; when it is ground without it, it forms white pepper. Pepper is a most useful condiment, if used sparingly, and enhances the natural aroma of many kinds of food. It is a preventive of indigestion, stimulating the digestive organs.

Allspice is the mild West India or Jamaica pepper, also called pimento.

Nutmeg is the fruit of Eastern trees and shrubs, and exceedingly grateful to the palate, in fact of so exquisite and mild a flavor that it suits well with farinaceous substances.

Mace is the cuticle of nutmeg, and with some people is a greater favorite still. It suits well for delicate stews.

The clove is the flower-bud of a tree, and becomes of a dark hue, when it has been dried in the sun.

Mustard is the seed of a plant which grows in temperate and tropical climates. Its pungency is so great that when ground fine it has to be mixed with starch to moderate it. Mustard is a very useful and healthy condiment.

Vanilla, the fruit of the vanilla plant, is indigenous to Mexico, Brazil, Peru, etc., and cultivated in the West Indies. Gathered before ripe, dried in the shade, and steeped in the oil of the Cashew nut. This spice is the most aromatic of all spices, and of exquisite flavor as an essence.

Of the barks, cinnamon is esteemed most; it is a very valuable assistant to digestion and can safely be given to children occasionally. The young shoots of the tree are used for the pipes, and when dried are ground into powder.

Of roots or bulbs, ginger is the most useful, either as a preserve or used whole in a dry state, or also ground into a powder. Both with ginger and cinnamon better results are obtained by the blending of various grades than by putting it up perfectly pure.

Curry powder is the combination of many spices and has come to us from the East. Unfortunately our clumsy ways often spoil the mixture by not preserving the delicacy of combination which alone can produce the true flavor it ought to possess. Curry is far more useful in food economy than we understand as yet, and deserves our best attention.—Food and Health.

A STORY WITH A MORAL.

"Don't cross a bridge until you come to it."

There was once a man and a woman who planned to spend a day at a friend's house, which was some miles distant from their own. So one pleasant morning they started out to make the visit; but they had not gone far before the woman remembered a bridge they had to cross which was very old and unsafe, and she began to worry about it. "What shall we do about the bridge?" she said to her husband. "I shall never dare to go over it, and we can't cross the river any other way." "Oh," said the man, "I forgot that bridge, it's a bad place. Suppose it should break through. We should be drowned." "Or suppose you should step on a rotten plank and break your leg, what would become of me and the baby?" "I don't know," said the man, "what would become of any of us, for I couldn't work, and we would starve to death." So they went on worrying, till they got to the bridge, when, lo! and behold, since they had been there last a new bridge had been built, and they crossed over it in safety, and found they might as well have saved themselves all their anxiety.

An investigation aiming at accurate statistics as to the number of churches in this city closed last Sunday might have led one who had not read the revised version of the New Testament to suspect that a well-known passage had been amended so as to read, "and do not forsake the assembling of yourselves together—except in July and August."—Philadelphia North American.

Her hand was evidently not on good terms with soap and water, but was heavily loaded with jewelry. "By George!" whispered Fogg, "there's some rich digging over there. I should say that dirt would assay a dollar an ounce."

If there is anybody who has our sincerest sympathy, it is the dear young man who has on a white vest so stiffly starched that he feels as though he was clapboarded in front.

An old yellow dog in Cologne
Ran away with an old woman's bogne;
But the wrathful old crogne
Hit him twice with a stogne,
And 'twas dreadful to hear the dog grogne.

The feet of most persons swell more or less on warm days; hence the term, "good corn weather."

A SAFE BRIDGE.

We believe in temperance in all things; but we also believe that total abstinence is the true temperance in regard to intoxicating liquors. The man who never drinks will never become a drunkard, nor by his example cause another to become a drunkard—that is certain. It is a safe rule for all. It is the only safe rule for many. There has latterly been a revival of the old quibbling with words over the matter, and men whose vocation, position and character should make their every word emphasize the danger of the drinking habit have been placed before the public in the equivocal attitude of sanctioning if not commending a "temperate use" of the good things of life, including "good liquors." There are no good liquors; the only degrees are bad, worse, worst. And the least bad will make drunkards, or excessive drinkers, of seventy-five per cent of those who habitually use them, just as surely as the superlatively bad. Fire burns and alcohol blights without much regard to the fuel or the form. The difference is in degree, not in kind. Men should abstain, not only because there is peril in moderation, but because there is no good reason for indulgence at any time. Nothing is better established than the fact that to produce and maintain the highest physical condition, and to fit men for the utmost endurance of which they are capable, there must be no liquor used. What is true of the body is even more true of the mind. The illusion that made a connection between gin and genius was long ago dispelled. Alcoholic fumes breed instant disorder in the brain. Even the poets who have sung the praises of wine have done their writing with a clear head. They learn from experience that they must sing first and drink afterward. The rational conclusion is, therefore, the one reached by Col. Higginson—that as "men are habitually better off without alcoholic stimulants, it is better to go without them all the time." Abstinence is the safe bridge. It carries men over temptation and all the perils incident to a habit that is, however we may prate about "moderation," confessedly the monster evil of society.—The Golden Rule.

GET A HOME.

We would have every true man build for himself a home, be it ever so humble in its beginning. Industry and frugality and good judgment will make it the most lovely spot of earth. The man without a home is like a sojourner without a country. The richest, happiest and best man in the wide world is he who has a pretty, comfortable home of his own, a family, good health, and owes no man a cent even though his entire worldly possessions would not sell for a thousand dollars, and though he has never held so high an office as town constable or roadmaster.

We sometimes feel constrained to doubt whether a man without a home can at best be but an indifferent citizen and a more indifferent patriot. He cannot feel that interest in other people's real prosperity that he feels in his own, and without such prosperity we could have no country worthy a name. He would scarcely care to risk his life in defense of the hearthstone of his landlord, but let that hearthstone be his own, and woe to the invader who should threaten it with desecration. The homes of the people are the strength of the State. Build them, beautify them, own them and be happy. This is the fair deduction from hosts of instances and is the true philosophy of home making and home owning.

SAWDUST CAR WHEELS.

The possibilities of sawdust are enthusiastically set forth by a lumber journal as follows: We have been shown a model of a car wheel consisting of an iron rim of seven inches outward diameter by one-half inch thick, fitted with a well proportioned hub, the space between the hub and rim filled with pine sawdust, pressed in so solidly that we are ready to believe the assertion that resting the iron rim upon bearings, a pressure equal to 23 tons applied to the hub failed to develop any signs of weakness. We hesitate, in these days of progress, to assert that anything is impossible, and we begin to think that even sawdust possesses elements of value hitherto unsuspected, and that the day may come when the filled grounds adjacent to all saw mills may be seen to have a great value in the mechanical development and utilization of the now useless debris placed upon them to get it out of the way. Sawdust car wheels, sawdust brick, sawdust fence posts, railroad ties, and even sawdust window and door frames, wainscoting and mouldings, begin to appear among the possibilities of the immediate future.

Why, man of idleness, labor has rocked you in the cradle, and nourished your pampered life; without it, the woven silk and wool upon your back would be in the shepherd's fold. For the meanest thing that ministers to human want, save the air of heaven, man is indebted to toil; and even the air, in God's wise ordination, is breathed with labor. —E. H. Chapin.

There is nothing that makes life sweeter, nothing that gives one more encouragement in the midst of hard work, than a royal friendship. It is this that makes it a meanness unspeakably base to put on the disguise of friendship in order the better to serve personal ends.

In looking over the proceedings of a Sunday school convention we find the following resolution offered by Mr. Smith, a pious and promising young lawyer: "Resolved, That a committee of ladies and gentlemen be appointed to raise children for the Sabbath school."

Now the chowder's in the pot, and the days are getting hot, and we all begin to swelter with a swelt, swelt, swelt. While the crimson lemonade through a straw enchants the maid, who displays a bunch of flowers at her belt, belt, belt.

The fashion editor who wrote "shirred tulle pokes are popular," had a right to complain of the compositor who set it up "shirt tail pockets are popular."

The Journal.

SATURDAY, JULY 30, 1881.

THE Senatorial squabble at Albany having come to an end, Judge Robertson on Monday took the oath of office as collector of the port of New York, his appointment to which by President Garfield led Conkling to resign last May.

THE National Conference of Charities has been in session at Boston this week. Gov. Long made the opening address, and there have been numerous papers and discussions on charitable and correctional matters by the delegates.

GOV. PLAISTED of Maine became so provoked with his Council the other day because they would not confirm his nominations that he declared the Council adjourned sine die, but there is some doubt about their recognizing his authority to dispense with their services thus summarily.

SPRINGFIELD has abandoned the races advertised to come off Aug. 30—Sept. 2, much to the disappointment of horse lovers in this section. Springfield came last in the circuit and suffered from a lack of entries on this account, and fearing a large pecuniary loss the managers decided on Monday to give up, rather than run the risk.

SENATOR-ELECT LAPHAM of New York said in his address the other evening, when serenaded, that the distribution of patronage was "an inferior portion of the high duty devolving upon a Senator." Where does he get his authority for considering it any part of a Senators' duty? The constitution and laws are silent upon the subject—and the Senator will be wise to follow their example.

BUTLER, it is reported, has decided not to run for Governor this year, and nobody yet knows who will be put at the head of the Democratic ticket. The fact is, no one cares to run against so popular a man as Gov. Long, and as it is practically settled that he will be renominated, the brethren in the Democratic camp are one and all pocketing their political aspirations until a more propitious season.

CONKLING has been "vindicated" in a way he did not expect. It is safe to say that he would not have resigned so hastily had he not felt sure of a re-election. But he was taken at his word, and though it is by no means certain that he is out of politics for all time, for the present he will be permitted to remain quietly at home. And, by the way, it might be a good thing for him to actually go home, and cultivate the acquaintance of his wife for a season.

HON. NATHAN CLIFFORD, senior associate justice of the United States Supreme Court, died at Cornish, Me., Monday, at the age of 78. Born in New Hampshire, he was admitted to the bar in 1827, served six years in Congress, beginning in 1838, was U. S. Attorney General one year, commissioner and then minister to Mexico, and in 1858 was appointed to the Supreme Court by President Buchanan. His death leaves a vacancy which, in view of President Garfield's low condition, will probably remain unfilled for some time.

WITH a few exceptions, the Summer resorts are doing a light business this year. Some of them put up their prices at the beginning of the season, in the expectation of an unusual rush, and they are reaping the reward of their folly, though the cool weather has had considerable to do in keeping people at home, where they can make themselves comfortable for much less money than at the fashionable resorts. Most men like to feel that they are getting an approach to value received for money expended in pleasure or health seeking. Hence those landlords who put their prices lowest for a comfortable entertainment make the most money in the long run.

POSTMASTER GENERAL JAMES has devised a plan for facilitating the sending of small sums of money through the mails at a slight cost, which will be appreciated by the people if adopted. His plan contemplates the use of two cards, one for all sums within $2.50, and the other for sums up to $5. The cards will have three columns of figures, representing dollars, tens and units, and the amount to be drawn will be designated by punching out figures. The only record of them will be the entering of the amount on a stub, and they will be payable to bearer at any office, while to prevent their being used as currency they will be redeemable only for three months. They will cost only two or three cents for the $2.50 card, and four or five for the other one.

HAS Conkling's head been turned by the political reverse which has come upon him? It is difficult to understand, on any other hypothesis, this high-flown dispatch which he sent to his Albany followers after Lapham's election:

"The heroic constancy of the Spartan band which so long has stood for principle and truth has my deepest gratitude and admiration. Borne down by forbidden and abhorrent forces and agencies which never before had sway in the Republican party, the memory of their courage and manhood will live long in highest honor. The near future will vindicate their wisdom and crown them with approval. Please ask them all for me to receive my most grateful acknowledgements."

The signature is the signature of Conkling, but the sentiment savors of George Francis Train or the Count Johannes, rather than of the dignified statesman who a couple of months ago held it "respectful and becoming to make room for whoever may correct all errors we have made and interpret aright all duties we have misconceived."

A young Swedish machinist of Virginia City, August Groeber, is making a steam tricycle, to carry three persons, and petroleum is to be the fuel used.

THE country was startled last Saturday by the announcement that the President was suffering a relapse, and that Drs. Hamilton and Agnew, the consulting physicians in New York and Philadelphia, had been hastily summoned to his bedside. While the wound was being dressed in the morning the President was taken with a chill, which lasted some time and was followed by a high fever. This was caused by a stoppage of the flow of pus from the wound, and the formation of a pus cavity. On Sunday morning Dr. Agnew decided that an operation was necessary, and he made an incision in the President's back, some three inches below the mouth of the wound, tapping the cavity and causing immediate relief, a free discharge of pus following. On Tuesday Dr. Agnew performed another operation, removing several splinters of the shattered rib from the wound and pushing the rib into place. The President endured these operations bravely, without the aid of anæsthetics, and it is believed that the second operation has removed all danger of another stoppage of the flow of pus. The President slept soundly all night, waking but once, and on Wednesday felt much better, while there was an entire absence of the usual afternoon fever. He also had a good night's rest Wednesday night, and a comfortable day Thursday, though there was a slight return of fever in the afternoon, due, probably, to the clogging of the drainage pipe. He was moved in his bed to another room Thursday for awhile, while his room was aired and cleansed and the carpet removed. Drs. Agnew and Hamilton will take turns in remaining with the President for the present, in deference to the wishes of Mrs. Garfield and members of the cabinet. The physicians speak very encouragingly of the President's condition, and while he cannot yet by any means be considered out of danger, there is increasingly strong ground for hope of his complete recovery.

THE end of the Senatorial struggle at Albany came last week Friday, sooner than was expected. A conference of the Republicans was held in the morning, and the Administration men finally yielded to the Conkling men so far as to agree to meet after the joint convention and nominate a candidate for Senator. The convention was accordingly adjourned, and when the Republicans came together Mr. Lapham of course received a majority of the votes, and was unanimously declared the nominee. The Administration men called the meeting a "conference," while the Conklingites termed it a "caucus," and as they had been laboring ever since Lapham's first nomination for another caucus, they were happy, and nobody begrudged them that crumb of comfort. When the convention reassembled E. G. Lapham received the full Republican vote and was declared elected in the place of Roscoe Conkling, resigned. The Republicans were wonderfully happy at the ending of the contest, and a number of good humored speeches were made, all the bitterness of the past few weeks being thoroughly dissipated. In the evening Senators Miller and Lapham were enthusiastically serenaded, and made congratulatory speeches. The result is a relief to the country, which had become thoroughly tired and disgusted with the disgraceful struggle. But it has had one good result, in showing that Conkling's will is no longer the law of the Republican party in New York. The new Senators are men of average ability, though far below what New York might and should have in the United States Senate; but it will require no great ability for them to do their State and country even better service than their predecessors did, if they have the will to do it.

SENATOR DAWES has published a couple of letters on the subject of civil service reform, in which he proposes that no person shall be appointed to office who is in Washington begging for it, or who presents, unasked, the recommendation of a Congressman, while he would relieve the President of office seekers by giving the appointments in the various departments to the heads of those departments, who should be accountable to the President. He holds the people largely responsible for the existing evils, and is "sound on the goose" there. When constituents cease to hound their representives at Washington, the latter will doubtless gladly cease their recommendations. But we fear that day is a long way off. However, the more the subject is agitated the sooner will it come; and the responses to Mr. Dawes' letters show that there is a widespread interest in the matter, which should be diligently cultivated.

SEVERAL infernal machines have been discovered at Liverpool on vessels from this country, in barrels purporting to contain cement, and considerable excitement has been caused in the House of Commons in consequence. Sir William Harcourt, the Home Secretary, believes their shipment to be the outcome of the inflammatory utterances of the Fenian press in this country. This may be difficult to prove, but somebody is responsible, and ought to be severely punished. It is stated that evidence has been discovered showing that the machines were made at Peoria, Ill.

THE Republican State Committee met at Boston Wednesday, and fixed upon Sept. 21st as the date of the State Convention, which will be held at Worcester as usual. Congressman Crapo of New Bedford will be chairman of the convention, and Walter Allen of Newton chairman of the committee on resolutions.

THE railroad war grows in interest. The Central Vermont now sells tickets from Boston to Chicago for $5, while the Boston & Albany road has come down to $8, and there is no telling how much lower the prices will go. To add to the interest of the entertainment, a war on freight rates has now begun.

The kangaroos are increasing so rapidly in some sections of Australia that they threaten to crowd out the settlers.

LOCAL NOTICES.

C. Hitchcock has received another lot of choice Sole Leather.

Robbed but not discouraged. Prescriptions compounded and medicines dispensed in the serenest manner at our old and popular drug store. Call and examine the cracked safe of Hitchcock & Co.

The fire of last week Friday has left D. H. Brigham & Co., the Springfield clothiers, with an immense stock of damaged and tumbled goods of not less than about $75,000. They have rented the large vacant store two doors north, and on Friday morning, July 29th, they will open both stores and will make quick work of disposing of the entire stock without regard to real value.

PALMER AND VICINITY.

Lammas day next Monday.

Summer is two-thirds gone.

Some cool days and nights this week.

Green apples and colic are in the market.

B. B. Adams is visiting his son in Westfield.

Huckleberries are selling for 12 cents a quart.

The days have shortened three-quarters of an hour a'ready.

White, Hellyar & Co. are taking their semi-annual account of stock.

The assessors have a word to say in another column which will be of interest to tax payers.

Mrs. J. S. Loomis is spending a few weeks at Clark's Island, near Plymouth, with her sisters from Monson and St. Louis.

Dr. Warren has just purchased an elegant coupe for use in his practice, hoping to add somewhat to the ease and comfort of his long drives.

Lawyer Gardner is out with a new horse of excellent abilities on the road, it is said, and has also purchased a fine new two-seated family carriage.

Prof. Shipman, of Tufts College, will preach at St. Paul's church Sunday morning. There will be no evening service for the next five Sundays.

The Ladies' Social Union will meet with Mr. and Mrs. L. C. White next Wednesday afternoon and evening. Ice cream served in the evening. All are cordially invited.

A through sleeping car from Boston to St. Louis now goes through on the 5.52 p. m. train. The new arrangement began Monday, and is appreciated by travelers in that direction.

Mr. and Mrs. E. S. Gibbons have gone to Short Beach, in Branford, Ct., where they will spend the month of August. Everett Sedgwick is also at the same place, with his bicycle.

The work on the portion of the railroad bridge over Commercial street which has been rebuilt is now completed, and it looks so well it ought to be carried all the way across the tracks.

Every member of the Improvement Association is invited to attend the monthly meeting at Dr. Holbrook's Monday evening, and partake of ice cream, the proceeds to go into the treasury.

There was a lively scrub race on the park the other evening between one of our bicyclists and a well known member of the bar. They went around the track "neck and neck," but the bicyclist came in a little ahead of the horse on the home stretch.

The stone walk on Church street has been raised this week, under the direction of President Holbrook, of the Improvement Association, and hereafter pedestrians will be able to traverse that street in the spring without danger of going into water over their boots.

Rev. B. M. Fullerton preached his last sermon as pastor of the Congregational church last Sunday. His pastorate does not close until Aug. 12th, but the balance of the time will apply on the vacation to which he is entitled. He will, however, supply the pulpit to-morrow.

The school committee on Thursday made choice of Charles H. Doubleday, of Montclair N. J., a graduate of Amherst College, class of '81, as principal of the high school, in place of W. H. Whiting, resigned. Miss Nellie Cobb was also appointed teacher of the school in the Shaw district.

C. A. Brown started Thursday on a drive to Marblehead, where he has taken a cottage, and next week he will be followed by his wife, mother and sister, Mrs. L. E. Child and Mrs. Cannon, all of whom were at the same place last year, enjoying themselves so well that they concluded to repeat the experiment this year.

At a meeting of the Congregational church Tuesday evening O. P. Allen was chosen treasurer of benevolences, in place of Rev. Mr. Fullerton, and Dea. Cowles, Dea. Foster, J. K. Knox and Dr. Downing were appointed a committee on pulpit supply, to act in concert with a committee of the parish to be hereafter chosen.

Judge Robinson held an inquest Thursday on the killing of Dea. Brainard by the cars last Saturday. The engineers of the two freight trains testified that the deceased did not notice either train when crossing the tracks, but seemed to be absorbed in thought. No other new fact was developed, and no blame was found to attach to any of the railroad employes.

The game of ball on the park last Saturday between the Wales boys and the Wide Awakes of this village proved to be an unusually good game, though the home nine was not quite wide awake enough to get away with the Wales team. At the end of the seventh inning the score stood 2 to 2; but in the eight inning the home team began to get excited, and in two innings allowed the visitors to bring in 11 runs, making the score 13 to 2.

The race on the park this afternoon between Messrs. Goddard, Holbrook and Thompson's horses is expected to develop some pretty good trotting, and considerable interest is felt in the result, which will probably manifest itself in a large attendance. The band will be present to furnish music, and a bicycle race is expected to come off between the heats, with contestants from Monson and this place, making in all a good afternoon's sport. The race will be called at 3 o'clock.

Thomas Lyons and John Kennedy, employed upon the corporation works at Bondville, being fired with zeal by whiskey dispensed in accordance with law, struck for more pay, indulging in such enthusiasm toward non-strikers that warrants for assault were served upon them. Lyons was ordered to pay fine and costs of $14.85 by Judge Robinson Thursday, but the strikers' fund failing him he was committed to jail. Kennedy was discharged upon paying costs, $5.85.

Arrangements are being made by the Baptist Sunday school for an excursion to Mount Toby next Wednesday, and they are selling tickets for the round trip at 75 cents. Those who are acquainted with the beauties of this delightful Summer resort will need no further inducement to attend, while others should not miss this opportunity to visit the mountain at the low price charged. The excursionists will go up on the regular train at 8.10 a. m., and return on the train arriving here at 6.38 p. m.

Persons who visit the warerooms of Loomis Bros. are surprised to find so complete and immense a stock of furniture in a village of this size, and it is doubtful if so large an assortment of choice styles can be found anywhere in the State outside the cities. Choice parlor suits, chamber sets and other house furniture are there in abundant variety, with a large assortment of the popular willow chairs and other comfortable furniture, which their low rent enables them to sell at a small margin of profit.

Michael McAuliffe and Matthew Hurley, two Thorndike boys 11 and 12 years old respectively, were brought before the district court Tuesday for robbing the cash drawer in Clark & Hastings's market. They were turned over to Agent Lewis, of the Board of Health, Lunacy and Charity, and were allowed to return home on their good behavior, after a sharp lecture. Cyrus Day, who lives near Colton Hollow, was before the court the same day for an assault on Ann Poro, but was discharged for lack of evidence.

The New London Northern Railroad runs an excursion train from Brattleboro to New London to-day (Saturday), the fare for the round trip from Brattleboro being $2, from Amherst $1.75, Belchertown $1.65, Three Rivers $1.55, Palmer and Monson $1.50. The train leaves this station at 8.22 a. m., reaching New London at 11.30, in season to reach Osprey Beach in time for a shore dinner, and giving opportunity to visit the different shore resorts around New London. The return train will leave New London at 6.05 p. m.

There are occasional hints of the possible erection of a union depot in this village, to take the place of the present depots of the Boston & Albany and New London Northern roads. The railroad authorities are reticent on the subject, but it is undoubtedly true that the matter has been under consideration by them, and that they feel the need of a union station. Large bodies move slowly, however, and it is doubtful whether anything will be done this year. It must come in time, though, and the sooner it is done the better will the people be suited.

Burglars were abroad in the village in the small hours of Wednesday morning, and the tracks left behind them indicate that they were no green hands at the business. Soon after midnight a guest at the Nassowanno House, whose room was over the dining hall, heard persons putting a ladder up to the dining-room window, and got up to see what it meant, but in doing so made some noise which was heard outside and the men fled. After this, it is supposed, they returned and pried open the window in the rear of the post office, and ransacked the cash drawer, getting perhaps $10 in small change and mutilated currency. They then went into Hitchcock's drug store, in the adjoining room, and moving the safe behind the desk, where they could not be seen from the street, drilled a hole in the door and ripped off the outside plate, which gave them access to the lock, enabling them to remove the rest of the door with little difficulty. They removed all the valuables from the safe, consisting of about $150 worth of gold pens and pencils, something over $150 in cash and about $150 in checks, on which payment has been stopped. The cash and checks were in the iron money box, which they took out and carried away with them. They seem to have intended entering two or three houses, as they were heard at Dr. Downing's, J. F. Holbrook's, and one or two other places, but were apparently frightened away. They then went to J. S. Holden's barn, harnessed his horse, and hitched him into Marchant & Brigham's business wagon, which was standing in David Knox's shed, and took their departure. As soon as the robbery was discovered notices were sent out in every direction, but no trace of the thieves has been discovered, and they will probably never be heard from. A Springfield man found the horse in his pasture during the day, and horse and wagon were recovered by Mr. Holden Thursday. Mr. Hitchcock's loss was unfortunately larger than it would have been had he not accommodated a friend with a check for $75 the evening before, putting the money for it in the safe.
